BRIDEWELL BURIAL-GROUND.—At a recent meeting of the City Commissioners of Sewers Dr. Letheby, the medical officer of health, called attention to an application which was then making by the lessee of the property to build over the burial-ground behind Bridewell Hospital in New Bridge Street, Blackfriars, which for more than 250 years has been used as the parish burial-ground for the precincts. Dr. Letheby stated that the inhabitants of one of the neighbouring courts had been decimated with fever since the ground had been disturbed, and that there would be great danger to [illegible] consequence probably of this report the Gazette of Tuesday last contains an order in Council directing "that the whole of the rubbish, building materials, &c., which have been deposited in the burial-ground of the precinct of Bridewell, Blackfriars, be completely removed under suitable supervision, care being taken not to disturb or damage the head or foot stones or tombs; that the whole surface of the ground be levelled with the exception of the tombs and gravestones, and be covered with a layer of fresh earth of the thickness of at least a foot; also that the surface be sowed with grass seed, and the vegetation be maintained in a proper state, and the surface never disturbed."

Polytechnic Institution.—A public meeting was held a few days since at Willis's Rooms, to consider the propriety of founding a company to continue the advantages which the Polytechnic Institution has conferred upon science and education. The Earl of Shaftesbury occupied the chair. The report stated that as the old company had expended the whole of their capital of 35,488*l.* on the building and plant, they were unable to maintain their position when called upon to defray the legal consequences of the accident which occurred on the 3d January last. It therefore became necessary to sell off their plant and wind up their affairs. However, to prevent an occurrence which would entail the loss of those advantages which the Polytechnic Institution had hitherto afforded the public, it became desirable to organise a new company, under the Limited Liability Act, to buy up the concern and continue the lectures, &c. Looking to the receipts of the old company, there was every reason to think that the returns would amply remunerate those who would embark their money in the undertaking, especially as, instead of a capital of 35,000*l.*, the capital of the new company would be only 20,000*l.*, with 14,000*l.* called up. In the first place, there would be a reduction in the amount of rent to the extent of 392*l.* per annum, and, exclusive of diving-bell fees and the fees for other extraordinary entertainments, it was calculated that, after paying all expenses, there would be a surplus of 830*l.* upon the year, equivalent to a dividend of 6 per cent. It was also arranged that the shareholders should have the right of free admission to the lectures, &c. After an address from the chairman in the spirit of this report, it was moved by Mr. R. Hanbury, seconded by Mr. A. Haldane, that it was expedient that a public institution like the Polytechnic should exist and be maintained in the metropolis. The meeting was also addressed by Lord Raynham, Mr. Joseph Payne, Mr. Harwood, Mr. S. Gurney, M.P., &c., and a committee was appointed to carry out the views of the meeting. It is stated that 429 shares of 10*l.* each have already been taken, and donations received to the extent of 345*l.*

Chelsea Hospital.—A graceful tribute has recently been paid by the Queen to the memory of the officers and crew who perished in the Birkenhead troop-ship. Her Majesty, desirous of recording her admiration of the heroic conduct and discipline shown on board that vessel, has caused a tablet to be placed on the colonnade at Chelsea Hospital in commemoration of the event. A tablet has also been erected by command of her Majesty to the memory of Lieut.-Colonel Willoughby Moore, who perished in the Europa.

Destruction of Walton Bridge.—On Thursday the 11th at half-past 5 in the morning, the bridge leading from Walton to Halliford was observed to be cracking across the highway of the bridge over the centre arch, and the crack kept increasing so much as to allow parts to fall into the river, and so it remained dropping bit by bit until 12 o'clock, when the arch fell with a violent crash into the bed of river. In a short time after the other arch fell also with the same violence, without injury to any person or property. The noise, which was heard a considerable distance from the bridge, was like an explosion. This bridge was built in 1750, and consequently is 109 years old. There is now only communication by boards across the river. The bridge belongs to a private person, and is rented by the toll-collector.

Murder and Suicide at Ball's Pond.—On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Wakley resumed and concluded an adjourned inquest on the body of Miss Elizabeth Freshfield, daughter of the Mayor of Harwich, who died on the 7th inst. under very painful circumstances. It appeared from the evidence that the deceased lady and a young medical man called Clement John Carnell took apartments in the name of Mr. and Mrs. Webster at No. 65, Mildmay Terrace on the 1st inst., and that on the morning of the Sunday following she died in the presence of two medical men from the effects of frightful lacerations, produced by instruments which had been used in an attempt to procure abortion. On the fact of her death being communicated to her supposed husband, the unfortunate man rushed out into the garden, and, after groaning and running about in a frantic manner, cut his throat with a razor, and fell dead in the presence of the landlord, who in vain endeavoured to prevent him from committing suicide. The inquest was opened last week on the bodies of both persons, and in the case of the young man a verdict was returned that he destroyed himself while in a state of temporary insanity. In the case of Miss Freshfield the inquiry was adjourned for the purpose, if possible, of discovering the instruments which had caused her death. The search instituted was however ineffectual; and on Wednesday, after hearing some letters read which proved that the deceased lady had been taking medicine under the guidance of Carnell, the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against him.

weekly return states that the deaths in the week ended Saturday, August 13, were 1296. In the corresponding weeks of the 10 years 1849-58 the average number was 1241; which, if raised in proportion to the increase of population, will become 1365. The present return is therefore 69 below the calculated average, but as two of the weeks in 1849 and 1854 on which the calculation is based were weeks in which cholera was epidemic, the return shows that the public health is far from being in a satisfactory condition. During the week the births of 907 boys and 855 girls, in all 1762 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1500.

Bath.—At the Wells assizes last week Lieut.-Colonel John Alexander Forbes, formerly of the 93d Highlanders, was called upon to surrender and take his trial on a charge of sending an obscene letter to Miss Lucy Adelaide Fenton of this city. The colonel did not appear, and his recognisances, and those of his surety (Mr. Frederick Morris, of Bath), of 100*l.* each, were ordered to be estreated. On the application of the prosecution, a warrant was granted for the apprehension of Colonel Forbes; and Mr. Justice Crompton said that the libel was not only degrading to an officer and a gentleman, but to a human being, and that magistrates should be extremely particular in admitting to bail persons charged with so atrocious an offence, and should take care to have such bail as would ensure the appearance of the party charged. It is said that the accused has gone to France. The Bath police have offered a reward of 50*l.* for his apprehension.

Carlisle.—The Archæological Institute has just held its annual congress in this city. The papers read were long and interesting, including one by Mr. Cory on the churches of Cumberland, a lecture by Mr. Newton on the discoveries at Boudroum, a paper by Mr. Hugh M'Kie on ancient remains discovered in the sewers of Carlisle, one on Holme Cultram Abbey by Rev. J. Simpson, and several others too numerous to be specified. Excursions were made by the archæologists to Aydon Castle, near Carbridge; to Corby Castle, the seat of Mr. P. H. Howard, who entertained the company with old English hospitality; and to Brougham Hall, near Penrith.

Cheltenham.—The 12th day's sale of Lord Northwick's collection on Friday comprised the finest collection of our modern artists ever offered for public competition in a single day, and the produce of the sale exceeded 16,500*l.*, making the total receipts of the 12 days, 67,300*l.* On Tuesday the sale of the Camei and Intagli, rings, bronzes, and works of art commenced; the amount of the day's sale being 1036*l.* On Wednesday the sale of gems and bronzes was continued, the day's sale realising 910*l.* On Thursday the sale of the very valuable pictures now adorning the walls of the principal gallery commenced, and as usual excited a great interest, the day's sale realising 5300*l.*—The Toronto Leader gives the following account of Dr. Humphreys, who abandoned his wife and family at Cheltenham, and ran away from his creditors to Canada, but it is in error in calling him "reverend," as he was not in orders:—

"When the doctor arrived here he made application to a gentleman high in position in the educational institutions of the country for a tutorship, but none was vacant; and, whether the person applied to had been previously acquainted with the doctor or not we are not aware; but, after some conversation between them, the whole story of Dr Humphreys's flight and his seduction of a confiding wife was revealed. A correspondence ensued, in which the lady (Mrs Cummings) took part, declaring in a true romantic spirit her attachment to her new 'affinity,' and relating in tender strains the many sad and heartrending days she had spent before her wishes in this respect were consummated. She loved him, she affirmed, as she had never loved another, and nothing but death should part them. On Thursday morning, Sergeant Major Ferris, who had been employed in watching the parties implicated in this affair, having reason to believe they would visit the normal school during the day, to witness the model school examinations, accompanied by two or three persons, came with Mr. Cock, a cousin of Mrs Cummings, who arrived here from England not many days since; the latter took the precaution to retire into a private room in the building, lest he might be seen by Humphreys. But the sergeant-major took up his station near the main entrance to the building, with a photographic likeness of the reverend delinquent in his hand, and waited there till nearly 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when he descried a person resembling the photograph enter the ground. Dr Humphreys, for it was he, walked into the building, and having looked around a little, took his seat quite comfortably in the theatre, where the prizes were being distributed. Sergeant-Major Ferris then communicated with Mr Cock and the other persons in waiting, and two of them went forward into the theatre at once, and served Humphreys with citations from the High Court of Divorce, England. Humphreys' dismay at this unexpected turn of affairs may be more easily imagined than described. There was nothing for it, however, but to submit; and as soon as he recovered his equanimity he left the building with the parties coming in search of him, and proceeded with them to his lodgings, Mutual Street, where he occupies two rooms. Here the lady was confronted with her paramour by Mr. Cock, her relative, and was also served with a citation from the English Divorce Court. In the course of the same evening the man watching Humphreys and Mrs. Cummings saw them take a cab and drive to the Rossin House. Fearing they proposed leaving town, Sergeant-Major Ferris was requested to follow them in another cab, and he did so. They drove round the suburbs of the city for about an hour and a half, followed at a cautious distance by the sergeant-major, but ultimately returned to their present lodgings, Mutual Street, without making any attempt at escape. Mr. Cock had, it is said, several interviews with Mrs Cummings, in order to induce her to leave her seducer, and return to her friends in England. But her determination is said to be fixed—that nothing shall induce her to return to them again. The story goes that some portion of the church-going public in this city had quite a narrow escape from hearing

Dover.—The fortifications of Dover are about to be enlarged, and the estimated cost of the works is 150,000*l.* The walls round the magazine inside and outside, will be raised many feet, and the ditches will be lowered, which on the seaward side will be covered by a large bastion for officers' quarters on the top of which will be a battery, heavily armed with [illegible] guns. In the centre of the citadel will be a second tower. Detachments of the second brigade of garrison artillery have recently been forwarded from the brigade station to man the martello towers along the coast from Dover to Hastings, and several of the towers have been mounted with new siege guns from Woolwich Arsenal.

Exeter.—The Dean and Chapter of Exeter have appropriated the nave of the cathedral for afternoon service on Sundays. A vast area is thus obtained for the congregation, and on every Sunday there has been an overwhelming attendance. Chairs take the place of pews, and the sight which the nave presents when the immense congregation are seated is very striking. Rich and poor sit side by side, no seats being reserved for any particular class, and all alike hear "the Word." Full choral service is performed, and the sermon is preached by one of the cathedral dignitaries. The entire cost of fitting up the nave was borne by one member of the Chapter—the Rev. Chancellor Harington.

Faversham.—On Thursday morning another explosion took place at Messrs. Hall's gunpowder mills, making the third which has occurred recently at these works. The "green charge" house was blown up, but as the workmen were not on the premises at the time, no lives were lost.

Lewes.—In addition to the 50*l.* offered by the magistrates to any person who may give such information as will lead to the apprehension of the murderers of Mr. Richard Brangbton in a field at Hamsells, on the 6th inst., Government has offered a reward of 100*l.* and a free pardon to any accomplice, not being the person who actually inflicted the blows which caused death. On Monday, two men, named Bowyer, cloth dresser, and William Ferrett, waterman, were apprehended at Middlesborough by the police, and brought to Leeds on suspicion. They admitted that they left Leeds on the Sunday after the murder, and also that they were somewhere near the spot about the time when the crime must have been committed. At their lodgings were found two newly-washed shirts wrapped up in a white handkerchief, and on the handkerchief were the marks of three newly-washed blood spots. The witnesses being unable to identify either of them, the magistrates discharged them and paid their fares back again to Middlesborough. Several other men have been taken to the police-office on suspicion of being in the vicinity of the murder, but none of them can be identified, and no clue has yet been obtained to the perpetrators of the crime. The jury at the inquest have returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown.

Liverpool.—On Friday the borough coroner was engaged in investigating a case relative to the death of a seaman named Peter Antonio, belonging to the American ship Conqueror. The deceased had been beaten severely by the mate and carpenter while the vessel was at sea, and died in the hospital on the previous Wednesday after having been there for three days. The surgeon's evidence left the cause of death open to some doubt, and an objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the court. The coroner concurred in the opinion that the parties implicated in any verdict which might be returned could not be brought before an English court of justice, and advised the jury to find an open verdict, which was done.

Luton.—On Thursday Joseph Castle was examined before the county magistrates for this district, charged with the murder of his wife under the circumstances noticed in our last Number. He declined to say anything in his defence, and was committed for trial at the Bedfordshire assizes.

Manchester.—On Saturday the 6th inst. about 4000 persons assembled in the Free Trade Hall to witness the presentation to the Countess of Shaftesbury of an address and a fine marble bust of the noble earl her husband, as testimonials of the gratitude of factory operatives for his lordship's advocacy of the Ten Hours Act. Mr. Jones, a factory worker, presided, and said he felt rejoiced, in common with thousands of others, that they could speak from actual experience of the benefits of their past labours in the cause of short-time working. He believed very few employers would like to return to the long-hour system, and that no spirit of hostility was kept up between masters and men on this important question. Their interests were, in fact, identical. Such evils as remained they hoped to remedy without appeals to Parliament, but, if need were, the factory workers would be as prepared as ever they were to enter the field, relying that their noble champion would again lead them on to victory. Mr. Stanley, another factory worker, read the address, which was handed to the Countess by four young workwomen, and the bust was uncovered amid protracted cheering. The Countess of Shaftesbury read the following reply:—

"My good friends, it will not require many words from me to express the deep and heartfelt gratitude with which I receive the testimonial of your respect and affection. I prize it highly, as coming from a large body of my countrymen whose character for intelligence and morality qualifies them to estimate at their true value any efforts made for the welfare of the community. You will believe, I am sure, that, having watched the progress of your exertions with lively interest, I warmly rejoiced in your success, and it is my fervent prayer to God that it may be blessed [illegible]

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On Monday evening Capt. Hall ascended in a balloon from the cricket ground in this town, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The ascent took place at 10 minutes to 7, and at a quarter past that hour the balloon was seen to descend rapidly in the neighbourhood of Bolden, about seven miles from Newcastle, where it fell in a clover field. The grappling irons, however, did not hold the ground, and, some of the ballast having upset, the balloon suddenly rose again, and, Capt. Hall being about to alight from the car at the time, his feet were caught in the ropes, and he was whirled suddenly into the air. For a moment he hung with his head downwards, when the rope got disentangled, and he fell a distance of 120 feet. A farmer and his son who were in a field close by went to his assistance, and found him sensible, but he soon after became unconscious. He was removed to Scots House, the residence of Mr. H. L. Pattison, where he was immediately attended by a surgeon, who found that his spine was seriously injured, and that there are but slight hopes of his recovery. After Capt. Hall was thrown out the balloon ascended a great height, and was last seen drifting out to the German ocean. A little dog belonging to the aëronaut was taken up in the car.

NORWICH.—A portion of the extensive landed estates of the late Earl of Orford has recently been sold by auction. The property, which is situated in Twetshall, Saxthorpe, Briston, Coapusty, Burnham, and one or two other villages in Norfolk, was offered in 81 lots, and of these only nine were bought in. The entire amount realised, deducting the lots bought in, was 147,939*l*. The general price obtained for the land ranged between 30*l*. and 40*l*. per acre; but one parcel of 30 acres sold for 2110*l*., and a farm of 244 acres, with buildings, for 12,100*l*.

POOLE.—A third attempt was made last week by order of the Court of Chancery, under the proceedings for winding up the London and Eastern Banking Company, to sell by auction the freehold property lately belonging to Colonel Waugh, being the well known Branksea Island Castle and estate, of about 760 acres, in the harbour of Poole, Dorset, with the castle, dwelling houses, farm buildings, freshwater lakes, pottery and other works, clay and other minerals. The sum of 45,500*l*. was the highest bid made, and as the Court of Chancery had fixed the reserve price at 50,000*l*. no sale could be effected. The auctioneer stated that at a former sale 70,000*l*. had been bonâ fide bid, but they then wanted 100,000*l*.

ROCHDALE.—The return of Mr. Cobden as M.P. for this borough was celebrated on Wednesday evening by a banquet, at which upwards of 2000 persons were present. The proceedings took place in a tent specially erected for the occasion on the outskirts of the town. The chair was taken by the Mayor, and among the gentlemen on the platform were—Mr. Bright, M.P., Mr. Hadfield, M.P., Mr. Crossley, M.P., Mr. Salt, M.P., Mr. Leatham, M.P., Mr. Bazley, M.P., Mr. Sharman Crawford, Mr. George Wilson, &c. After a few introductory remarks from the Chairman, a resolution was passed welcoming Mr. Cobden as the representative of Rochdale, and expressing high gratification at his return to Parliament. Mr. Cobden then rose amidst deafening acclamations, and spoke to the following effect:—

"He had coveted the honour of representing the borough of Rochdale beyond all other constituencies in the empire, and he thanked them sincerely and heartily for electing him as their member at a time when he was nearly 4000 miles away from England. It was moreover a still greater honour when he considered the corruption that existed at the last election. He would speak upon this subject for a moment whilst the matter was still fresh in the memory of the country; and although the number of election petitions had been very great, he believed that it by no means represented the number of corrupt constituencies. He ventured to assert that the House of Commons was not very desirous of putting down these evil practices. The expense of an election petition was so enormous that it was often impossible to obtain redress of the grievance. If the House of Commons wanted to put down these proceedings they could manage it. They should enable an inquiry to be made at a much less cost, and they should pass a law which would make the act of bribery or corruption a criminal proceeding, so that the Attorney-General could institute an action against any person guilty of such acts. The House of Commons was not sincere in its pretence to put down corruption; but it had another foolish and expensive practice which it ought to put down. He alluded to the system of issuing commissions of inquiry. He had lately voted against the commission to inquire into the corrupt practices at Gloucester, and he did this not because he wished to shield the guilty persons concerned in those practices, but because he believed that such inquiries were utterly futile, were very expensive, and never obtained any good result. The adoption of the ballot would have a most important influence in repressing those electoral excesses, as was proved by the evidence afforded by the example of the United States, where it had long been in active operation. Mr. Randall, an American statesman of reputation, had assured him that in the course of 50 years he had never known a vote in Philadelphia bought or sold. The ballot prevented buying and selling, for nobody would buy a vote when he could never learn whether he had obtained money's worth for the sum expended. Mr. Cobden then turned to the subject of the late war in Italy. He congratulated them on the neutrality which England had been able to maintain. She had maintained her dignity, and was as much to be feared on the Continent of Europe as before the war. As regarded the Congress that was to be held by the great Continental Powers, he believed that the only condition which could justify England in entering that Congress would be that Italy should be allowed to settle her own form of government without intervention, by force of arms, from Austria, Russia, France, or any other Power whatever. Having travelled in Italy, he could state from his own personal knowledge that the Tuscans and the people of the Bolognese Legations had recently elected the most eminent men in those countries as their representatives. They had sent to their new assemblies men who ranked in central Italy as high as Lord Derby or Lord Lansdowne did in England. We had a near interest in foreign affairs, for the annual budget was presented last night, and it showed that we were paying 25 millions a year for the expenses of our foreign policy. The chief fear which was continually recurring in England was that we were liable to an invasion from France, and the expenditure arising from this unnatural fear was enormous. Now, he ventured to say that the increased armaments, naval and military, of France, during the last 10 years, were quite as much provoked by the additions made to the English armaments as the contrary. The English dread of a French invasion was a laughing-stock of the Americans. They called it the 'English craze,' and it was impossible to describe the pity and scorn with which the subject was always referred to by the people of the United States. The press was chiefly to blame for this foolish cry, and he advised his audience to distrust the opinions of newspaper writers. What had been the consequence of 'the panic cry?' Why, the expenditure had been increased by four or five millions, and he unhesitatingly asserted that the country was now not one whit safer than before. Suppose three, four, or five millions had been devoted to the reduction of the customs duties and the extension of our trade with France, we should have done far more to preserve peace with that country than our so-called defensive preparations; our preparations could not terrify France, but they might provoke her. He then alluded to the offer which was made to him to join the Palmerston Cabinet. He was by no means indifferent to the honour intended him, though he had been unable to accept it. He thought it was his duty to go direct to Lord Palmerston without communicating with any other person, and in the course of the conversation with his lordship he had referred to his strong convictions on the subject of Lord Palmerston's foreign policy, and suggested that, holding these views, he could not consistently take part in a Cabinet of which his lordship was the head. It was not a question of personal feeling. He had not now, he never had, any feeling of personal hostility to Lord Palmerston. He had refused to accept the offer because of the strong conviction to which he had referred, and he claimed no merit for the course he had taken."—Speeches were afterwards delivered by Messrs. Crawford, Crossley, and Bright, and resolutions relating to Parliamentary reform were passed. Mr. Bright in the course of his address drew attention to the county constituencies, repeating his previous statements as to the servile dependence of the electors on the landowners, and said that if he was right in supposing that there were men in the present Cabinet who were not prepared to go as far on the path of Reform as Lord John Russell, he would warn those Ministers, if any such there were, that if they gave the country a measure short of that scheme they would cover their Cabinet with a taint which it could never survive.

On Thursday evening Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright again addressed a large concourse of electors and non-electors of Rochdale on the subject of Parliamentary Reform. The meeting was held in the pavilion in which the soirée took place on the previous evening, and there could not have been fewer than between 3000 and 4000 persons present.

SHEFFIELD.—On the morning of the 3d inst. a burglary of a singular and daring character was committed at Wortley Hall, the seat of Lord Wharncliffe. His lordship has been entertaining a large shooting party at the Hall, including, with guests and attendants, about 70 persons. Among his company was Major Frazer, who retired to rest early on the above morning, leaving the window of his bedroom, which is on the ground-floor, open to admit air. On awaking about 8 o'clock next morning he found that the room had been entered, and that a 30*l*. bank-note, an Indian dressing-gown, and the wearing apparel which he had thrown off, had been stolen. A case of jewels, some silver candlesticks, and a double-barrelled gun, which was in the room, were left untouched. On examination he discovered that the entry had been made through the bedroom window, which is about 7 feet from the ground, and which had been more easily gained by means of a ledge between the ground and the window. Some of the articles had been removed from close beside the bed where the Major was sleeping. There is little doubt that the robbery was effected by some one well acquainted with the premises, but that it was not performed by an adept is inferred from the fact of its not being more extensive, as the Major's room not being locked, the thief might have found easy access to other parts of the house. The burglar had, previous to the robbery, as appeared from the prints of naked feet, perambulated the grounds and entered one of the greenhouses, from which he had brought several geraniums, which had been thrown down under the Major's window. A man called Worrah, a butcher, of Howbrook, has been apprehended with some of the stolen property in his possession, and has been committed for trial.

SHIELDS.—On Friday night John W. Moody, second mate of the American ship Mary, was captured at Sunderland, and brought up at the North Shields Police-court on Saturday morning, charged with a murderous assault on Daniel Witham, one of the crew, while lying in the Northumberland Dock in the Tyne. The evidence proved that the prisoner, after dragging the man out of his berth by the hair of his head, struck him to the ground by a blow on the head with an iron bar which fractured his skull. He had previously on the voyage knocked him down with a knuckle-duster. The master and chief mate refused to obtain surgical assistance for the wounded man, but one of the crew, a sailor called Black, went ashore and gave information to the police, by whom a surgeon was immediately sent on board. The surgeon found the man in a most dangerous state, and he died on Tuesday night from the effects of his injuries. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Moody, and at the same time expressed their opinion that the conduct of the master and chief mate in allowing deceased to remain so long without a surgeon was as discreditable to them as the conduct of the sailor Black was creditable to him.—On Sunday, Henry Whitfield, steam-boat man, residing in Milburn Place, was taken into custody on a charge of attempting to murder his wife. She is a drunken woman; and on going into the house, about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and finding her in that condition, the prisoner pulled out a large Spanish knife and stabbed her in the neck. The wound is serious, but is not expected to be fatal.

carriages, platforms, &c., cases of powder, shot, and shell, were landed at North Shields last week for the defences at Tynemouth, which are rapidly approaching completion. The Tynemouth Volunteer Artillery Corps has been recognised by the Government, and will be immediately enrolled. They will be trained to work the large guns at Tynemouth and Clifford's Fort, which comprise the defences of the Tyne. The Northumberland Artillery Militia are now stationed at Tynemouth garrison, and the whole of the defences of the south-eastern coast of the county are now intrusted to Northumberland men.

WESTBROMWICH.—William Worsey, who was convicted at the last Assizes of the murder of his wife, has been reprieved during her Majesty's pleasure. There is reason to believe that he had no intention to kill his wife, and that although in the quarrel with his he snatched up a knife from the breakfast table and threw it at her with fatal effect, there was an entire absence of premeditation. It is understood that he will be transported for life.

Ireland.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC SYNOD.—The ultramontane journals of Saturday seem to have been instructed to prepare the public mind for a more than ordinarily strong address to the Catholics of Ireland from the Papal bishops, whose sitting has just terminated. The Nation intimates that they have been unanimous throughout their deliberations on the propriety of demanding from the Government what they call 'a Roman Catholic education aided by the State,' and that a deputation has been appointed to submit a programme of the ultramontane policy to the Chief Secretary for Ireland. It is also said that another Council of the Prelates is to be held next month to demand a charter for the "Catholic University," and probably an endowment also. In recounting the latest ultramontane objections to the national system of education in Ireland, the Nation complains that the pupils are taught to describe themselves as "English" children, and says that "the schools which taught each Irish youth to bless God for making him 'a happy English child,' would soon achieve that millennium of British history, Ireland denationalised."

THE LATE MURDER IN TIPPERARY.—Mr. Grey, J.P., the agent of the Earl of Derby in Tipperary, has offered a reward of 200*l*. for the conviction of the persons engaged in the assassination of James Crowe, a tenant on his lordship's estate at Doone. The murder was perpetrated on the 2d inst., and there are strong grounds for believing that it was done with the knowledge of many residents of the locality, who pretend utter ignorance of the persons concerned. The Lord-Lieutenant has also offered a reward of 100*l*. for such information as shall lead to the arrest of the assassins.

Scotland.

ALLEGED MURDER ON THE HIGH SEAS.—On Saturday Capt. Pember the master, and George Alma chief mate of the American ship John Fyfe, from New York, were apprehended on the charge of shooting one of the crew during the voyage. It appears that in a quarrel which took place among the crew on the 4th inst., a seaman had assaulted another seaman and cut open his head. The officers of the ship interfered, and were proceeding to place the offender in irons when he resisted, and set the officers at defiance, upon which the captain is said to have immediately shot him with a revolver. The wounded man only survived till the evening, and was then thrown into the sea. The prisoners were remanded, but on Tuesday, on the advice of Crown counsel, who had been consulted in reference to disputed jurisdiction, the sheriff ordered them to be discharged.

THE CRINAN CANAL.—On the 29th ult. the Crinan canal was re-opened for traffic from the second central chain of locks to Loch Crinan, a distance of four miles. It is expected that the four miles from Airdrishaig to the first central chain of locks will soon be available for traffic, pending which the service is performed by omnibuses.

Railways.

ACCIDENT ON THE TILBURY AND SOUTHEND.—On Wednesday evening as the train from Thames Haven with passengers from the Margate steam-boat was passing round the curve near the Tilbury Station, connecting the London portion of the line with that to Southend, the engine ran off the rails, and slid obliquely across the line, dragging the tender, guard's break-van, and three of the carriages with it, the coupling connecting the fourth carriage breaking. The engine partly buried itself in a field adjoining, while the three carriages turned on their sides and were much shattered. Several passengers were severely injured, some of whom were left behind under medical care, and others brought up to the hospital.

GREAT WESTERN.—At the half-yearly meeting of this company a dividend at the rate of 2 per cent per annum was declared, leaving 13,883*l*. to be carried forward. From the revival of trade an increase has taken place in the receipts of 71,081*l*. The working expenses, with the exception of maintenance of way and works, have diminished, and the additional charge in this case arises chiefly from the substitution of stone for timber structures, and the new plan adopted for relaying the permanent way. An arrangement [illegible] will be brought in direct communication with the Great Western system. An agreement for the transfer of the Birkenhead line to the London and North-Western and Great Western was unanimously agreed to.

METROPOLITAN.—At a meeting of this company it was stated that the Corporation of London have taken shares in the undertaking to the amount of 200,000*l.*, and that six-sevenths of the capital have been secured. A deviation has been adopted from the original plan, and the proposed extension to the Post Office is abandoned. The total capital will be 850,000*l.* in shares, and 280,000*l.* in loans.

VICTORIA STATION AND PIMLICO.—The directors of this company announce that satisfactory progress has been made in the works, and express confidence that the line will be ready for traffic by June, 1860. An arrangement has been entered into with the Brighton, under which a 5 per cent. guarantee will be secured.

EAST KENT.—The title of this company has been changed to that of the London, Chatham, and Dover.

Law.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—The Richmond Poisoning Case.—The trial of De Smethurst for the murder of Miss Isabella Banks by slow poisoning at Richmond, which was brought to an abrupt termination at the last Sessions in consequence of the sudden illness of a juryman, was resumed on Monday before the Lord Chief Baron. The details of this case are already so well known to our readers that it is unnecessary to repeat them in detail, or to give a lengthened summary of a trial which has extended over five days. The evidence for the prosecution went to prove that the prisoner, though already a married man, had deliberately inveigled the deceased lady into his power by an act of bigamy, and had then destroyed her life by administering small doses of poison, his object being to possess himself of her fortune, which amounted to about 1800*l.* It was also shown that the prisoner was a man of considerable chemical and medical skill, well acquainted with the nature of different poisons, and that he had made use of this knowledge to baffle, to a considerable extent, the tests which were made use of by scientific men to discover the presence of poison. It was admitted that no poison was found in the body of deceased, though a certain quantity of arsenic was found in one of the evacuations; and Dr. Taylor admitted that the evidence he had at first given respecting the presence of arsenic in the body was founded on a mistake corrected with one of his tests which had been deferred by the presence of chloride of potass. The medical men however who were called for the prosecution all agreed that the symptoms could only have been produced by the administration of poison in small doses and at frequent intervals; and it was suggested that the chloride of potass discovered in the body, and a bottle of which was found in the prisoner's possession, had been administered at the same time to remove all trace of the poison. For the defence several chemists, apothecaries, and learned medical writers were called to show that the symptoms were not those of poisoning, but were attributable to the pregnancy of deceased; but one of them admitted that, after the fact of a certain quantity of arsenic being found in one of the evacuations of deceased, he should have expected that a large quantity of that poison had been in the body. On Thursday afternoon the Lord Chief Baron commenced his summing up, and dwelt with much force on the fact that the prisoner had induced this lady to go through the ceremony of marriage though his first wife was still living, and yet that the unfortunate lady had signed the will in her maiden name and allowed herself to be degraded by being described in it as a spinster. He also called attention to the fact that at the very period when this unhappy woman was lying in agony and misery on her deathbed, and when, according to the prisoner's own statement, she was in such a condition as not to be able to bear the excitement of seeing her own sister, he took into her bedroom, on a Sunday, an entire stranger, an attorney, and there a will prepared by himself was read over to the unhappy woman, who executed it under the circumstances of degradation to which he had alluded. He could not contemplate this scene of suffering and privation, when this poor dying creature had all her relatives excluded from her, and an attorney was thrust into her presence, and she was allowed to pass into the other world without one word of religious consolation, as if she had been a beggar and an unbeliever in a heathen land. With regard to the pecuniary motive for the death of the deceased it had been urged that the prisoner had an interest in keeping her alive, inasmuch as he would be entitled to receive the interest on 5000*l.*—150*l.* a year—during her lifetime; but, on the other hand, it should not be forgotten that if the will of deceased were acted upon he would at once come into possession of 1750*l.* or 1800*l.*, which would have amounted to 12 years' purchase of the dividend. After some further remarks on other portions of the case, his lordship deferred the conclusion of his charge to the next morning, and the Court again adjourned. At the sitting of the Court yesterday the Lord Chief Baron resumed and concluded his summing up, calling the attention of the jury to the fact that the prisoner had refused to have a nurse on the plea that he could not afford it, and Miss Banks had an income of 220*l.* a year, and he had himself money in the bank. He called attention also to the extraordinary expression of the prisoner to the sister of the deceased, that if she was quiet it would be "all right," and to the statement he had told when he asked her to witness the will, that it was some Chancery paper to be signed. He then referred to the fact that deceased was always sick and ill after receiving food and medicine from the prisoner, and that these symptoms ceased as soon as he was arrested and she received her food from other hands. As to the absence of poison from the house, it was to be remembered that after the magistrates allowed him to go at large on bail, he was in the house by himself on the Monday night, and had therefore an opportunity of making way with it. His lordship then referred to the medical evidence, and said that the whole of the medical men who had been examined, who were all old men of experience in their profession, concurred in expressing the opinion that the symptoms exhibited by this unhappy lady were unlike those of any known disease, and were more ascribable to the administration of an irritant poison than to any natural disorder. His lordship concluded at 10 minutes to 4 o'clock, having occupied in his summing up eight hours and a half. The jury then retired, and after an absence of 50 minutes, returned a verdict of Guilty. The Judge having put on the black cap, the prisoner addressed the Court in a rambling strain for some minutes. He stated that he was entirely innocent of the charge, that the marriage between deceased and himself had been publicly ratified on the death of his father, who was now 74 years of age. As to the money, he had no motive for committing murder to obtain it, for the love of deceased towards him was so great that she would at any time have made it over to him. He [illegible] had kept the sister from her, and concluded [illegible] on the medical part of the case, and some [illegible] of the gentlemen at Richmond, [illegible] during the trial. The Lord [illegible] and he thought it would be difficult for any one to consider the evidence without coming to the same conclusion. His lordship then passed sentence of Death in the usual form, ordering the execution of the judgment to the sheriff of Surrey, in which county the offence was committed. The prisoner exclaimed—"I declare that Dr. Jamieson is my murderer. I declare before God that I am innocent." The prisoner was then removed from the dock, and conveyed to Horsemonger Lane Jail, where the execution will take place on Monday fortnight. The court was [illegible] crowded, and thousands of persons had congregated outside anxious to ascertain the result.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.—Gloucester.—The Queen v. Mordaunt Rutter was tried on Saturday last at the assizes at Cirencester on Sunday the 7th inst. at Dursley. The particulars of this case appeared in our Provincial news last week, and no new circumstances were elicited at the trial except the important fact, which formed the ground of the defence, that the prisoner had for years been brutally beaten and ill-used by the deceased, and on one occasion had been turned out of doors in her night-clothes, and on another been compelled to take refuge in her stepson's bed. The prisoner's counsel availed himself of this fact to urge that the [illegible] broken open the door with a hatchet, had again attacked the prisoner in the night, and that she, alarmed for her own life, armed herself with the razor and in her own defence, struck at him in the dark, without intending to do any mortal injury. Mr. Justice Byles summed up at great length, and said that he saw no evidence to reduce the case to manslaughter. He was sensible that the observations which he had made here might tell upon the prisoner; and he deeply regretted that he could not present the case to the jury in other light. However, he was satisfied that they would discharge their duty, however painful it might be, according to their oaths. The jury after a total of seven hours found the prisoner Guilty, but recommended her to mercy on account of her husband's cruelty to her and trusted their recommendation would be taken into consideration. Mr. Justice Byles said he would forward the recommendation to the proper quarter, but he had no power to interfere. His lordship then put on the black cap and passed sentence of Death in the usual form, stating that he could not doubt, upon the evidence, that she went to her husband's bedside in the dead of night, and cut his throat with a razor, and that such a crime was murder in the most aggravated form, and that our present law was not content with calling it murder, but called it treason. Election Petition.—Two cases were tried relative to the Election at Cirencester, in one of which Henry Charles Wood was charged with having bribed and treated Admiral Talbot [illegible] voting for the Conservative candidates; and Jermyn Colbourn, Lavinia Colbourn, and Wallis Mullis were charged with having [illegible] Julia Kibblewhite and procured her [illegible] on the Liberal side. The admiral had come all the way from Cork to record his vote. He arrived only a few minutes before the close of the poll, and was preparing to leave the hustings, when the fly was stopped, and the admiral himself prevented from reaching the hustings before it was too late to vote. The declaration was [illegible] but was [illegible] of his own [illegible] to appear and [illegible] when called upon. In the other case [illegible] was Acquitted, and the two others were sentenced to be imprisoned one month in the common gaol, but Mr. Justice Byles refused to allow the costs of the prosecution, because the indictment had not included Mr. Pole, a gentleman of fortune living near Cirencester, in whose service the two male prisoners were respectively groom and gardener, and in whose carriage the [illegible] was carried away to Ashton Keynes on the night before the election. Arson.—Elizabeth Hatton, 14, servant, an interesting looking girl, only 14 years of age, was charged with setting fire to the house of her master Mr. Holder, of Painswick, on the night of Sunday, the 19th of June last. It appeared that on the evening in question the prisoner was allowed to go out to chapel, but returned early. On her return her mistress reproved her for not going to chapel, but not in an angry manner, and that was the only cause of difference which had occurred while the prisoner had been in her service. While the prosecutor and his wife, his apprentice, and children were asleep, there was a smell of fire, and on entering the kitchen it was discovered that some articles in the cupboard were on fire. Water was brought, and the fire was put out, and the family finished their supper; but while they were going to bed, a second fire was discovered in a cupboard in a bedroom, and subsequently a third was found in a cupboard under the stairs. It was elicited on cross-examination that the prisoner was subject to epileptic fits, and had several since she had been in custody. Evidence was also given that after the fires were extinguished the prisoner was seen carrying a box down stairs as if to go away, and in the box were found, secreted, some lump sugar, raisins, and nutmegs, which it was believed she had taken out of the shop of Mr. Holder, who dealt in grocery. The jury, after a few minutes' consideration, found the prisoner Guilty, but recommended her to mercy on account of her extreme youth. The prosecutor, Mrs. Holder, also joined in the same recommendation. Mr. Justice Byles said the prisoner had been convicted, on satisfactory evidence, of a very frightful crime. By the law her life was forfeited, but, under the circumstances, she would be dealt with as leniently as possible. Sentence of Death would be recorded against her, but the sentence would be commuted to a long term of imprisonment, so that she might have a course of instruction and discipline. On hearing her sentence the prisoner burst into tears and was then removed.

Obituary.

THE DOWAGER LADY CHARLOTTE SUFFIELD died on the 15th inst. at 25, Upper Grosvenor Street, in her 49th year. She was the only daughter of the second Lord Gardner by the daughter of the first Lord Carrington, and was the widow of the fourth Lord Suffield, brother of the present peer. She was for some time a lady in waiting to the Duchess of Cambridge.

GENERAL SIR JOHN SLADE, BART., G.C.B., the oldest living member of the army save one died on the 13th inst. at Mostyn's Court, in his 98th year. Had he lived but a few months longer he would have completed 80 years of military service, his commission, as cornet in the 13th Hussars, bearing date May 11, 1780, and with the exception of General John M'Kenzie, who wore the Royal uniform as far back as the 1st of January, 1778, no officer of the army can point to the same term of service. Sir John Slade became a Major General in 1809, exactly 50 years ago, and commanded a brigade of cavalry in the Peninsula in that and the preceding year, under Sir John Moore. In the subsequent Peninsular campaigns, under the Duke of Wellington, he retained his command, covering the retreat to Torres Vedras, and sharing in many cavalry affairs, as well as in the battles of Fuentes d'Onor, Salamanca, Benevente, and Busaco, for which, with Corunna, he had the gold war medal with one clasp, and the silver medal with two clasps, besides being twice honoured with the thanks of Parliament for his services. He became Colonel of the 4th Dragoon Guards in 1831. The deceased General belonged to a Somersetshire family, and was born in 1762. The baronetcy, which was conferred upon him in 1831, is inherited by his eldest surviving son, Frederick William Slade, Q.C., who is [illegible] brother of General Marcus Slade, Lieutenant-Governor of the Isle of [illegible]. The next brother is Sir Adolphus Slade, R.N., [illegible]

College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1824, and was called to the bar by the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple in 1830. He became a Queen's Counsel in 1851, and goes the Western Circuit. He for a short time represented Cambridge in the House of Commons in the Conservative interest.

MRS. PEARSON, wife of R. Pearson, Esq., formerly M.P. for Lewes, died suddenly after a dinner party on Saturday evening, in her 64th year. She was dancing on that day at a party given by General Sir Archibald Macdonald, at 68, Great Cumberland Place, which shortly after she had taken her seat at the table she appeared to be attacked with a fainting fit, and her head dropped on the shoulder of the next lady. She was removed to a sofa, where she instantly expired. The body of the deceased lady was conveyed in her own carriage to her residence in Gloucester Terrace, Bayswater, where a post mortem examination was performed. At the inquest on Tuesday the [illegible] deposed that death was caused from [illegible], and a verdict to that effect was returned.

BIRTHS.—On the 16th inst, at Curzon House, South Audley Street, Lady BURGHERSH, of a son—16th inst, at Abbot's Moss, Northwich, Cheshire, the Lady FRANCES LLOYD, of a son—11th inst Lady N[illegible] of a [illegible]—[illegible] inst, at [illegible], the Hon. METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Aug. 15.

The number of Beasts is not quite so large as on Monday last; however, trade is dull, and the quotations of that day are not exceeded. The supply of Sheep is also rather shorter. Trade is cheerful, but prices are not much higher. Lamb trade is exceedingly heavy at lower rates. Calves are rather lower. From Germany and Holland there are 1410 Beasts, 8340 Sheep, and 310 Calves; from Scotland, 100 Beasts; from Ireland, 200; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 300; and 2300 from the northern and midland counties.

Beasts, 4750; Sheep & Lambs, 29,260; Calves, 350; Pigs, 200.

THURSDAY, Aug. 18.

The supply of Beasts is rather larger than on Thursday last; however, choicest qualities are not plentiful, and make quite as much as on Monday. The number of Sheep and Lambs is smaller, but quite equal to the demand. The best descriptions met with a ready sale, but trade is dull for the other kinds. No alteration in the calf trade. Our foreign supply consists of 300 Beasts, 2750 Sheep, and 395 Calves. The number of Milch Cows is 115; and there are 400 Beasts from the northern and midland counties.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Aug. 15.

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was moderate, and met a slow sale at last Monday's prices, some quantity being left unsold towards the close. For foreign there was rather more inquiry in retail, but we cannot quote any improvement in prices. For Barley there is a fair inquiry at rather above last week's rates. Beans and Peas are unaltered in value. The Oat trade is firm at the prices of this day se'nnight. The Flour trade is steady. There were about a thousand quarters of new white Mustard Seed at market, a portion of which is sold at an advance of 1s. per qr.

FRIDAY, Aug. 19.

The weather this week has been changeable and generally overcast. Although great progress has been made with the harvest, nevertheless the quantity of straw and want of labour have considerably protracted its conclusion. We do not hear that the Wheat has suffered from the rain, but complaints of the Barley being sprouted are not uncommon. The quality of the new Wheat hitherto brought to market is, we believe, fully as good, it not better, than was expected. The Wheat trade in all the chief markets has been dull and the demand generally inactive; nevertheless holders evince great tenacity, and here we have experienced a slightly increased inquiry, particularly for the lower qualities of foreign, on which, in some instances, a slight improvement has been exacted. In the majority of markets Barley has been rather cheaper, but here and in Newcastle it has commanded rather better terms. No alteration occurred here in the value of Beans and Peas, but in Liverpool, Hull, Leith, and Glasgow they were cheaper. In Scotland Oats are quoted 6d. to 1s. per qr. lower, but not in England. The Flour trade is firm, French and Norfolk commanding rather better prices. The arrivals of grain and seed laden vessels off the coast from Southern Europe are considerable during the week. The arrivals of English Wheat and foreign Oats this week are good, of all other grain small. This morning's market was more thinly attended than for some time past. The little English Wheat on sale was taken at the extreme prices of Monday. Foreign was entirely neglected, and we scarcely heard of a sale being made. For Barley there is a good inquiry at Monday's prices. The Oat trade is quiet, and Russian qualities are rather cheaper.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Aug. 16.—We had a fair attendance of millers and dealers at our Corn Exchange this morning they acted, however, with great caution, and Wheat was not as saleable as last market day, but there is no quotable change in value. Flour met a fair inquiry at full prices; good-conditioned fully 1d. per bushel, and Oatmeal 6d. per load. Egyptian Beans were 6d. to 1s. per qr. cheaper. Peas and Barley unchanged. Weather fine.

FRIDAY, Aug. 19.—Grain market steady at Tuesday's rates; Wheat in good demand at full rates; fine Flour in better request. Beans and Oats dull. For Indian Corn there are buyers, but at very low prices. Weather fine.

News of the Week.

THE formal annexation of Tuscany to Sardinia was unanimously voted on Saturday by the National Assembly of Florence; and on the same day the National Assembly of Modena unanimously voted the forfeiture of the Austrian dynasty of Este, and the annexation of Modena to Sardinia. At Parma, after a vote by open register, which lasted from the 14th to the 21st, the people, by an all but unanimous vote, declared for the deposition of the Bourbon dynasty and the annexation of the Duchy to Sardinia under the constitutional sceptre of VICTOR EMMANUEL. A defensive league has since been concluded between the States of Central Italy, and has already been signed by the delegates of Tuscany, Modena, and the Papal Legations. The object of this league is to prevent the restoration of the late Governments, to maintain internal order, and to lay down the basis of an assimilation of institutions throughout all the States of Central Italy. Meanwhile Prince PONIATOWSKI has arrived at Florence on a mission from the French Government, the object of which is not clearly understood. It is said in some quarters that he is instructed to effect the restoration of the late dynasty in the person of the son of the late Grand Duke, or to induce the Tuscans to elect Prince NAPOLEON as their sovereign, as the only means of escaping the restoration of the House of Lorraine. In other quarters it is said that the Prince is the bearer of a letter from the young Grand Duke, in which he intimates to the Assembly that, if they will consent to his restoration, the Austrian Government will undertake to establish the nationality of Venetia on a perfectly independent footing as a bond fide member of the Italian Confederation, and will at once release her from all political and even military connection with the Austrian Empire. Accounts from Zurich inform us that the Plenipotentiaries have agreed to the conditions of the transfer of Lombardy to Sardinia, and that "the affairs of the Duchies will be treated in a direct manner by the Courts of Paris and Vienna." The Belgian Chamber of Deputies on Saturday adopted the Government project of law for the fortification of Antwerp by a majority of 15, the members being 57 to 42; but there is reason to believe that the Bill will be rejected by the Senate. It was reported in Paris on Friday that the measure has given offence to the French Government, and that a French army of observation is to be directed to the Belgian frontier under the command of Marshal NEIL.

By the overland mail from Bombay we learn that nearly 10,000 men of the late Company's European force have claimed their discharge. The EX-KING OF OUDE has been set at liberty, and though the rebellion is still considered at an end, several engagements have taken place with detached bodies of rebels whom our troops have defeated with great loss. From China we learn that the fleet had left Shanghai in advance of the Ambassadors, in order to force the passage of the Peiho in the event of any opposition being offered to their visit to Pekin.

THE COURT.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family continue at Osborne. On Friday the Queen, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold, drove out. The Prince Consort, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, and Princess Louisa rode on horseback. On Saturday morning the Princess Hohenlohe left Osborne on her return to the Continent. The Queen, Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, and Prince Arthur, accompanied the Princess to Portsmouth in the Fairy, and returned again to Osborne. Count de Lavradio, the Portuguese Minister, arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Sunday morning the Queen, Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, Prince Arthur, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, and Princess Louisa attended Divine service at Whippingham Church; the Rev. G. Prothero officiated. On Monday morning the Queen and Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, and the Princesses Alice and Helena left Osborne for Aldershott, arriving at the pavilion at half-past 1. In the afternoon the Queen and the Princesses drove in an open carriage and four to the neighbourhood of Cæsar's camp and witnessed the intrenching operations, the Prince Consort and Prince Alfred accompanying her Majesty on horseback. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party to which several of the general officers were invited. On Tuesday the Queen, Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, and the Princesses again visited the intrenched camp, and after witnessing the subsequent manœuvres of the troops, returned to Osborne. The Duke of Nemours arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Wednesday the Queen and Prince Consort drove out, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Nemours. Sir Charles Wood arrived on a visit. On Thursday morning the Duke of Nemours left Osborne. Lord Palmerston arrived on a visit to her Majesty.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the rest of the Royal family at present at Osborne will leave London for Balmoral on Monday next. Her Majesty will proceed to Edinburgh by the Great Northern Railway, the directors of which have received instructions to have a special train in readiness to leave King's Cross station at 9 P.M., so that the journey will be made by night. The Royal train will arrive at the St. Margaret's station, Edinburgh, at 10 minutes after 8 o'clock on Tuesday morning. The Queen will remain at Holyrood Palace during the day, and sleep there on Tuesday night. On Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock, her Majesty will proceed by railroad to Banchory, where the Royal carriages will be in attendance to convey her Majesty to Balmoral. Sir George Grey will be the Secretary of State in attendance upon her Majesty. It is understood that the Queen has determined to make the journey from London to Edinburgh by night on this occasion, in order to avoid the excessive fatigue consequent upon a 12 hours' railway journey under an August sun. The train will consist of three Royal saloons, with the usual number of first-class carriages and luggage breaks. The saloons will be fitted up in the French style, with mattresses and sofas, for the convenience of the Royal party.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.—It is reported that the Prince of Wales will visit Canada before the close of the season to open the Victoria bridge of the Grand Trunk Railway, which is to be completed in October. Mr. Gibbs, late tutor to the Prince, Sir Henry Holland, Physician to the Queen, the Hon. Mr. Bolton, and the Hon. Mr. Smith, Speaker of the Canadian House of Representatives, left Liverpool for Quebec on Wednesday, and their departure has given an air of probability to the rumour. On Saturday his Royal Highness paid a visit to the Bass Rock, the celebrated insular crag near the mouth of the Firth of Forth, and to Tantallon Castle, the ancient feudal stronghold which Sir Walter Scott has made famous in his poem of "Marmion." His Royal Highness afterwards proceeded through North Berwick and Dirleton to Archerfield House, the seat of the Right Hon. Nisbet Hamilton, where he remained till Monday. His Royal Highness attended Divine service in the parish church at Dirleton on Sunday, and on Monday returned to Holyrood.

THE PRINCE OF OUDE has broken up his establishment in Paris and left that capital on Saturday for Marseilles on his return to India. On the same day his attendants embarked at Southampton in the steamship Ceylon, for Alexandria, where they will join the Prince.

THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE on Friday paid a second visit to Portsmouth dockyard, and after minutely examining the machinery of the Beagle, 6, now under repair, proceeded to the steam factory, the factory-office, &c., where he was engaged for some time. After calling on the Port Admiral at the Admiralty House, the Grand Duke and party returned to Ryde by the afternoon packet. The Russian screw corvette, Baian, 16 arrived at the Motherbank on Saturday from Cherbourg, and the new screw frigate Générale-Admirale, 62 guns, built in America for the Russian Government, arrived at the Motherbank on Sunday from Cronstadt. The report that the Grand Duke will proceed to Biarritz on a visit to the Emperor of the French on leaving the Isle of Wight, is said to be without foundation. Accounts from St. Petersburg state that the Grand Duke will, on the contrary, return direct from England to Russia, to be present at the fêtes which are about to take place on the 6th of September, when the hereditary Prince comes of age.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—At the election for Hertford on Friday, the Right Hon. W. Cowper was elected by a majority of 78 over Mr. R. Dimsdale, the Conservative candidate, the numbers being 281 to 203. The election for Liskeard took place on Friday, when Mr. R. Bernal Osborne was elected without opposition. The election for Berwick took place on Saturday, when Mr. Marjoribanks, the Liberal candidate, was returned by a majority of 1 over Mr. Hodgson, the numbers being 305 to 304. The election for Hull took place on Saturday, when Mr. Joseph Somes, the Conservative candidate, was returned by a majority of 489 over Mr. J. B. Lewis, the numbers being 2068 to 1579.

DIPLOMATIC APPOINTMENTS.—The Queen has appointed Charles Lennox Wyke, Esq., now Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General to the Republics of Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras, and Salvador, to be Minister Plenipotentiary, on a special mission to those Republics. Her Majesty has also appointed the Hon. Henry George Elliott, now Minister at Copenhagen, to be Minister at Naples; Augustus Berkeley Paget, Esq., now Minister at Stockholm, to be Minister at Copenhagen; the Hon. W. G. Grey, now Secretary of Legation at Berlin, to be Secretary of Embassy at Paris; W. Lowther, Esq., now Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg, to be Secretary of Legation at Berlin; J. Savile Lumley, Esq., now Secretary of Legation at Madrid, to be Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg; Hon. R. Edwards, now Secretary of Legation at Frankfort, to be Secretary of Legation at Madrid; Hon. W. Stuart, now Secretary of Legation at Rio, to be Secretary of Legation at Naples; F. Hamilton, Esq., now Secretary of Legation at Athens, to be Secretary of Legation at Frankfort; Fletcher C. C. Conyers Norton, Esq., now First Paid Attaché at Paris, to be Secretary of Legation at Athens; and the Hon. William George Eden, now Paid Attaché to the Legation at Frankfort, to be Secretary of Legation at Stuttgardt.

CONSULAR APPOINTMENTS.—The Queen has appointed Henry Adrian Churchill, Esq., C.B., now Consul at Jassy, to be Agent and Consul-General in Moldavia; Andrew Cathcart, Esq., to be Consul in Albania; Sidney Smith Saunders, Esq., now Consul in Albania, to be Consul at Alexandria; Henry Walter Ovenden, Esq., now Consul at Maranham, to be Consul at Baltimore; George Brand, Esq., formerly Vice-Consul at Loanda, to be Consul at Lagos; and Charles T. Newton, Esq., now Vice-Consul at Mytilene, to be Consul at Rome.

COLONIAL APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Robert George Wyndham Herbert, Fellow of All Souls', Oxford, and Barrister, of the Inner Temple, has been appointed secretary to Sir George Ferguson Bowen, Governor of the new colony of Queensland, in Australia. Mr. Herbert will also hold, in the first instance, the commission of Colonial Secretary. He was highly distinguished both at Eton and Oxford, and was private secretary to Mr. Gladstone when Chancellor of the Exchequer in Lord Aberdeen's Administration.

KNIGHTHOOD.—The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom to Edward Hay Drummond Hay, Esq., Governor of St. Helena.

THE CHANNEL FLEET.—Eight out of the 11 screw ships forming the Spithead division of the Channel fleet left that anchorage under steam on Saturday on a cruise to Ushant. The squadron consisted of the Royal Albert, flagship, 131; Algiers, 91; James Watt, 91; Agamemnon, 91; Hero, 91; Emerald, 51; Diadem, 32; and Flying Fish, 6; and it has since been joined by The Nile, 91; Cæsar, 90; Aboukir, 91; Topaz, 51; and Melpomene, 51; from Cork, Plymouth, and Portland. The other vessels of the fleet, the Trafalgar, 91; Mersey, 40; and Scout, 21; remain at Spithead; and the Edgar, 91; Impérieuse, 51; and Blenheim, 60; remain at Portland.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of Wednesday contains the following:—

"The Emperor having ordered that the army be placed from a war on to a peace footing, the Minister of War has given orders that from the 20th September those men should return to their homes whose term of service expires in 1859. Moreover, furloughs of three months will be allowed to those who are in that class of exceptional cases provided for by the statute of 1832, and the same has also been granted to the men who can prove that they are indispensable for the support of their family."

In a previous number the Moniteur, in announcing the various nominations to the chief military commands, stated that the augmentation in the number of these commands is in order to form a more equal division of the military forces of the Empire. The Emperor and Empress have arrived at St. Sauveur, where they will remain till the 5th of September, when they proceed to Biarritz. The Paris papers, with scarcely one important exception, contain articles in commendation of the amnesty, and state that no public act of the Emperor has given so much general satisfaction. The imperial decree by which the public journals are exonerated from effects of any warnings they may have received is also noticed by the Paris press in terms of great approbation; and the Moniteur of Thursday publishes numerous addresses from the Conseils Généraux to the Emperor, congratulating him on the late events. It appears that the amnesty applies to the persons condemned for the invasion of the Constituent Assembly on the 15th May, 1848; to those who were transported after the insurrection of June, 1848; to those who were condemned for the insurrection of June, 1849; to those who were banished after the coup d'état of the 2d December, 1851; to those who were condemned for offences of the press, and to those who were arrested after the attempted assassination of the Emperor on the 14th January, 1858. Notwithstanding the comprehensive character of the amnesty, M. Louis Blanc, M. Victor Hugo, and General Changarnier have announced that they do not intend to avail themselves of it. At the fête of the 15th inst. the Emperor pardoned 1127 persons, sentenced for various crimes, offences, and infringements of the law, or reduced the terms of their imprisonment, and either pardoned or commuted the term of imprisonment of 922 soldiers sentenced for various offences. A rumour has been widely spread and has obtained much credence in Paris, that in consequence of a dispute respecting the conduct of their divisions at the battle of Solferino, Marshals Niel and Canrobert had fought a duel, in which the latter was said to have been killed—according to other accounts only wounded. It has found belief in military as well as in civil circles, but there is reason to believe that it is entirely without foundation. Six Thames watermen have carried off the prizes in 14 rowing matches at the regattas of Dieppe, Rouen, and Paris.

BELGIUM.—The discussion relative to the fortifications of Antwerp in the Belgian Chamber of Representatives has ended in the adoption of the project by a majority of 15. In the sitting of the 19th inst. General Chazal, Minister of War, pointed out the advantages offered by Antwerp as the basis of a system of national defence of Belgium, and gave the many reasons which determined the Military Commission on pronouncing itself in favour of the plan of the great enceinte, as proposed by the Government. After making a warm appeal to the patriotic sentiments of the Chamber, the General stated that as yet only two-thirds of the grant voted for the works had been expended, and that the strictest economy should be observed. Three Opposition members supported the adjournment of the project, but the amendment was rejected by 58 votes to 43. General Chazal, Minister of War, energetically opposed the proposed adjournment. M. Rogier, the Minister of the Interior, declared that if the adjournment was carried the project would be withdrawn by the Government, and would not be again presented unless by a new Ministry. On Saturday the Chamber divided, when the project of law was agreed to by 57 votes to 42. There were 106 members present, of whom 7 abstained from voting. The Senate is convoked for the 30th to pronounce on the Bill. Much agitation is manifested in Belgium on the subject of the measure, and it is thought that the Senate, taking into consideration the small majority in the Chamber of Deputies, will reject it.

SWITZERLAND.—The Plenipotentiaries of France and Austria had interviews on the 18th and 19th. On the 20th there was no sitting of the Conference, but the Plenipotentiaries of France and Sardinia held a consultation together. On the 23d the Plenipotentiaries of France and Austria held a Conference, which lasted two hours. On the 24th the French and Sardinian Plenipotentiaries held a Conference, the former having received despatches from Paris. Count Colloredo had a slight attack of apoplexy in the evening, but was better on Thursday. At the banquet given by the Austrian Ambassador in honour of the birthday of the Emperor Francis Joseph, Count Colloredo said, that the fact of all the Plenipotentiaries being present proved that the work of peace would be crowned with success. The Count also proposed as a toast the permanence of the friendship between Austria and Switzerland and the Government of Zurich. The latest news from Zurich states that the French and Austrian Plenipotentiaries have regulated the settlement of the affairs of Lombardy, with the consent of the Sardinian Plenipotentiary, and that the arrangement is expected to be confirmed by the different Sovereigns. The affairs of the Duchies will be treated of directly between the Courts of Paris and Vienna.

PRUSSIA.—The King of Prussia is no longer in immediate danger, and is likely to continue in his present state for some time to come. In consequence of the change the Prince Regent left Potsdam on Sunday for Ostend. It is officially announced that the Prussian Government will send an embassy to China and Japan in October next, and that the diplomatic duties of this mission will be entrusted to Baron von Richthofen, who has hitherto been Prussian Minister to the Hanse Towns and to Mecklenburg. The library of the late Baron von Humboldt, bequeathed by him to his valet, has been purchased for 40,000 thalers by Lord Bloomfield, British Minister at Berlin.

AUSTRIA.—The official Gazette of Vienna of Monday last announces that Count Rechberg retains his post as Minister for Foreign Affairs, and is appointed President of the Cabinet; that Baron Hubner is appointed Minister of Police; Count Golochowski, Minister of the Interior; that Baron Kempen von Fichtenstamm, Chief of the Police, is dismissed with a pension; and that Baron Bach, formerly Minister of the Interior, has been appointed Ambassador to Rome: that the Ministry of Commerce is entirely dissolved; and that its duties are divided between the Ministries of the Interior, Exterior, and Finance. The non-official portion of the same journal contains an article stating that there is a general feeling of anxiety in the public mind concerning the subjects which have been till now under serious deliberation by the Superior Council, and which are:—1. Regulation of the Finances; 2. Free exercise of the Protestant religion; 3. The regulation of Jewish affairs; and 4. The regulation of the municipalities. The representation of the provinces will later come under deliberation. The article concludes by saying that, "Too great caution in advancing is as much to be avoided as too much haste."

Italy.—The National Assembly of Florence on Saturday unanimously voted the annexation of Tuscony to Piedmont, amid the acclamations of "Viva il Rè!" On Saturday the National Assembly of Modena by an unanimous vote (by ballot) declared the forfeiture of Francis V., and any other Prince of the house of Hapsburg-Lorraine, to the ducal throne. It then unanimously decreed the annexation of Modena to Piedmont, and adopted the proposal to confirm the dictatorship of Signor Farini, who has since been authorised to raise a loan of five million lire. At Parma the vote by open register, which lasted from the 14th to the 21st, has led to the all but unanimous declaration of the people for the déchéance of the Bourbon dynasty and the fusion of the Duchy with Piedmont under the sceptre of Victor Emmanuel. A defensive league has also been concluded between the States of Central Italy, and has been signed by the Marquis Ginori for Tuscany, the Marquis Coccapani for Modena, and Prince Astorre Hercolani for the Junta of Bologna. The object of this league is thus defined by the Italian journals:—To prevent the restoration of the fallen governments; to maintain internal order; and to lay down the bases of the assimilation of institutions. Notwithstanding these demonstrations in favour of independence, Prince Poniatowski, who has arrived at Florence on a mission from the French Government, is said to be the bearer of two letters—one from the ex-Grand Duke Leopold II., announcing his abdication in favour of his son; and another from the son Ferdinand IV., stating that if the Tuscans will consent to his restoration Austria will appoint one of her Archdukes to govern Venetia on a completely independent footing, severing it from all political and even military connection with her empire, so that, with the exception of the governor, Venice shall be as national and Italian as Piedmont herself, and shall unite her interest wholly and exclusively with those of the Italian Confederacy, of which she will become a bonâ fide member. On the other hand it is said that French agents are at work with a view to induce the Tuscans to accept Prince Napoleon as their king as the only means of escaping the restoration of the Austrian princes. The Opinione of Turin publishes the answer made by King Victor Emmanuel to the members of a deputation who had presented to his Majesty a medal destined to perpetuate the memory of the magnanimous words he pronounced on the 10th of January last, at the opening of the Legislative Session. In his answer the King declares that nothing can be more clear than the Italian question, or more satisfactory than the conduct of its population. General Garibaldi has arrived at Modena. It is confirmed that he is charged with the command of the Tuscan army. Madame Mario, late Miss White, the Mazzinian agent at Genoa, and her husband, Alberto Mario, have been arrested at Ferrara, and taken to Bologna. They had passed through France under the name of Martinez, and are believed to act under orders from Mazzini. They had been treated with great consideration, and it was thought that they would soon be restored to liberty on condition of leaving the country. The disbanded 4th Regiment of Swiss troops embarked at Naples on Sunday for Marseilles in the best possible order, having previously received the whole pay due to them. They numbered 1669 privates and 14 officers. All these troops were landed safely on Wednesday at Marseilles.

Malta.—Letters from Malta state that an outbreak of a mutinous character took place on board the admiral's ship Marlborough, while lying at Castellammare, near Naples, in which a great number of the crew took part; but no warrant or petty officers. The mutineers not only rolled the shot along the deck, but actually threw them at the officer in charge. The admiral turned up the hands, and addressed the malcontents, and after order had been restored, ordered them to their different messes. The men afterwards put their grievances in writing, and it is said that out of several statements drawn up there were many different versions of their complaints. It is reported that Lord F. Kerr shed tears at the conduct of the men, and said he would rather have been shot than have witnessed such a disgrace to the leading ship of the Mediterranean fleet. Five of the ringleaders are in irons, and will be tried by court-martial.

Morocco.—Letters from Tangiers state that the Emperor of Morocco is seriously ill, and the English physician has been summoned in great haste. Fears are entertained of disturbances taking place in case of his death, followed probably by a massacre of the Christians. It is said that disturbances have already occurred at Ceuta between the Moors and the Spanish troops employed in the erection of the new fortress.

Turkey.—Letters from Constantinople of the 20th inst. state that the Sultan has been taken ill, and mention the death of Prince Vogorides. Mohammed Pacha has been appointed Governor-General of Smyrna. The Sultan has presented the Dragoman of the Russian Ambassador with a country seat. M. de Lesseps will go to England, in order to remove the obstacles by which the English Government opposes the Suez Canal. A short time since the Sclustria, Turkish steamer, was lost on her passage to Alexandria in consequence of the negligence and incapacity of its captain. An Egyptian transport went to her assistance, when the Mussulmans hastened to save themselves first, and the captain was so intent upon pillaging money and other valuables on board, that he perished, the victim of his crime. The Mahometan passengers, among whom was the famous Said Pasha, who was recently charged with the important mission of inquiring into the massacre of the Christians at Jeddah, rushed upon the passengers and massacred them for the sole purpose of appropriating to themselves what they possessed. Luckily for the Christians there were among the passengers 28 Austrian seamen, who armed themselves in haste with what first came to hand, and defended the Christians to the last moment. Nevertheless the number of persons killed by the Mussulmans amounted to 77, while the total number of passengers was 750. On the arrival of the transport at Alexandria an inquiry was immediately commenced, and the guilty parties will be condemned. Among the last Said Pasha stands at the head of the list; because if he had not given the example of fanaticism and cruelty all the passengers would have been saved.

The Principalities.—Another attempt has been made on the life of Prince Couza, but it fortunately failed. Musurus Pacha has been empowered to settle the question of the Principalities.

Egypt.—Accounts from Alexandria state that the Viceroy is increasing his army considerably.

India.—The Bombay mail arrived on Saturday night with news from that presidency to the 21st July. The number of the Company's European force who have claimed their discharge is nearly 10,000. It is said that their cry has been for "England, home, and beauty," accompanied by an execration upon, what some of them term, this "ungodly land." The Government has chartered two vessels for the conveyance of 1200 of these soldiers, who return to Europe. The ex King of Oude has been set at liberty. A strong police force has been stationed on the frontiers of Oude, in order to prevent a possible inroad of rebels into that country. Captain Renny, on the 1st July, with a detachment of the 3d Sikh Infantry and a troop of native cavalry, surprised a body of rebels at Chalupore, under the Nepaul hills, capturing 20 men, 3 elephants, 2 camels, a number of horses, and a quantity of arms; some of these prisoners being recognised as having belonged to the 42d, 60th, and 67th Native Infantry. Major Vaughan also attacked a body of rebels 1000 strong in a pass leading to Nepaul and defeated them with great loss. A party under Captain Cleveland had gone in pursuit of the Akoond Rajah, who with 200 men was encamped in the jungle, but the Rajah escaped with the loss of about 25 men, tents, baggage, &c. In Central India Major Meade has had an encounter with some rebels near Sepree, in which 40 men of the 92d Highlanders, 100 of Meade's Horse, and 100 of the 9th Native Infantry took the village by storm, whereupon the rebels took shelter in a square tower, whence they were finally smoked out, and destroyed to a man, with a loss of 10 killed and wounded on our side. From Nuggur Parkur we hear that the Rana, taking advantage of the withdrawal of the main body of the troops, made a successful attempt to escape, cut the tent-ropes, seized the treasure, and liberated the prisoners and killed the guards. Two important actions have been fought near Saugor by Lieut. Rosone, of the 10th N.I., with certain rebel bodies, consisting, it is supposed, of the débris of Tantia Topee's force. Sir Hugh Rose has been decorated at Poonah in the presence of the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency and the assembled troops with the order of G.C.B. The ship Alma, 1187 tons, Captain Munro, from Calcutta for the Mauritius, was wrecked on the 5th of June in the eastern or Saugor Channel of the Hooghly: the captain, his wife and child, the wife of Lieutenant Buck and his servants (passengers), Mr. Lang, the pilot, and 14 of the crew being drowned. It appears from a published statement of the chief mate that these 20 lives were lost in consequence "of the absence of the tholes of the boats, which were seldom kept in the boats, but in a locker in the fore-cabin."

China.—Accounts from Canton of July 5 state that the fleet, composed of 19 vessels, proceeds in advance of the three Ambassadors of England, France, and America, in order, should it be necessary, to force the passage of the Peiho. From Cochin China we learn that negotiations of peace were expected at Touranne.

Borneo.—A general massacre of Christians in two towns of a district in Borneo is reported to have taken place. Pilgrims from Mecca, it is supposed, gave the signal for the outbreak.

United States.—It is stated in a letter from Boston that two vessels were fitting out at Salem for the slave trade on the coast of Africa. The principals in the affair are said to be a Spanish firm in New York. A despatch from Washington states that a cargo of 600 Africans had been landed on the coast of Florida, near Tampa. As soon as the landing was effected the vessel was fired and abandoned. The statement is made on the authority of the United States Marshal Blackburn. The Hon. Horace Mann died a few days since, and a meeting has been held at Boston to erect a monument to him at Mount Auburn.

Canada.—The ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the last pier of the Victoria Bridge took place on the 13th August. It is said that a more abundant harvest has never been known in Canada. The greatest excitement prevails all over the surrounding provinces in the United States and Canada, in consequence of the approaching visit of the "All England Eleven." It is understood that the English party will play the first match against 22 of Montreal, and that three similar matches will probably take place at Toronto, Philadelphia, and New York.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Builders' Strike.—A full meeting of the executive committee of the Central Association of Master Builders was held on Tuesday, at which Mr. Trollope reported that his firm had now 127 men at work, all of whom had gone in under the declaration. These did not include gilders, carvers, cabinet-makers, upholsterers, or men of that class, but the ordinary operatives of the building trades. He thought he might fairly be considered to have resumed work, and that being so, he saw no objection to the masters opening their shops at once if they thought fit. After a brief discussion, however, it was unanimously resolved that it would be inexpedient to recommend the members of the association to reopen their yards until Messrs. Trollope had an "adequate" number of workmen in all the branches of the trade, and the meeting was adjourned until Tuesday next. The proceedings were conducted with closed doors; but it is understood that the masters expressed themselves grieved to inflict further hardships upon their well-disposed workmen who would be willing to resume their employment and make the declaration, but they considered that the ultimate end for which the association had been formed would be best accomplished by deferring the resumption of work. The belief also was generally expressed that the solution of the whole difficulty and the interests of true humanity to the workman would be thereby best advanced, by enabling him to break the shackles of the union which at present hold the operative in thraldom, and prevent him from making a free contract when he is disposed to do so. On Tuesday evening an adjourned meeting of trades' delegates was held, and was attended by a number of delegates from various metropolitan trades. Mr. Potter, secretary to the Conference of United Building Trades, having given an explanation of the state of the movement up to the present time, several delegates addressed the meeting, and promised the support of their trade associations to the nine hours' movement, strongly condemning the "obnoxious document." The shoemakers' delegates said they were supporting a strike of their own trade at Oldham, but still they were determined to make a levy for the builders. The delegates of the engineers said that they proposed to give 1000*l.* towards the movement. The grant had been agreed to by the executive committee, and only wanted the sanction of the general body. Other promises of support followed, and the meeting again adjourned. The Conference on Monday paid the sum of 175*l.* to the labourers' delegates for the purpose of paying 1*s.* 1*d.* to each labourer who is locked out, but owing to some misapprehension of the plan upon which the payments were to be made, a considerable number of the labourers, failing to apply at the proper places at the proper time, did not obtain the dole. This led to a vast amount of discontent, and on Tuesday an excited throng of labourers assembled outside the Paviours' Arms, and with threatening gestures and violent language, demanded money. They were at length convinced by the production of the receipts that the money had been paid to their own delegates. With reference to this allowance it should be remarked that although the Conference were only enabled to distribute out of their funds at the rate of 1*s.* 1*d.* per head, the sums actually received per man amounted to from 5*s.* to 8*s.*, the difference being made up by the several societies of which the men are members. The United Trades' Association have now sent delegates into the provinces to enlist the sympathies of the operatives in the movement for limiting labour to nine hours.

THE JOURNEYMEN BAKERS AND THE SHORT TIME MOVEMENT.—On Saturday evening the journeymen bakers held a meeting at the Cowper Street Institution, City Road, in furtherance of their revived movement for shortening the hours of labour from 18 to 12 hours daily, and to substitute day for night labour. There were about 700 operatives and their wives present, the majority of whom came to the place of meeting in a procession headed by a band playing military music. The Rev. Mr. Stovell took the chair. Mr. Ayton moved the first resolution, to the effect that the present system was not consistent with reason, justice, or humanity; the operative baker being compelled to work an unlimited number of hours for a fixed remuneration, without proper time for natural rest, whereby he became morally and physically incapable of discharging his duties as a Christian, a parent, and a citizen; and it was therefore the opinion of the meeting that a limitation of the hours of work to 12 hours each day would be beneficial alike to master and man, and would relieve the excessive toil which drove the journeymen to have recourse to stimulants. Mr. Bennet, in seconding the resolution, quoted the example of the Scotch bakers, who for the last 13 years enjoyed the advantages for which they were looking, to show the feasibility of the proposal, and to prove that the public would not be inconvenienced by the change. The resolution having been supported by Mr. Mansfield, was carried unanimously, as was another pledging the meeting to use only legal and constitutional means in their agitation.

THE RICHMOND MURDER.—After the sentence of death had been passed upon Dr. Smethurst, the warrant of the Court, signed by the Lord Chief Baron, was handed to Mr. Jonas, the Governor of Newgate, for his removal to the county gaol of Surrey in Horsemonger Lane, but as a great multitude of persons were waiting in the Old Bailey anxious to catch a glimpse of the prisoner, an ingenious mode was resorted to in order to avoid confusion. A cab was drawn to the door of the prison from which it was, of course, expected that he would be taken; but instead of this he was taken through the Courts into the Old Bailey, where a cab was in readiness, and he was safely lodged in Horsemonger Lane Gaol before the crowd were aware that he had left Newgate. Since his condemnation, as well as before the trial, he has appeared desirous to enter into conversation with those about him upon the subject, and very anxious to impress them with the idea that there was no foundation for the charge of murder. There is, however, this singular resemblance between the prisoner and William Palmer, that he apparently has some reservation on his mind, as he invariably declares that "arsenic" was not the cause of death, and it will be remembered that down to the last moment Palmer declared that Cook did not die of "strychnine," and that it was reasonably inferred from the observation that some other description of poison had been made use of. He asserts that the charge had been made from ill-feeling towards him, and that Dr. Taylor would rather his life should be sacrificed than that his own reputation should be in any way affected or injured. Since he has been in confinement he has only been visited by one relation—his brother. Although his age was stated at the trial to be only 48, it is certain that he is several years older, and there is very little doubt that his object in understating his age was to make it appear that at the time of his first marriage he was a mere boy, only 18 years of age, the marriage having taken place 30 years ago, and the present Mrs. Smethurst being at that time 45. This fact has been ascertained in a rather singular manner, and it appears that in the very year when the first marriage took place, 1828, the prisoner was in custody at Horsemonger Lane Gaol upon a charge of obtaining goods by false pretences, and at that time his age was stated to be 24, so that he would be now 54 years of age, which is believed to be his correct age. He was under remand at that time for a week, and was then discharged by the magistrate. With regard to his early life, it appears that he is the son of a small schoolmaster, and was born in the neighbourhood of Coventry in 1804. There is, however, no pretext for the allegation that his father was tutor to the Earl of Dysart, nor does there appear to be any better foundation for his assertion that he is a regularly educated medical man. According to his own account, as detailed in a boarding-house where he lived, he married his present wife from feelings of gratitude for her attention to him when ill during the period of his career as a medical student; but there is no proof that he originally was more than a chemist, or possesses a higher professional degree than that of the Apothecaries' Company and a German diploma. He undoubtedly however carried on medical practice at Stockwell, Camberwell, and various places adjoining London. But it was at Ramsgate where he practised longest and was best known; he carried on business there for several years, and it is but fair to add that, except being considered somewhat close-fisted and fond of money, he bore a tolerably respectable character. After residing there for some time he left for Germany, with the double view of placing himself under the celebrated hydropathist Priessnitz, for the purpose of obtaining relief from a lameness with which he was afflicted, and of acquiring a sufficient knowledge of the system to enable him to practise it. On his return to Ramsgate he opened a cold-water cure establishment, and published a book upon the subject, entitled "Hydropatheria." The book is rather respectable as a compilation, and it is somewhat remarkable that when absent in Germany his practice was, at his request, taken care of by a gentleman before whom he was eventually brought at Richmond on the charge of murder. But at Ramsgate he never got into what is termed "fashionable" practice, and he consequently removed to the establishment of Moor Park, in Surrey. After keeping this for several years he eventually sold it to advantage, and led a comparatively private life until arrested on the charge for which he has recently been condemned. In consequence of the conflict of the medical evidence at the trial, and the alleged errors of the chemical experiments, there seems to be some doubt whether the sentence of death will be carried out. The Times of Monday says:—

"Some doubts appear to be entertained, notwithstanding the conviction and sentence of the prisoner, whether the capital sentence will be carried out. It is said that during the trial an opinion was expressed in a high quarter that it was a case for a conviction, but not one in which the capital punishment should be carried out, and this opinion seems to be very considerably confirmed by the fact that the Lord Chief Baron, in passing sentence, merely made some observations in reference to the crime and to the prisoner's statement, and omitted altogether to tell him that there was no hope, and to prepare to leave this world, which is always done in cases where the judge intends the sentence of death to be carried out. This may have been an accidental omission in the excitement of the moment, but persons well qualified to form a judgment infer that it was intentional, and that the Crown will be recommended to spare the life of the prisoner, and commute the capital sentence to one of penal servitude for life."

DISTURBANCES IN ST. GEORGES-IN-THE-EAST.—On Sunday last the disturbances which have so long prevailed in the parish church of St. George's-in-the-East assumed so serious a character that the Bishop of London has found it necessary to interfere. It appears that after the conclusion of the afternoon lecture, which is delivered by the Rev. Hugh Allen, a Low Church clergyman appointed by the parishioners, the Rev. Bryan King, the rector, has a service performed in the ultra-Tractarian style, with crosses, candles, and coloured cloths, accompanied by choral service, kneeling to the altar, and other well-known observances of the party. The officiating clergyman, who was stated to be the Rev. Mr. Jennings, the curate of Stepney, had a large black beard and moustache, and wore the Oxford master's hood, with a cross woven upon his scarf. As soon as he appeared in the church there was a great uproar, followed by hisses, cat-calls, whistling, hooting, and imitations of a billygoat. At the close of the Litany the clergyman bowed to the altar and retired, while the congregation hissed, yelled, and indulged in the most hideous noises, and there is no doubt that the clergyman would have been ill-treated by the mob on leaving the church if he had not got away by a private door. In consequence of these proceedings the Bishop of London has addressed a letter to the churchwardens, reminding them that it is their duty to prevent such disturbances; but the churchwardens allege that it is impossible for them to control the rector, who is determined to continue the services which have given so much offence to the parishioners at large. On the other hand a notice has been served upon the churchwardens at the instance of the rector, intimating that if they do not maintain order during his afternoon service they will be proceeded against in the Ecclesiastical Court.

THE RIFLED CANNON FACTORY.—Sir William Armstrong has succeeded in accomplishing the rifling of any guns employed in the service which present a surface at the bore fit to secure the grooves, and of sufficient tensile strength to resist the explosive power required to fire the heavy shot now in use. Some experiments have been carried out at Shoeburyness in the most successful manner with some of the guns which have undergone the transformation from the smooth to the rifled bore, hitherto considered impracticable. The first gun submitted to trial was an 80-pounder on Sir William's original plan; the second an ordinary 32-pounder service gun, rifled on the plan of Sir William Armstrong, and adapted for elongated cast iron shot or shell. They were sent from the department at Woolwich Arsenal without preliminary proof or test, and were fired over a range of 3400 yards. The result exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The target was 6 feet square, into which every shot—namely, six rounds from each gun—penetrated with terrific and certain aim. The energy displayed in the present restricted limits of the establishment presents ample evidence that Sir W. Armstrong's stipulation to furnish 100 guns for service during the present year will be fully performed. The whole of that number are already in form, and will be completed and delivered under ordinary circumstances long before the prescribed period.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—The preparations for the starting of the Great Eastern are proceeding with satisfactory rapidity, and in the meantime the interest of the public in the undertaking continues to increase. The office in King William Street is daily crowded with applicants, some for tickets to view, but the great majority for passages for the experimental trip, for which a very large number of berths have already been engaged. At a meeting of the company on Saturday it was resolved to issue the 30,000 reserved shares to provide a working capital. It was also determined not to insure the ship publicly, leaving to each shareholder the power of insuring privately to the amount of his individual holding. The members of the House of Commons who were present at the recent entertainment on board, have presented an address to the directors expressing their admiration of the ship as one of the noblest efforts of genius and mechanical skill which has ever been produced in this or any other country, and their high appreciation of the object for which the ship has been designed.

SALE AT VAUXHALL GARDENS.—On Monday afternoon a vast number of persons were attracted to Vauxhall Gardens by the sale of the well-known theatre, orchestra, dancing platform, fireworks gallery, fountains, statues, vases, &c. The old associations connected with the different articles were however insufficient to realise any but the most insignificant prices. A deal painted table, with turned legs, one of the original tables made for the gardens in 1754, which the auctioneer said was more than 100 years old, sold for 9*s.*; the large painting of Treport, in France, was knocked down for 2*l.* 7*s.*; while another painting, quite as large and apparently as good, realised only 3*s.* The large painting in the coffee room, representing the King of Sardinia with the Order of the Garter, being introduced by Prince Albert to the Queen, brought only 35*s.*, while an equestrian picture of the Emperor and Empress of France at a hunting party, in the costume of Louis XIV., realised the ridiculous sum of 22*s.* The great feature of the day's sale was the circular orchestra, with minarets, leaded cupola, roof, and gallery, drinking bars, organ, &c., and this realised 5*l.* The monster platform for dancing brought in 3*l.* There were in all 274 lots, and many of them were knocked down at the lowest conceivable prices. The whole of the articles purchased are to be removed during the present week, as the ground is to be cleared for building.

FORESTERS' FETE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The terminus at London Bridge and its approaches on Derby-day furnished no parallel whatever to the scene which that locality presented during the greater part of Tuesday. The occasion was the fête of the Order of Foresters, which for or five years past has been held at the Palace; and the members of the Order, who are principally mechanics, came in thousands with their wives, families, and sweethearts, by excursion trains from Southampton, Brighton, Hastings, Portsmouth, Salisbury, Littlehampton, Deal, Deptford, Greenwich, Woolwich, and many other places. The extraordinary appearance of the men as they passed in procession through the streets of London attracted much attention. Many of the leaders were dressed in cocked hats, green coats, and stage boots, while most of them wore a singular preparation of sheepskin to indicate that they were "shepherds," a title of honour conferred upon those who have passed through the principal offices of the order, such as "woodwards," "rangers," &c. Others who were less extensively decorated carried flags indicating their respective lodges. The trains to the Palace commenced running from the London Bridge and Pimlico stations about half-past 8 in the morning; but from 11 o'clock till 1 was the interval of greatest pressure on the railway accommodation, and again from 6 in the evening until after midnight. The number of visitors to the Palace on the corresponding fête of last year was 45,700 odd; but on this occasion it amounted to 63,181—the largest concourse of persons that has ever been attracted there in any one day. The conduct of this immense mass was in every respect admirable; hardly a single case of drunkenness was observed, the greatest order and good humour prevailed, and no damage whatever was done to the property of the company within or without the Palace.

Murder by Poisoning at Poplar.—On Monday a reward of 100*l.* was offered by Government for the apprehension of George Frederick Rogal, alias Reynolds, alias Regnold, who stands charged on the coroner's warrant with the wilful murder of Zipporah Wright, a single woman lately residing at Gough Street, East India Road, Poplar. It appears that the deceased, who was respectably connected, and had been living with the accused for a considerable time, gave birth to a male child about the 4th of June last. After her accouchement she was seized with violent vomitings, and when the landlady went up stairs to her she said that the man had given her some coffee, which had made her ill. She continued to get worse and died in a few days under very distressing circumstances, exclaiming a few hours before, "God forgive him!" An inquest was held on the body, and at the second sitting the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the accused, as the evidence of Dr. Letheby proved that deceased had died from the administration of a quantity of cantharides. The accused had formerly been employed at a practical chemist's, but had latterly been working as a shoemaker for a large firm in the Whitechapel Road.

The Public Health.—The Registrar General's weekly return states that the number of deaths in the week ended Saturday, the 20th August, was 1185. In the corresponding week of 1849 and 1854 the numbers were 2230 and 1883; but the deaths in the corresponding weeks of other years, after due correction for the increase of population, were 1185. The present return is therefore very near the average. During the week the births of 917 boys and 864 girls, in all 1781 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1555.

Provincial.

Aldershott.—On Monday afternoon her Majesty, accompanied by the Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, and other members of the Royal family, arrived at the camp from Osborne, and witnessed the commencement of a series of evolutions founded on the supposition that the Aldershott division had received orders to oppose the progress of an enemy advancing on London from the coast by Farnham. Her Majesty drove to the ground about 3 P.M. in a carriage-and-four; the Prince Consort riding on horseback in the undress uniform of a field-marshal, with Prince Alfred in the uniform of a midshipman of the Royal Navy. As soon as her Majesty came upon the field the evolutions commenced. The brigades were moved down to the slope of the hill overlooking the Farnham road, and as fast as they could be got into line commenced a file fire, which was supported from all commanding points by an almost equally rapid cannonade. The brigades then retired in columns, the batteries were advanced, powerful covering bodies of riflemen were thrown out, and under their protection strong working parties advanced to intrench the weakest points of the position on Hungry Hill. For this purpose 2 000 men were told off, viz., 480 for the breastwork on the left, 900 for the centre, and 620 for the right. As each of these working parties was relieved several times, it required the labour of upwards of 8000 men to complete the works. This part of the programme, however, seemed to be devoid of general interest, and her Majesty, after watching the progress of the operations for a short time, drove off the ground. On Tuesday morning the line of intrenchment, forming a vast semicircular curve, upwards of a mile in length, was completed by about 10 o'clock. At 11, the Queen and Royal party arrived on the ground and witnessed the result of the labours of the intrenching party in a decisive battle, which resulted, as usual, in the total repulse and destruction of the enemy. A general halt was then sounded, and some of the regiments piled arms. As they all carried their provisions and water for the day, it was at first generally imagined that the halt was called to allow the men to dine before renewing the pursuit. However, after an interval of about an hour, which was employed by her Majesty and the Prince Consort in riding along the line and inspecting the works, the "assembly" was sounded, and each brigade returned to camp. Contrary to the general custom on these occasions, there was no marching past. Her Majesty at once returned to the Pavilion, and after luncheon quitted camp, attended by the usual escort. For the last five or six weeks Mr. Rarey has been at Aldershott, at the request of the Commander-in-Chief, giving lessons to classes of 25 of the rough riders, farriers, riding-masters, and veterinary surgeons, as to the general treatment of wild or timid horses. All have been practically instructed in his mode of subduing intractable animals, rendering nervous horses quiet, and curing others of individual tricks and habits which make them either dangerous or troublesome. In all cases Mr. Rarey's lessons have been attended with the most signal success, and his pupils have had no difficulty in reducing by gentle means the most vicious or nervous animals to complete tranquillity and subjection.

Cambridge.—A very valuable addition has been made to the Fitzwilliam collection by the accession of a noble picture by Manzuoli di San Friano, the gift of Mr. Henry Thomas Hope, of Deepdene and Piccadilly. The subject is the "Salutation of the Virgin." It was exhibited during the present season at the British Institution in Pall Mall.

Canterbury.—The Rev. E. H. Woodall, M.A., Exeter College, Oxford, Rector of St. Margaret's, Canterbury, was received into the Roman Catholic Church at Paris on the 15th inst.

Cheltenham.—The sale of Lord Northwick's collection of pictures was continued on Friday, the day's sale realising 6100*l.* Among the articles sold on this day was an enamel of Lady Hamilton as Ariadne, after the beautiful picture by Madame Le Brun. This enamel was painted expressly for Sir William Hamilton, and bequeathed by him to Lord Nelson, and is mentioned in Lord Nelson's Memoirs. After a most spirited competition between Mr. Agnew, Mr. Grundy, of Manchester, and Mr. Mawson, it was knocked down to the latter at the enormous price of 700 guineas. On Tuesday, the 17th day, the sale of pictures was resumed, the day's sale realising 10,575*l.* On Wednesday the sale of pictures and works of art was concluded, the day's sale realising 3750*l.*, making a total of the 18 days, 95,725*l.*, the largest amount ever obtained by any sale of pictures and works of art in this country.

Llanberis.—Mr George Frodsham, managing clerk in one of the mercantile firms in Liverpool, commenced the ascent of Snowdon about midnight on Sunday, in order to arrive at the summit of the mountain in time to see the sun rise. He had a guide, but left him and the party with whom he had been travelling and started off by himself in spite of their remonstrances, with the view of reaching the top first. Nothing more was seen of him until Tuesday morning, when his body fearfully mutilated was discovered lying at the base of a precipice, and from some marks on the ground there is no doubt that the unfortunate gentleman had fallen from a height of upwards of 600 feet. At the inquest the jury (composed of men thoroughly acquainted with the locality) returned a verdict of Accidental Death, coupled with a strong recommendation to tourists not to ascend without a guide owing to the dangerous mists in which they may suddenly be enveloped. The similar fate of the unfortunate Mr. Starr will be fresh in the recollection of our readers.

Leeds.—Two men called Appleby and Beardow, who were committed last week to Wakefield gaol to take their trial on a charge of burglary at Batley, near Dewsbury, have been identified by two witnesses as having been seen lounging about the fields at Roundhay near this town, a short time previous to the murder of Mr. Broughton; and one of them has been recognised as the person who pledged Mr. Broughton's watch at a pawnbroker's shop in Leeds about two hours after the murder. The magistrates have therefore applied to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, requesting that the men might be brought to Leeds by habeas corpus, in order that the evidence against them might be taken. The bludgeon with which the fatal blows are supposed to have been struck, had also been found in a field, about 50 yards from the scene of the murder. It is a common hedge-stake, about 4 feet in length, the end used for the blows being studded with knots, from which the bark had been peeled by the severity of the strokes, and portions of the old man's hair were found adhering to it for a space of about 6 or 8 inches.—The Rev. James Athay, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, a high churchman, but not of extreme views, has been elected vicar of Leeds, in the room of the Very Rev. Dr. Hook. There were 38 candidates for the vacant living.

Liskeard.—Mr. Bernal Osborne at his election for this borough on Saturday spoke as follows on public affairs:—

"It has been objected to me that I am a thick and thin supporter of my Lord Palmerston. I have no hesitation in saying that I entertain a great and sincere respect for Lord Palmerston; but had I been such a supporter of his, I would scarcely have been in my present position, because I should in all probability have gone to another place from which no [illegible] returns. I might have been sent to the drawing room when not wanted in the Cabinet parlour. I am not a nonentity at Lord Palmerston here, and never will be his thick and thin supporter in another place. I am here reminded of a passage in a old play where a great philosopher is asked what becomes of all the old moons. 'Gentlemen,' the reply was, 'they are cut up into little stars.' And it seems to me that there are certain members of the old Whig party who are in somewhat the same position as the old moons here alluded to, and who have been cut up into very little stars. No man can equal the conciliating manner of Mr. Vernon Smith, now Lord Lyveden, or of Sir Benjamin Hall, now Lord Llanover; and no man can surpass in uprightness, straightforwardness, and intelligence Mr. Labouchere, now Lord Taunton, and when I speak of these noblemen I do so with the utmost respect: but at the same time I do not wish to see the House of Lords made a waste pipe for the surplusage of the House of Commons, and if Lord Palmerston had been 20 years younger he would not have made these creations. I do not wish to be too hard upon the last Ministry. They say 'of the dead nothing but good,' and if they were dead I would speak nothing but good of them. But they are alive, and kicking to get back to office. Well, they have some great men among them. Mr Disraeli I look upon as a great statesman. He was the Æneas who carried the whole burden on his shoulders; and we Liberals have to thank Mr Disraeli, who I believe to be of my party, for the liberal measures which he was mainly instrumental in carrying. We have to thank Mr Disraeli for the Jew Bill; we have to thank him for a proposal to deal with the church rates, though not in the right way; and we have to thank him for having pulled that huge omnibus of his full of country gentlemen to the consideration of a Reform Bill, which, if they had passed it, was so revolutionary in its tendency and identity that it would have given a spur to American institutions in this country. I feel very grateful to Mr. Disraeli, and I have no doubt that one day or other new combinations will arise when, if he cannot control these unwilling country gentlemen of his, he will boldly come forward for the good of his country and join with those who will carry fuller and more liberal measures. But in forming his Ministry Lord Palmerston no doubt had great difficulties to contend with. In the first place the litter of pigs was rather too numerous for the maternal capabilities of the [illegible] street mother. What was he to do? Nobody would have the [illegible] family party back again; that was out of the question. Well, some of them were kicked upstairs. What was he then to do? I am not one of those who think that he acted best under the circumstances. No doubt there may be little too much caution in the Cabinet pudding, but on the same time I must admit that the body of gentlemen called Peelites, although they are only a small party with no great following in the country, are a set of the most able administrators, and are the right men in the right place, and so far from my feeling any jealousy of that body of men, I say that I should be glad to see them let with us and enjoy liberal connexions. I, for one, will give them my cordial support. At the same time I am regret that when they had their great meeting at Willis's Rooms, and had their ball and sat down to their supper, they only asked two of what is called the 'advanced party,' and even then they were asked to take a seat at a side table. I think it would have been better if Mr. Gladstone had been offered a Secretaryship of State. I think it would have been much better if Mr Bright—with whose views on [illegible] I do not agree but whose great ability and [illegible] I admire—had been asked to have a seat at the Board [illegible] because I believe there is no man in the community who has grasped the subject more completely, and that, whatever his views be, there is no man more entitled to take a high place in the Government of the country. But, now that we have got the Government, I say that there are excellent [illegible] business like men in it. [illegible] I protest myself that there is a here I do not make any reference to his government, which is a question for the French people, not for me—is a man of great wisdom and clear-mindedness. I believe him to be one of those who, from not having been born and not having lived in the purple, has had the advantage of knowing mankind. What is more, I believe he knows his own interest, and assuredly his interest is not to quarrel with this country. But if we are to go on with petty quarrelling and criticising, and saying things repulsive to the self-love and pride of the French people, it is not impossible that we may precipitate this country into a war. I do not believe in our invasion panics, as I said before, but at the same time that is no reason why we should not be able to a certain extent to cultivate a moderate military feeling in this country. But when we talk of congresses, I am reminded of a passage which has met me in my reading of history—that it was a French king who, in the middle ages, promulgated the first idea of a great European congress, where all great national questions would be decided to prevent war. Henry IV. of France in 1610 promulgated the same proposition that Mr. Cobden announced in 1849. Mr. Cobden I believe to be an illustrious statesman, and he repeated the doctrines of Henry IV. in 1610, and I put it to you what would have been the consequence if Henry IV. could have carried out those principles. Look at the taxation imposed upon both countries by war since that period. It had been well remarked that 'War is a fare table of Governments, and nations are the dupes.' I agree thoroughly with Lord Aberdeen, 'that when war ceases to be a necessity it becomes a crime.' And I hope that we shall not always be frightened year by year by these threats, proceeding from those panic fears of invasion."

MONMOUTH.—The execution of Matthew Francis, who was convicted at the last assizes of the murder of his wife at Newport on the 12th March, took place on Tuesday morning in this town, in the presence of several thousands of persons, a large proportion of whom were from the Forest of Dean. He frequently acknowledged the justice of his sentence, and stated he had no desire no live. He was in a state of such extreme weakness that he was assisted to the scaffold, and was apparently almost unconscious when the drop fell.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Captain Hall, the unfortunate aëronaut who fell out of the balloon near Boldon on Monday week, died in Newcastle Infirmary on Friday evening. During his illness his continual terror in delirium was lest he should be carried towards the sea, and there can be no doubt that under the influence of this terror he lost his presence of mind and descended too rapidly. An inquest was held on Saturday, when the jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

PORTSMOUTH.—A series of experimental trials has been carried on during the past fortnight at this port, with a view of ascertaining the amount of resistance offered by iron and steel plates of various manufactures when opposed to heavy ordnance at short range. The trials are understood to have reference to the future coating of the steam ram now in progress of construction. The practice has been carried on from the Stork gunboat tender to the Excellent, gunnery ship, both from a 32-pounder and a 95 cwt. gun, the latter throwing a solid 68lb. shot, with 16lb. charge of powder, at a range of 200 yards. At this distance the results of the experiments have demonstrated in the clearest possible manner that no iron or steel plate that has yet been manufactured can withstand the solid shot from the 95 cwt. gun at a short range. The first shot would not penetrate through the iron plate, but would fracture it, and on three or four striking the plate in the same place, or in the immediate neighbourhood, the plate would be smashed to pieces. As the results of the trial affected the steel plates it proved that a steel-clothed ship could be far more easily destroyed than a wooden-sided one, and that on the smashing in of the one of the steel plates the destruction of life on the decks, supposing the broken plate to be driven through the ship's side, would be something dreadful to contemplate, from the spread of the splintered material. So far as the present experiments have gone they appear to prove that an iron or steel-clad ship, on receiving a concentrated broadside from a frigate, armed like the Mersey, and struck near the waterline, must sink then and there, with her armour on her back.—Some experiments have also been tried at Fort Moncton with the view of testing a new description of embrasure. The mouth of the embrasure is formed of pigs of iron bolted together in the strongest possible manner. The outer portion is formed of iron bolted with an outside facing of brickwork several feet thick; the parapet, arch, and other portions of the work on the inner face being built in the usual manner. The experiments were made with an 8-inch gun with solid shot, and a charge of 16lb. of powder, at only 400 yards range; at this distance the shot broke into fragments, making an indentation on the pigs of iron of 1¾ inch. Where the shot struck the brickwork it tore the whole of it away from the iron plates, but in the next trial the place occupied by the brickwork will be filled up with earth. The result of the experiments proved, in the opinion of the officers present, that the men would have a perfect shelter in working artillery behind a battery built on this plan.

ROCHDALE.—The following is an abstract of the speeches delivered on the 18th inst. by Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright to the non-electors of this borough:—

Mr. COBDEN said he considered himself specially at home when addressing a meeting of non-electors, because the fundamental rule and maxim of his life had been to seek the benefit of all classes of the community, without distinction or difference. To non-electors the question of Parliamentary reform was particularly interesting. He thought the Reformers had made a great mistake in their mode of advocating this question by lumping too many things together, and he believed that they ought to commence with the suffrage first, and take the ballot and the distribution and other minor points afterwards. He himself had always advocated and voted for a household suffrage. It must be remembered that in seeking an extension of the franchise we should have to convince a tribunal that was now the representative of that body of the community which was already in possession of the franchise, and which believed that by extending the suffrage we should in some measure endanger the security and weal of the country. Now, he had always been a practical man, and he had endeavoured to bring practical considerations to bear upon many questions which he advocated. So, in considering the question of Parliamentary reform he should endeavour to show the middle classes and their representatives that it would be to their interest to extend the franchise beyond the present limited pale. He thought that it would be necessary to appeal to the instincts of selfishness in the enfranchised classes. It was said that if the people were intrusted with the electoral powers they would not be able to take care of themselves. If this assertion was made in allusion to the ignorance of the people of this country, he would answer that another reason why he advocated the extension of the franchise was that the richer and better educated of the community would be compelled to extend the means of education to their poorer fellow-subjects; and in proof of this he cited the example of the United States. Another assertion that was advanced was, that if the franchise was extended the influence upon financial affairs would be injurious; but if the result were that articles of large consumption—such as tea, sugar, paper, &c.—were relieved of customs duties and other taxes, and if direct taxes were substituted for indirect taxes, he firmly believed that all classes of the community would largely benefit by the change. As to the character of the Reform Bill that was to be, he said that whilst he was in America Mr. Bright made a series of orations on Parliamentary reform, which, for sustained variety and eloquence, had seldom or never been equalled in this or any other country; and American gentlemen after reading Mr. Bright's speeches had said to him that a reform ought to have been advocated before the corn laws were repealed, because now that bread was cheap, work plentiful, and the people comfortable, they would care very little for the extension of political privileges. This might be true in some measure, but there was unquestionably a feeling for reform in the country. He thought the measure proposed by Lord John Russell was a very moderate one, but it would considerably increase the number of voters in England. Lord John's proposal was to give a vote to occupiers of 6*l*. houses in the boroughs and 10*l*. tenements in counties, and he should feel it his duty to support the measure by all the means in his power. With respect to the ballot, he was convinced that the first reformed Parliament returned under a new Reform Act would at once proceed to pass an act for voting by ballot; at any rate he thought it would be the wisest plan on the part of the Reformers not to mix up the question of the ballot with that of the extension of the franchise, and he was in favour of a redistribution of seats. Instead however of giving two members to a town he would prefer to divide a town into wards and give a member to each ward. In large towns generally one portion was inhabited by the richer class and another by the poorer, and such a plan as he had named would be a fairer mode of representation than the present system.

Mr. BRIGHT, after expressing his pleasure at hearing the remarks of Mr. Cobden upon the subject of Parliamentary Reform, proceeded to denounce in the strongest terms the policy which led to the wars at the end of the last and beginning of the present century. Those wars we owed to the oligarchy of this country, and to the oligarchical system of government which then existed. He then reviewed the progress made in England since 1832, particularising the benefits arising from free trade, the advantages consequent on the formation of railways, the extension of colonies, and the discoveries of gold in Australia and California, and beyond all the abundant blessings which had sprung from the long duration of peace in this career of progress. The aristocracy and Government had certainly permitted the utmost individual and personal freedom; but it was to the industry and intelligence of the people that we owed the great improvements to which he had alluded. To this people, improved and improving—to this toiling, long-enduring, and peaceful people—he wished to extend the privileges of the electoral franchise; and as the present Cabinet had promised a Reform Bill, he trusted that here and elsewhere throughout the country they would receive a warm and hearty support.

SUNDERLAND.—Mr. Lindsay, M.P., met the electors of this town on Monday night, and referred to a misunderstanding which had taken place in regard to his vote in favour of Lord Derby's Government, and the speech which he considered it his duty to make in the House of Commons in supporting their Reform Bill. The following is an extract from his address:—

"When they returned him to Parliament the war was raging in Europe. He pledged himself to support any Government that would maintain a strict and honourable neutrality. He pledged himself further to do everything that could lay in his power to have this great question of Reform settled. He had no faith in Lord Palmerston settling this question; therefore he made a condition with the Government, and he had that condition in writing before he would give his support to maintain in office the Administration of Lord Derby. The conditions were these: first, in regard to Reform—that the late Government should declare that they were prepared to bring in a Bill, and to use all their power to pass it, which should provide for boroughs a 6*l*. rental franchise, and for counties a 10*l*. rental franchise; and that at least 30 of the smaller boroughs should be disfranchised. The next was that the Government should pledge themselves to take all necessary steps to maintain an honest and honourable neutrality, showing also that they were determined to take part with neither of the belligerents, and that they were prepared to defend to the utmost the honour and the interests of England if either should be attacked. On the first night of the debate, immediately after the seconder of the amendment sat down, the Chancellor of the Exchequer distinctly gave his pledges to the conditions he had named. Then there was another consideration with him. He felt that if Lord Derby could give a Bill which would satisfy him and other sound reformers, his lordship had a power which the Whigs had not—a power to pass the Bill through the Lords, and thus settle in our day and generation this truly important question."

TIVERTON.—The Rev. M. A. Gilbert, rector of St. Peter's, in this town, has refused to allow the Bishop of Oxford the use of his pulpit, to the great annoyance of churchmen of the High Church party.

YARMOUTH.—Some correspondence has passed between the Mayor of Great Yarmouth and the War Office with reference to the formation of a volunteer artillery corps for the protection of this part of the coast. The Government have expressed their readiness to assist in the formation of a corps if the necessary earthworks are erected. The council have requested the Mayor to remind the proper authorities of the necessity of reconstructing the town battery and the fort, some time since demolished by Government.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC SYNOD.—The resolutions adopted by the Roman Catholic bishops at the recent meeting in Dublin appear in the Freeman of Friday. They run to an extreme length, and discuss other questions besides "mixed education." This however is the most important topic with which they deal, and in doing the prelates do not confine themselves to the national schools, but propose with regard to the entire order of education, that the Queen's Colleges of Cork and Galway should be given over to be conducted on Catholic principles, the College of Belfast being left to the Presbyterians, and members of the Established Church being provided for in the University of Dublin. The following are the most stringent of the resolutions, the whole of which are embodied in a pastoral address to be read from every pulpit and altar throughout Ireland:—

"That schools for Catholic youth should be such as to secure for them the benefit of a safe secular education, and also religious instruction in the faith and practices of the Catholic Church. They should be, therefore, so subordinated to the bishops in their respective dioceses as that no books may be used in them for secular instruction to which the ordinary shall object, and that the teachers, both as to appointment and removal, and the selection of all books for religious instruction and the arrangements for it, be under the control of the same authority. That the principles enunciated can be adequately carried out and acted upon in this country only on a system of schools exclusively for Catholics. That the Catholics of Ireland have a right to obtain such a proportion of the aid annually voted by Parliament for education as, regard being had to the number and the condition of the Catholic population, will suffice for the establishment and maintenance of schools to be conducted on thoroughly Catholic principles. That the concessions made for exclusively Catholic schools in Great Britain and the British colonies is conclusive evidence of the fairness of our claim to a grant being made for Catholic schools in Ireland, and that the Catholic people of Ireland should therefore, through their representatives in Parliament, and by application to the Government, on obtaining such grant, That the national system of education, though suitable on account of the particular circumstances of the country, must be from its very nature in several respects objectionable to Catholics, and that the changes made in it from time to time having been averse to Catholic interests have increased the distrust of the Catholic people. That we signalise as especially objectionable the assumption of the control over education which the Protestant Church holds to have been conferred on bishops by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, when He said to his Apostles 'Go teach all nations.' That we shall embody the substance of the above resolutions in a memorial to the Chief Secretary for Ireland, calling on the Government to take our claims into consideration and to grant them. That we shall call the attention of the Government to the constitution of the Board of Poor Law Commissioners, exclusively Protestant, to the condition of the poor in the workhouses, who are treated in many cases much worse than the felons in the gaols or other institutions, and are left in many cases in a state of the greatest destitution, and to the other countless grievances of the system arising from the intolerable state of the poor law and its administration, as also to the destitute religious condition of the Roman Catholic sailors in her Majesty's navy."

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF EDUCATION.—The Evening News, Dr. Cullen's organ, states that in consequence of the declaration of the Romish prelates upon the education question, Mr. James O'Ferrall has tendered his resignation as a commissioner. In a few days, it is also added, the other Roman Catholic commissioners will probably take the same step.

STOPPAGE OF NAVAN FAIR BY THE PRIESTS.—The holidays of the Church of Rome, though not so numerous in Ireland as in the South of Europe, are still observed in many parts with such regularity, that they often interfere with the interests of the farming community, and end in drinking and rioting. Under these circumstances the landlords have for some time endeavoured to abolish them. In some places their efforts have succeeded; but since the Tipperary movement began to spread in Ireland, the influence of the priests for saints' days has revived, and no means are left untried to procure their recognition again by the people. A case in point has just occurred in Meath. For 4 or 5 years past an important fair has been held at Navan on the third Monday in August. In accordance with the usual custom it was advertised in all the papers. The railroad company ran special trains, and were crowded with dealers from various parts of Ireland, and some from England and Scotland; but they were doomed to be disappointed. Four days before the fair the priests determined to put a stop to it, and issued counter advertisements directing that the fair should be put off till the 17th, as the 15th was a great "holiday" in the Roman Catholic Church. The priests announced to the people on Sunday from the altar that it would be a great desecration if they allowed the fair to be held. This they did in the chapels of Navan, Trim, Kells, and other places, so that when the people began to assemble for the fair there was a mob supplied for every one. They also got over the Young Men's Society band from Liverpool, and had them in readiness with their own Young Men's band to play through the town. The bands took the roads by which the greatest number of cattle usually come into the town, and whenever they met with a drove they made a tremendous din, which with the shouts of the mob, set the cattle running in wild disorder through the country. Bludgeons were also used, and some gentlemen coming into town were grossly insulted and maltreated. Under these circumstances it was of course impossible to hold the fair.

STRIKE IN DUBLIN.—The carpenters of Dublin, following the example of their brother mechanics in London, have struck in consequence of the refusal of the master builders to increase their wages by 2*s*. a week. The masters have issued a series of resolutions stating that the wages paid to the carpenters were 30*s*. a week, and fully equal to what existing circumstances and contracts warranted; and pledging themselves to use all proper means to resist any increase of the same, warning the men that in case of their leaving on strike they would not be employed again. The carpenters in reply, adhere to the demand made in a circular addressed to the masters, and have decided that it shall be maintained.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—The arrangements for the meeting of the British Association in Aberdeen next month are fast reaching completion. The New Music Hall, in which the principal of the Association's meetings will be held, is now ready for the seating, and presents a very fine appearance. The proceedings will be commenced by the Prince Consort delivering an address in the new hall on the evening of Wednesday, the 14th of September. In prospect of the visit of the Prince the Town Council of the City at a special meeting on Thursday unanimously agreed to the following resolution proposed by the Lord Provost:—

"That the Town Council regard with the highest satisfaction the prospect of the approaching visit of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort to Aberdeen, for the purpose of presiding at the meeting of the British Association. That the Town Council is desirous to offer to his Royal Highness a most respectful request that he will be pleased to honour the Corporation with his presence at a banquet in the Town Hall, in order to afford them the opportunity of expressing the feelings of respect and esteem with which his character, conduct, and public services are regarded by the community. And that a copy of this resolution, signed by the Lord Provost, be transmitted to his Royal Highness."

Railways.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN.—At the meeting of this company on Friday the report stated that the gross revenue for the half-year showed an increase of 148,298*l*. The working expenses showed an increase of 42,974*l*., leaving the net increase 105,324*l*. This result has been caused chiefly by additional traffic both in passengers and goods throughout the entire system, and only in a limited degree by the cessation of competition. The directors are about to arrange an acceleration of the mail service with Ireland. The net balance was 320,422*l*., and a dividend was declared at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum.

GREAT NORTHERN.—At the half-yearly meeting of this company the report was adopted, and the usual dividends were declared on the preference shares, and dividends of 3*l*. per cent. on the B stock, and 7*s*. 6*d*. per cent. on the A stock.

STOPPAGE OF THE PERTH JUNCTION.—During the last fortnight there has been a complete disruption of railway communication between London and the Highlands in consequence of a dispute between the Scottish Central and the Scottish North Eastern at Perth as to the toll to be paid over only 320 yards of line. As neither party would give way the Post Office authorities instituted actions against both companies for delaying the mails, and the merchants and others have followed the example. In consequence of these measures this discreditable dispute has been brought to a conclusion.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE TILBURY AND SOUTHEND.—Mr. Marcus Bennett, one of the unfortunate passengers in the Thames Haven train which ran off the curve last week near the Tilbury station, has died from the injuries he sustained. He was 21 years of age and held a confidential situation in the house of Baggalay, Spence, & Co., of Wood Street, Cheapside. He was returning from a fortnight's holiday, which he had spent at Margate, and was in the second carriage next the tender. He was extricated from the fragments in an insensible condition, his thigh was shockingly fractured, and he had two severe wounds on his head. He was removed to a cottage near the station where he died on Friday morning. An inquest was opened on Saturday and adjourned for the production of further evidence.

ACCIDENT ON THE SOUTH-WESTERN.—On Saturday morning as the express train from Windsor consisting of seven first and second-class carriages, containing about 30 passengers, was approaching Feltham station, the engine suddenly left the rails, dragging the whole of the carriages with it, and after proceeding on the line for about 100 yards, tearing up the metals and chairs, it diverged to the left, ploughed its way into a stubble field, when the train fell over with a fearful crash, five of the carriages being smashed and broken. The screams and cries of the passengers were most distressing, and no time was lost in extricating them from their perilous position, when it was discovered that no lives were lost, nor any serious injury inflicted beyond the effect of violent shaking and extreme fright.

ACCIDENT ON THE GLASGOW AND SOUTH-WESTERN.—On Thursday the 18th inst. an accident occurred on this line, caused by the train running off the rails at a spot where they were undergoing repairs, the rails not having been properly fastened. Three third-class carriages were upset, and two third and two first-class carriages ran over the embankment into the adjoining field. Two third-class carriages and a van were thrown across the rails, a considerable portion of which were torn up. Three passengers—two women, and a miner, on his way to Paisley—were severely injured, and several others received contusions, though not of a serious nature.

Law.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT: LIVERPOOL.—"Rattling" a Voter.—Zachariah Hardman, Joseph Booth, and Phineas Murphy were arraigned on a charge of using unlawful restraint to compel James Consterdine to refrain from voting at the last Parliamentary election at Bury. After a trial of several hours the jury returned a verdict of Guilty against Hardman and Booth, upon whom sentence was deferred, and Acquitted Murphy. Mr. Baron Watson, in passing sentence, said it was highly necessary that voters should be protected from such outrages as the prisoners had been found guilty of committing, and that the conduct of the defendants should not be thus brought and associated with. The offence they had committed was a very serious one, and had shewn such the judgment of [illegible] that [illegible] Hardman to [illegible] and Booth to [illegible] imprisonment.

The Queen, Aberdeen, Clerk-Keeper, Judge, aged 58, was charged with [illegible] Mungal [illegible] Morris, Angus Cameron, [illegible] Burns, and [illegible] Norman Mackenzie, all Chelsea men, [illegible] against them was, in substance, to [illegible] as a Fenian [illegible]. It appeared that there had been a meeting of persons in Chelsea, the object of which was to promote certain schemes in the Government, which the Government opposed the point to which this meeting was held to be surrounded by armed men, and the four prisoners were arrested and lodged in custody, [illegible] and they were, in March last, put on board the [illegible] ship. Two of the [illegible] were members of the Chelsea Vestry, and the other two were editors of a newspaper published in Soho Square, the organ of [illegible]. These gentlemen were taken at a distance of [illegible] miles under the guard of armed men, and put on board the prisoners' ship, at Woolwich, amidst [illegible] cheering by a [illegible] crowd assembled. When they found themselves prisoners on board a British vessel, they sent for the captain into the cabin, and remonstrated with him, which he replied that for money he would take the President of the United States himself, and put him on Cape Horn; and it appeared that he had received 60*l*. for the transport of the [illegible] thence [illegible] the usual [illegible] of passage money. The cases, which were adjourned till [illegible], were [illegible] with [illegible] as that the [illegible] were [illegible] kept in custody. The conditions stipulated by the Chilian authorities was that the captain should obtain a certificate from the Chilian consul in Liverpool that the persons assigned to his care had arrived in that town [illegible] by the prisoners did not exist, their landing to be effected until the consul had been apprised of their being in port. The consul had to [illegible] that [illegible] the [illegible] of the magistrates in Liverpool, and hence this was the result. After the [illegible] had been read, Mr. Lumley directed the jury to return a verdict of acquittal, and the prisoner was discharged on entering into their own recognizances to appear when called upon before the Court of Criminal Appeal. The judge undertook to represent the case to that Court.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—Embezzlement by Agent.—Edward [illegible], a [illegible], was indicted for [illegible] with three [illegible] being [illegible] bankers' cheques amounting in value to about 700*l*. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and Mr. Justice Willes sentenced him to 12 months' imprisonment with hard labour in the House of Correction. The Slave Lamp Forgeries.—Wallace Hunter and Henry Wilkinson were indicted for feloniously assisting Harriette Lamplugh, with intent to [illegible] her husband, and for the wilful and [illegible] of Richard Farrell Dale, in New Inn. The jury found them Guilty, and they were [illegible] to 18 months' penal servitude, [illegible]. Embezzlement.—Joseph Lockhart Morton was found Guilty, and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. Wellington Turner, [illegible] of the [illegible] to the [illegible] of [illegible], was indicted for [illegible] to take the order for the delivery [illegible]. The evidence went to show that there had been some irregularities in the prisoner's accounts, but did not prove that he had embezzled the money. The jury acquitted the prisoner, and, on the other indictments no evidence being offered, he was [illegible]. Robert Morris, a publican, was indicted for [illegible] in the form of a message to the [illegible] of Mr. Cort, whose discoveries in the manufacture of iron are so well known. The evidence relative to the dissolution of the [illegible] proving very positive, the Common Serjeant [illegible] the case to the jury. The prisoner was then indicted for obtaining money by false pretences from Mr. J. Thorley, of Newgate Street, cattle food dealer; Mr. Snape, a barrister; and Mr. Elkington, of the Freemasons' Tavern, under the plea that it was for a testimonial for Mr. Alderman Mechi. In this case the prisoner was convicted, and sentenced to [illegible] imprisonment.

Obituary.

THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF NORWICH died on Thursday at her residence in Belgrave Square. She married in 1797 the late Earl of Norbury, who was created a peer of Ireland in January, 1800. The Countess, previous to her marriage, was Lady Grace Vaughan. Lady Georgiana Bligh, Lady Langdale, and Lady Isabella Stewart, and wife of Thomas Bligh, Esq., of Rathmore Park, county Meath.

LORD HENRY SEYMOUR, brother of the Marquis of Hertford, who was some years back as well known in Paris for his successes on the French turf, died in that capital last week. He was 64 years of age, was born in Paris and passed [illegible] of his [illegible] on French soil. He has bequeathed all the property he inherited from his mother, the late Marchioness, amounting to 36,000*l*. sterling, to the hospitals of Paris, and one half of his property and extensive [illegible] to those of his friends in the house.

EDWARD JAMES STONE, C.E., late Commissioner of Customs, died at Brighton on the 16th inst. in his 63rd year. He entered the Customs in 1818, and in 1824 was appointed Surveyor of the Port of Dublin, which office he held till 1827, and in Antwerp in 1830 and 1831. He was present at the siege and storm of Bergen-op-Zoom in 1814, when he received the Indian medal. He commanded the Scinde Irregulars with the army of the Punjab during the campaigns of 1848 and 1849, including the affair of Ramnuggur on the 22nd November. He was present at the passage of the Chenab, the actions of Chillianwallah and Goojerat, and in the subsequent pursuit of the Sikhs and Afghans to the Khyber Pass under Sir W. R. Gilbert, for which he received a medal and the rank of Commander of the Bath.

LIEUT.-GENERAL RAIKE, K.C., one of the few remaining heroes of the Irish rebellion, died on the 4th inst. at an advanced age. He entered the service as ensign in the 21st Regiment (Queen's Royals) in 1793, and first saw active service in the Irish rebellion, having been present at the taking of Wexford by Sir John Moore. He next served under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, was with General Macdonald in the secret expedition to Quiberon Bay, was present at the siege and capture of Aboukir Fort, and all the [illegible] operations in Egypt, down to the [illegible] and surrender of Alexandria, which he was created Knight of the Crescent, and received a gold medal from the Sultan for his services. In 1808 he went to Portugal under General Acland, was present at the battle of Vimeira, and at the occupation of Lisbon, marched with Sir John Hope to Salamanca, joined the army under Sir John Moore, and accompanied it in all its operations to the battle of Corunna, at which he greatly distinguished himself. He accompanied the expedition to Walcheren, under the Earl of Chatham, and was present at the siege and capture of Flushing. He was aide-de-camp to General Houston in Portugal in 1811, and was at the battle of Fuentes d'Onor. In 1812 he was appointed assistant-adjutant-general of the north-west and central inland districts under Sir Thomas Maitland, was on the staff at Portsmouth, was assistant-quartermaster-general in 1813, and was at Bury there at the visit of the Prince Regent, the Emperor of Russia, the King of Prussia, and other illustrious personages. In 1814 he was appointed deputy adjutant-general to the forces in the Mediterranean, in which service he continued till his return to England in 1829. He retired from the service by the sale of a lieutenant-colonelcy. In 1844 he was appointed barrack-master at Aberdeen, removed to Harwich in 1850, in 1852 to Canterbury, in 1853 to Hereford, near Bristol, and in 1856 he finally retired from active service, in which he had been engaged for 63 years. The deceased [illegible] married [illegible] Captain James Bowen, R.N., died at Bayswater on the 16th inst. He entered the navy in 1801, and in that year, as active part of the bombardment of [illegible], received [illegible] a gratuity of acknowledgment accompanied under the hands of Nelson. In 1805 he was promoted to the [illegible], and commanded a boat at the battle of Navarino. In consideration of the services of this commendable officer he was raised to the rank of Companion in 1828. He became a Captain in 1841, and commanded the Canadian Lakes for three years, and afterwards the Queen [illegible] service, through the Indian campaign. In 1857 he became [illegible] Naval Aide-de-Camp to her Majesty.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Aug. 22.

We have a few more Beasts, but the demand is tolerably good, and in choice qualities there is no reduction. The supply of Sheep and Lambs is smaller than of late; trade for them is brisk at a slight advance. Trade continues very dull for Calves. Our foreign supply consists of 14[illegible] Beasts, 7880 Sheep, and 210 Calves, and 30 Pigs.

Beasts, 4820; Sheep & Lambs, 27,250; Calves, 270; Pigs, 300.

THURSDAY, Aug. 22.

There are a few more Beasts than on Thursday last; the demand is good, and Monday's quotations are fully supported. Sheep and Lambs are not quite so plentiful; they find a ready sale, and in some instances rather higher prices are obtained. There is no alteration in the Calf trade. From Germany and Holland there are 370 Beasts, 2150 Sheep, and 380 Calves; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 50 Beasts; from the northern and midland, 450 Beasts; and 122 Milch Cows from the home counties.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Aug. 22.

This morning's market was fairly attended, including several distant country buyers. The supply of Wheat from Essex was but moderate in quantity, and nearly all new, the quality and condition inferior to last week; from Kent there was a fair supply, consisting of about half old and half new: old commanded the prices of this day se'nnight, but the new must be quoted 1s. per qr. cheaper. Low priced qualities of foreign continue to meet with some attention, and quotations for all descriptions remain unaltered. Grinding Barley is in fair request at an advance of 6d. per qr. Beans and Peas bring last week's rates. Oats are a slow sale, and Russian and inferior qualities are 6d. to 1s. per qr. cheaper. Flour is unaltered in value. Of new white Mustard Seed there were about 2300 quarters on sale, but up to the close of the market scarcely a sample was disposed of.

FRIDAY, Aug. 26.

The weather during the last eight days has been splendid, until last evening, when we had some heavy thunder showers, which continued through the night. In the South harvest is approaching its termination, and very great progress has been made in the North. During the above interval much of the new Wheat brought to market in several districts was poor, light, and out of condition, weighing not more than 56 to 58 lbs., and the yield of the same is represented as disappointing, being nearly one-fifth short of what had been expected. Much of the Barley is sprouted. The fineness of the weather has had its usual effect upon the trade, and Wheat is generally quoted 1s. to 2s. lower, with very little doing. Oats and Beans have also been written cheaper in many markets; other descriptions of Spring Corn and Flour are unaltered in value. The arrivals from Southern Europe off the coast continue liberal, comprising during the week 19 cargoes of Wheat, 19 Maize, 2 Barley, 2 Beans, 1 Rye, 1 Millet, 2 Linseed. Most of the French corn markets advise a slow demand, and lower prices for Wheat and Flour. Flour was quoted in Paris yesterday 28s. 6d. to 32s. 6d. per 280 lbs. The arrivals of English grain and foreign Wheat this week are moderate, small of Barley, and of Oats very considerable. The English Wheat fresh up and left over from Monday constituted a fair show this morning, and factors being disinclined to accept of lower prices, it remained unsold late in the day. Of foreign very few sales were effected, and its value remains nominally as on Monday. Barley is a ready sale at fully late rates. For Oats there is a fair inquiry at a reduction of 6d. per qr.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Aug. 23.—The imports of both Wheat and Flour since this day se'nnight are quite on a small scale; of Indian Corn we have a moderate arrival. The weather in this locality has been most favourable for carrying the harvest during the last few days, but more northward they have had heavy rains. Markets again rule dull, and there is little disposition shown by either buyer or seller to do business: the former, however, has the advantage. We had only a thin attendance of buyers at our Corn Exchange this morning, and the demand for Wheat was on the most retail scale, at a reduction of 1d. to 2d. per cental; the value of new was very irregular. Flour was held firmly at previous rates, with a moderate consumptive inquiry. Indian Corn was not much dealt in; holders, however, were firm at the extreme quotations of last market. Oats and Oatmeal both very dull of sale. Egyptian Beans, Peas, and Barley were all the turn cheaper.

FRIDAY, Aug. 26.—Grain market very dull, and attendance limited. Wheat and Flour barely sustained Tuesday's quotations; other articles quiet, and without quotable change. Weather fine.

HOW TO BREW SPLENDID STRONG ALE, at 7*d* per Gallon, fine as Sherry, and an aroma equal to Burton Tenpenny. This new Practical Treatise is by a Derbyshire man of 28 years' attendance at the spigot and tun in the best brewery in the county. No brewing utensils required, only those for household use. This is guaranteed to be the best and cheapest mode to produce fine Ale ever made public. The above beautifully printed in large type can be had of the sole publishers for 12 Penny Post stamps. Sent post free to any address. Direct to FISHER & SON, Publishers, Kingsland, London, N.E. Established 1847

NOTICE.—Just appended to this universally prized Book, all the methods to make the improved Aerated Unfermented Ginger Beer, Soda Water, Lemonade, all the Cordials and Nectars, together with the Penny French Ices, the Delightful Summer Cooling Beverages, and all the French, American, and English cheap fruit drinks.

FRY AND SONS' CHOCOLATES AND COCOAS.—Victoria Chocolate, Bon Bons, Soluble Cocoa, &c., in great variety. These delicious beverages are now sold at very moderate prices, and many of them are highly economical.

FRY'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA is an article of unexceptionable quality. FRY'S SOLUBLE COCOA, in Hexagon packets, and FRY'S PEARL COCOA, are strongly recommended

FRY AND SONS MANUFACTURERS TO THE QUEEN.

Liebig, the celebrated Chemist, asserts that nitrogen is essential to the healthy action of the bile, and the growth, sustenance, and invigoration of the body. No stronger recommendation of Cocoa and Chocolate can therefore be given than the following statement:—Caffeine and Theine each contain only about 2·0 per cent., whilst Theobromine (or essence of Cocoa) contains upwards of 35 per cent. of nitrogen.

PRIZE MEDAL. PARIS EXHIBITION 1855.

METCALFE, BINGLEY, AND CO.'S New Pattern and Penetrating Tooth Brushes, Penetrating unbleached Hair Brushes, Improved Flesh and Clothes Brushes, and genuine Smyrna Sponges; and every description of Brush, Comb, and Perfumery for the Toilet. The Tooth Brushes search thoroughly between the divisions of the Teeth and clean them most effectually—the hairs never come loose. M., B., and Co. are sole makers of the Oatmeal and Camphor and Orris Root Soaps—sold in Tablets (bearing their names and address) at 6*d.* each; of METCALFE'S celebrated Alkaline Tooth Powder, 2*s.* per box; and of the New Bouquets.—Sole Establishment, 130B and 131 Oxford St., 2d and 3d doors west from Holles St., London, W.

HEALTH WITHOUT PHYSIC.—Nervousness effectually cured by a novel and most successful mode of treatment, discovered in America. The most convincing proof of the efficacy of this wonderful remedy, with other details, will be sent to any address on receipt of one stamp.—Address, Mr. HILL, 27, Alfred Place, Store Street, London, W.C.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.—During the summer season these diseases exact numberless victims from the thoughtless of any age or either sex. The first derangement of the stomach is neglected, and first irritation succeeded by inflammation soon extends into the bowels. In some severe cases, medicines, given internally, only aggravate the malady; what a blessing is it, then, that HOLLOWAY'S Ointment rubbed externally over the abdomen can arrest and cure the complaint. After being rubbed the abdomen should be loosely swathed in flannel to afford support and uniformity of temperature. Farinaceous food alone should be taken. Whenever practicable, HOLLOWAY'S Pills should be administered in appropriate doses unless increased irritation follow their use, when the cure can be accomplished by the Ointment.

News of the Week.

COUNT DE MORNY, the President of the French Legislative Body, has delivered a speech of great interest on the English alliance, in the form of an address to the Council-General of the Puy-de-Dome of which he is President. In this speech the Count adverts to the recent discussions in the British Parliament on the state of our national defences, and to the suspicion that the EMPEROR NAPOLEON has long cherished the desire of avenging Waterloo and St. Helena by an invasion of England. He adverts also to the charge brought against the EMPEROR by a portion of the English press, that he concluded peace with Russia and Austria with the sole intention of making those Powers his allies and of attacking England with their assistance. These charges Count DE MORNY answers by declaring that when he went to the coronation at Moscow in 1856, the instructions he received from the EMPEROR were "not to allow any encroachment to be made on the English alliance:" and that "to suspect the EMPEROR of preparing in the dark, without any other motive than ancient enmities, an enterprise that would throw into confusion the gravest interests in the world, and would be the most fatal blow to civilisation, is to doubt his word and his heart as a Sovereign and a man." With regard to the Italian question, he says that if the statesmen of England, who now consider that enough has not been done for the Italians, "had consented before the war to express the sympathies which they now manifest," it is to be presumed that "the affairs of Italy would have been regulated by diplomacy." "We live," he says, "in a period when the hatreds of castes and families have succumbed from the increased mildness of manners;" and he concludes by saying that the only way in which the EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH proposes "to avenge Waterloo on England" is by carrying on a friendly rivalry with her in commercial intercourse, and in the occupations and labours of peace; by completing the means of transport and locomotion throughout France; by reducing the cost price of all raw materials and manufactured articles; by imitating the English in what the French are deficient: by gaining strength from the spirit of association without continually requiring the support of the Government; by endeavouring to conquer, and by prudent use preserve, the liberties which make a man absolute master of his own welfare, and which "have no other limits than the wrong done to others." The Constitutionnel of Tuesday contained an article of semi-official significance on the attitude of France in reference to the question of the Italian Duchies. It states that the EMPEROR having agreed at Villafranca to the restoration of the former reigning Princes, has addressed words of reconciliation to the Duchies. HIS MAJESTY has not yet given up all hope of success, and will fulfil loyally to the end his disinterested mission; but if he should not succeed in reuniting the Princes and the people in mutual accord, it is not his intention to force either the one or the other, nor is it his wish to follow the errors of the ancient Austrian policy, whose armed intervention in the affairs of the Peninsula "has ceased for ever." "We have given," it says, "to the Italian people advice which we believe wise and prudent, which it will grieve us it they do not follow, but which we could not press upon them by force. To us Italy owes her independence; we shall not take away from her to-day what we have given her but yesterday." In connection with this article, we may state that Count LINATI, the Podesta of Parma, has returned to that city from Paris—whither he had been sent on a mission to ascertain the exact intentions of the EMPEROR—and has reported the following answer of HIS MAJESTY, made at the very moment that the soldiers of the Italian war were marching through the streets of the French capital:—"Tell the populations that have sent you to me that my arms shall never do violence to their wishes, and that I will not permit any other foreign force to commit violence against you."

Home News.

DEPARTURE OF THE QUEEN FOR SCOTLAND.—The Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince Alfred, Prince Arthur, and the Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa, arrived at Buckingham Palace on Monday afternoon from Osborne. At half-past 8 in the evening her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince Arthur and the Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa, left the Palace for the King's Cross station of the Great Northern Railway, where a special train was in attendance to convey the Royal party to Scotland. Mr. Packe, M.P., and Mr. Astell, M.P., were in attendance on the part of the board of directors to receive her Majesty. The Queen and Prince Consort alone occupied the state saloon, which was fitted up as a sleeping apartment. The Princesses occupied a second saloon with Lady Churchill, and a third was devoted to the accommodation of the young princes. The train left King's Cross punctually at 9 o'clock. At Biggleswade, where the first stoppage for water took place, her Majesty expressed her perfect satisfaction with the arrangements made for her convenience and comfort. Shortly afterwards the curtains of the Royal carriage were drawn, the lights dimmed, and her Majesty retired to rest. The train stopped during the night at the appointed stations, viz.: Peterborough, Newark, Doncaster, and York; but the Royal travellers made no sign at either place and were not disturbed. At Doncaster Mr. Denison, chairman of the Great Northern, was in attendance, and at York the directors of the North-Eastern took silent charge of the train, and attended it to Berwick, at which place the directors of the North British took charge of it, and accompanied it to Edinburgh. The curtains of the Royal carriage were not withdrawn until the train stopped on Scottish soil at Dunbar. The Queen arrived at the St. Margaret's station, Edinburgh, at 8 o'clock on Tuesday morning, 10 minutes in advance of the appointed time. Her Majesty was met by the Prince of Wales, who entered the Royal carriage and saluted his illustrious parents as the train drew up. The Duke of Buccleuch, Colonel of the county militia, and Lord Melville, Commandant of the district, with the Lord Provost, Sheriff, &c., were in attendance to receive her Majesty. The Queen having thanked the railway officials for their attention, entered one of the Royal carriages, and amid the acclamations of a great crowd of her Scottish subjects drove through the park to Holyrood Palace. The Queen's arrival was announced to the city by a Royal salute from the Castle heights, and a detachment of the 16th Lancers escorted her Majesty from the railway station to Holyrood. The Queen rode in an open landau, accompanied by the Prince Consort, the Princess Alice, and the Prince of Wales. The Princesses Louisa and Helena followed in another open carriage, accompanied by Lady Churchill and Sir George Grey. Prince Arthur rode in another carriage, with General Grey and Sir Charles Phipps, and the members of the Royal suite followed in other carriages. The way to Holyrood was lined by the 16th Lancers from Piershill, a detachment of Royal Artillery, with field train from Leith Fort, the Royal Sussex Militia from Glasgow, and the West Yorkshire Rifles from Edinburgh Castle, the last regiment furnishing the guard of honour at Holyrood. Along the whole way to the Palace, above a mile, the Royal party were followed by enthusiastic cheering. After arriving at Holyrood the Queen did not again leave the Palace till 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when her Majesty, with the Prince of Wales, the Princesses, and Prince Arthur, and several members of the suite, drove out in three open carriages and four to Dalkeith House, the seat of the Duke of Buccleuch, about seven miles distant, and, returning to town about 7, drove through some of the principal streets. The Prince Consort, in her Majesty's absence, took a short walk in the neighbourhood of the Palace. On Wednesday morning at a quarter to 9 the Queen, Prince Consort, and Royal family left Holyrood Palace in open carriages for St. Margaret's Station, attended by the usual military escort. At the station the Prince of Wales (who is to prolong his stay at Holyrood till the 10th inst.) took leave of the Queen, and the Royal train proceeded on its journey, arriving at the Ferryhill Junction, Aberdeen, at 1.55, and at Banchory at 2.30 P.M. At the latter place her Majesty alighted and took luncheon. At 3 o'clock the Royal party entered their travelling carriages, and proceeded to Balmoral, where they arrived shortly after 6 o'clock.

THE COURT.—On Friday Prince di Carini had an audience of the Queen at Osborne and presented his letters of recall, and Le Commandeur Targioni presented his credentials as Minister from Naples. Senor Castellanos had an audience, and presented his credentials as Minister from Dominica. In the afternoon the Queen and Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, and the Princesses, accompanied by Lord Palmerston and Lord Sydney, took a cruise in the Victoria and Albert. In the evening her Majesty had a dinner party, and at night in honour of the Prince Consort's birthday, the Royal yachts lying off Osborne were illuminated, and a display of fireworks took place. On Saturday Lord Palmerston left Osborne for London. The Queen, Prince Consort, Princess Alice, and Prince Arthur went in the Fairy to Portsmouth, where her Majesty inspected the headquarters of the 32d Regiment on their arrival from Lucknow.

PRINCE ALFRED, attended by Major Cowell, left Buckingham Palace on Monday evening for Dover, and embarked at 11 o'clock the same night in the Admiralty steam yacht Vivid, for Calais, whence he proceeded by way of Paris to Marseilles, to join the Euryalus at Malta, his Royal Highness's leave of absence having expired.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, the Commander-in-Chief, has left town for a few weeks' tour in Germany.

THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE on Saturday morning visited the Great Eastern, and remained on board for three hours. The Russian frigate Baian sailed on Sunday for the Baltic.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Monday afternoon, having been suddenly convened immediately after Lord Palmerston's return from Osborne on Saturday. Those members of the Cabinet who were absent at a distance from the metropolis were summoned to the Council by telegraph.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—Accounts from Biarritz state that the Emperor and Empress are not expected to reach that place until about the 10th of this month, and that their Majesties will not prolong their stay at the villa beyond the 25th, when the Court will return to Paris, and then proceed to Compiègne some days earlier than was at first expected. It is asserted that the Emperor will shortly proceed to Cherbourg, and also pay a second visit to Châlons. The Constitutionnel of Tuesday contained an article on the Duchies, which is generally regarded as of a semi-official character. The following is an extract from this important article:—

"The Emperor at Villafranca accepted, without any sort of repugnance, the restoration of the princes. At the hour of reconciliation he was unwilling to remember that at Solferino some amongst them were in the ranks of his enemies. It was not against those princes that he directed his arms, but against the political system of which they were the accomplices or the first victims. It was more for the sake of the populations than for that of the princes, that the French Government, faithful to its promises, caused the language of reconciliation to be employed in the three Duchies. It has not yet abandoned all hope of success, and it will endeavour to the end to fulfil loyally its disinterested mission. But if it should not succeed in uniting the princes and the populations in a mutual and profitable accord, it will not do violence either to one or the other. To act between them by an armed intervention would be to walk in the path of the old Austrian policy which was defeated at Magenta—it would be to exercise the right of intervention which was torn to pieces at Solferino. It is not consistent either with the dignity or the honour of France to do herself what she condemns in others. Austria has lost for ever the profitable monopoly of armed intrusions in the affairs of the peninsula, and we will never claim it for our own advantage. If at Rome an army of occupation is charged with the mission of protecting the Sovereign Pontiff, it is because there is at Rome not only an Italian Prince in presence of his subjects, but the Pope, the Father of the Faithful, whose repose and security it is important to us to secure. At Rome we do not defend a private cause; we defend in the interest of France and in that of Italy herself the cause of Catholicism. Everywhere else the princes are subject to the common law, and that law requires that no one shall place himself between them and their people. As friends, whose devotedness ought not to be forgotten, we believe that we have more right than others to give to the populations of the Duchies advice which we consider wise and prudent. If they do not follow it we may feel regret, but we shall never endeavour to impose it on them by force. In a word, Italy owes to us her independence, and we will not take back to-morrow what we have given to-day."

Count de Morny, President of the Legislative Body, has delivered an address to the Council General of the Puy de Dome, in which he made the following remarks on the English alliance:—

"You have participated, gentlemen, in the enthusiasm excited by our victories. you have shared in the unanimous gratitude of France for the great moderation of the Emperor. But you find it difficult to understand how his Majesty's evident desire to prevent a European conflagration can have caused in England the newspaper articles, the Parliamentary speeches, and the warlike preparations of which so much has been said. You know, without doubt, by means of what logic the English explain their apprehensions. They say, 'Our press is free; the French press is not so; therefore insults have not the same importance in one as in the other.' That is quite an error. There are in France no means of preventing a journal from publishing what seems to it right; the Government is only armed against the press with the power of warning and of suspension, which are repressive measures. The Englishman adds, 'The Emperor retains at the bottom of his heart the desire to avenge Waterloo and St. Helena; he only concluded peace with the Emperor of Russia in order to make him an ally; he has been generous to the Emperor of Austria only to make a friend of him also; and with that double alliance he intends to attack England.' I do not think it inopportune to tell you what I think on that subject. We live at a period when the hatreds of castes and families have succumbed from the increased mildness of manners, and at which national hatred and prejudice have been effaced by civilisation. The new generations have something else to do than to avenge the past; they are too enlightened to act on any other motive than the interest of the present and the future. The Emperor and the present generation of Frenchmen are not of those of whom it can be said, 'They have learned nothing and forgotten nothing.' As to the generous proceedings between the three Emperors, to ascribe them to the speculative object indicated above, is it not to reduce to the proportions of a paltry theatrical intrigue the regulation of the great interests of Europe, and to degrade the elevated sentiments which God has placed in the heart of a Sovereign for the welfare of humanity? Assuredly, I am better able than any other to appreciate the loyal fidelity of the Emperor and his pacific intentions: for when he did me the honour to send me to Russia to draw closer the relations between the two empires, the part of my instructions which dominated every other was this—'Do not allow any encroachment to be made on the English alliance, and, far from endeavouring to divide the great Powers, on the contrary point out that if they had the good sense to unite and to come to an understanding, all the paltry difficulties which arise in Europe may be solved peaceably.' Need I recall to your memory the incidents which preceded the war with Austria in order to prove that the Emperor Napoleon, while desiring to free Italy, and to disengage the frontier of France from Austrian pressure, would have preferred attaining that object by a Congress, rather than by a war? The number and the state of our army at the moment when the ultimatum of Austria was issued prove this. And if the statesmen of England who now consider that enough has not been done for the Italians had consented before the war to express the sympathies which they now manifest, it is to be presumed that the affairs of Italy would have been regulated by diplomacy. I repeat that, after all the Emperor has done and said, to suspect him of preparing in the dark, without any other motive than ancient enmity, an enterprise which would throw into confusion the gravest interests in the world, and would be the most fatal blow to civilisation, is to doubt his word and his heart as a Sovereign and a man. Alas! gentlemen, perhaps those in England who are spreading these alarms believe in them no more than you or I do; but by exciting the national susceptibility, by flattering certain popular instincts, the circulation of the journal is increased, the popularity of the public orator is extended. None the less do they commit a bad action, for they indispose the two countries to one another; they excite vague distrusts; and this they do so efficiently that on a given day a trifling incident, a misunderstanding, easy to be arranged under a good state of feeling, might become a serious complication under a state of reciprocal susceptibility. However, time and the determination of the Emperor to lead France into the occupations and labours of peace will, I doubt not, triumph over these chimerical fears. That, gentlemen, is the sort of war which we must wage with England. Let us resolutely complete our means of conveyance and of locomotion; let us put them in communication with our coalpits; let us reduce the cost price of all raw materials and of all our manufactured articles; let us imitate the English in what we are deficient; let us gain strength from the spirit of association without continually requiring the support of the Government; let us endeavour to conquer, and by prudent use preserve, the liberties which make a man absolute master of his own welfare, and which have no other limits than the wrongs done to others. Yes, let us make on England a manufacturing and commercial war—a conflict of progress and civilisation, loyal, avowable, and which will be advantageous to all. That is what the Emperor desires; let us second his efforts. Already is the amnesty a work of pacification, which is the prelude of the system into which we are about to enter. Let us hope that it will be so understood by everybody, especially by those who are the object of it."

The French marshals have left Paris for their respective commands. Several of the journals assert that an eighth great military division is to be created at Nantes, to which Marshal Vaillant will be appointed. Marshal Niel, to whom the public is indebted for an account of the siege of Sebastopol, is said to be preparing a work on the late campaign in Italy. Prince Metternich, Austrian Ambassador at Paris, has left for St. Sauveur, and will afterwards proceed to Vienna, where he will remain a few days.

SPAIN.—The Spanish Government has ordered the Governor of Fernando Po, the new Spanish settlement in the Gulf of Guinea, to refuse the petition of the Governor of the Portuguese islands of Santo Tomé and Principe, claiming some fugitive slaves (belonging to certain merchants of those islands) who had sought refuge in Fernando Po. The Espana confirms the fact that negotiations of peace between France and Spain on the one hand, and the Emperor of Cochin China on the other, have been entered into.

SWEDEN.—The Government is preparing a bill relative to the extension of religious liberty, to be presented to the Diet of the kingdom which is to meet this autumn. A somewhat similar measure was brought before the last Diet, but rejected by the order of the nobility and clergy. A general map of the forests of Sweden and Norway, which also indicates the configuration of the soil, has just been completed under the patronage of the young King, who has a taste for scientific pursuits.

PRUSSIA.—Accounts from Berlin of the 25th ult.

state that the great heat has produced a bad effect on the King's health, and it was feared that he would die in the night. In consequence of this change his Majesty was not removed from Sans Souci to Potsdam, as had been intended. His Majesty's hearing is said to have become as much affected as his eyesight.—The town council of Berlin has subscribed 1600*l.* to a foundation in honour of Humboldt, destined to afford aid to learned men and travellers in the prosecution of the studies to which he devoted his long life.

SWITZERLAND.—Accounts from Zurich state that on Saturday there was no Conference, but the Plenipotentiaries of France and Sardinia had a meeting. On Sunday they again had a conference, and couriers were despatched to Milan and Turin. On Monday and Tuesday private conferences took place between the Plenipotentiaries of France and Austria. On Tuesday there was a meeting of the French and Sardinian Plenipotentiaries. It is believed that the Plenipotentiaries will be enabled to quit Zurich at the latest in a fortnight.

AUSTRIA.—The Austrian frigate Novara has arrived at Trieste from her voyage round the world, in company with the Austrian squadron, with the yacht of the Archduke Ferdinand Maximilian at their head. It is said that the commercial objects of the voyage have proved a complete failure.

MALTA.—Four seamen, charged with being the ringleaders in the late mutiny at Castellammare, on board the Marlborough, flag-ship of Admiral Fanshawe, were tried by a court-martial on the 25th ult., Rear-Admiral Codrington officiating as president. The prisoners pleaded "Not Guilty," and after the examination of eight or nine witnesses, chiefly officers, in support of the charge, it was held not to be made out to the extent expected, and on the 26th three were condemned to receive 50 lashes each and two years' imprisonment for mutinous conduct, and the fourth to one year's imprisonment. These four seemed to have been picked out from 300 or 400, and identified chiefly by their voices, as the decks were in darkness from the closing of the ports.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—A soldier of the 4th Regiment was carried off by a shark while bathing in Corfu harbour on the 7th ult. Sir H. Storks has since issued a proclamation offering the sum of 60 dollars as a reward for every shark caught alive or killed in the harbour.

RUSSIA.—Letters from St. Petersburg state that, in consequence of a report from Prince Galatzin on the scandalous state of the administration of the charitable funds of that city, the Emperor has dismissed the vice-president and all the officials connected therewith, at the same time depriving them of the privileges to which their length of service would have entitled them.

ITALY.—The deputation charged by the Tuscan Government with the tender of the Grand-Ducal crown to Victor Emmanuel II., has left Florence for Turin. The deputies are Count Ugolino della Gherardesca, the lineal descendant of Dante's Count Ugolino, the Marquis Franceschi, representing Pisa; Count Borghesi, Siena; the Cavaliere Adami, Leghorn; and the Advocate Giorgini, the reporter on the motion for annexation carried by universal suffrage in the National Assembly on the 20th July. Orders have been given at Genoa and Turin to receive the deputation with great solemnity. A deputation of the National Assembly of Modena, composed of the Commander Malincini (President), Marquis Fontanelli, and Count Ariani, left Modena on Monday for Paris, on a special mission to the Emperor. Advices from Bologna state that the elections throughout the Romagna have taken place with the greatest tranquillity and order, and that the Assembly met on Thursday for the first time. Count Reiset and other representatives of foreign states were present at the sitting. The Government of Bologna has dissolved a regiment, in which some Mazzini volunteers had attempted to cause an excitement. Count Linati, Podesta of Parma, who had been sent on a mission to Paris, has returned to Parma and issued a proclamation to his fellow citizens, stating that the parting words which the Emperor addressed to him were:—"Tell those who have sent you to me that my army shall never be employed in opposing the wishes of the people, and that I will never allow the armed intervention of other Powers to commit violence against you." Garibaldi visited Parma on the 22d ult., and was most enthusiastically received. The people attempted to unharness the horses, and to draw the carriage in which he made his entry, but he would not allow this and exclaimed "Ne faisons pas Garibaldisme, soyons Italiens." The Provisional Government of Modena have published two letters found in the archives of the duchy, addressed by the ex-duke to his Foreign Minister, Count Forni, in 1855, in which he uses the most virulent language against the Emperor of the French, and laments the success of the Western Powers in the Crimea. The new Tuscan Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs, M. Vincenzio Salvagnoli, has so far sanctioned the request of a memorial submitted to the Government of Florence by the Italian Protestants, that they will henceforth be allowed full liberty of worship, and will no longer be subjected to the vexatious obstacles thrown in the way of the registration of the births of their children, by which their civil rights were threatened to be seriously affected. Advices from Rome to the 27th ult. state that the Duke de Grammont has held a conference with Cardinal Antonelli on the subject of the re-organisation of the Legations. Cardinal Falconieri, Archbishop of Ravenna, died in that city on the 22d. He was the last of his race, and was nearly 65 years of age. He was invested with the purple by Gregory XVI. in 1838. The town of Norcia, near Spoleto, in Umbria, was totally destroyed by an earthquake on the 22d ult. About 70 dead bodies have already been dug out of the ruins, and many others are missing.

TURKEY.—Advices have been received from Constantinople to the 24th ult. stating that the Sultan had been on the point of death from a severe attack of fever, but his health is now restored. The rumour of the modification of the Ministry is unfounded. M. Zohrab, who was for some time Turkish Consul-General in London, has been appointed Consul at Rome.

SYRIA.—Fears are entertained of an extension of the civil war in this province. The Druses are devastating the country by setting fire to the people's property, and the Europeans are flying from the town. Some silk factories had hoisted the French flag for protection. The French Consul had sent for troops, but the Turkish force was insufficient.

MOROCCO.—It is reported at Gibraltar that the Emperor of Morocco is dead. Six hundred Moors have attacked Ceuta, but have been put to flight by the Governor at the head of his garrison, and eight killed. The Spanish Government has sent reinforcements by steamer, and intends to despatch a further force of 10,000 men to exact satisfaction. A shot was fired at the English steamer Indus, while passing through the Straits of Gibraltar, from the Spanish fort of Tarifa; but it was supposed to be only with the desire of obtaining information respecting the disturbances between the Moors and Spaniards at Ceuta.

INDIA.—By the arrival of the overland mail we have news from Bombay to the 5th of August, and from Calcutta to the 29th July. The following are the details:—

Calcutta.—On the night of the 26th July a cyclone passed over Calcutta which caused immense destruction of life and property, swept away the strongest telegraphic lines for miles and wrecked two steamers and several sailing ships in the Hooghly. The Candia mail steamer was off Saugor when the gale commenced but escaped without injury. In obedience to the Govenor-General's Proclamation, the 27th of June was observed as a day of general thanksgiving for our successes during the late campaign. The Parsees, Jews, and Hindoos joined in the religious observance of the day, but the Mohamedans are said to have abstained from doing so.

Oude.—Lord Canning has transmitted to the Home Government a report by Mr. Montgomery on the administration of Oude, in which his lordship replies to Lord Stanley's despatch on the Oude proclamation, and shows that it was never cancelled as Lord Stanley alleged, but was put in force in every case in which there was persistence in hostility. The King of Oude has accepted the pension of 36,000 rupees, granted by the Indian Government.

Fyzabad.—Rajah Joylall Sing, of Mhow, has been arrested on the charge of having invited Nana Sahib to take Fyzabad when the British troops should be withdrawn to Europe on account of the war.

Nepaul.—The Nana, Bala Rao, and other rebel chiefs, are scattered on the borders of Nepaul, with 8000 men, all of whom have been suffering from sickness, accelerated by privations and exposure. It is said that a servant of Khan Bahadoor has decamped with all the old man's money while he was lying sick with jungle fever. The Begum is under restraint at Naycote; she is closely watched by the Nepaulese, although she is not a prisoner. She possesses plenty of money, and has a bodyguard of 1000 men.

AUSTRALIA.—The steamer Northam with the Australian mail was totally lost on the 20th August, on the Nautilus reef, near Jeddah, in the Red Sea. All the passengers and chief part of the mails were landed on an adjacent island. Arrangements had been made to convey them to Aden in the Benares and Cyclops, from whence they will be sent to Suez by the Simla.

UNITED STATES.—Capt. Eldridge of the American barque Amazon reports the discovery of an island in the Pacific Ocean several hundreds of miles from any land laid down on the charts. A church for deaf mutes has recently been opened in New York, the only edifice in the world set apart for this unfortunate class. The project was undertaken by the Rev. Thomas Gallandet, who is well known by reputation as an instructor of the deaf and dumb.—M. Blondin has carried a man across Niagara on a tight rope.

WEST INDIES.—A riot connected with certain questions of litigation between a person named Buie, claiming certain rights in a property called Florence Hall, and the rightful owners of that property, has taken place at Trelawney, and was not suppressed until the military were called out, three females shot dead, and several other rioters severely wounded.—The bill to found medical exhibitions in connection with the public hospital of Demerara and Essequibo has been passed by the Court of Policy, and has been sent home for her Majesty's confirmation.

NEWFOUNDLAND.—Extraordinary mineral discoveries have lately been made in this colony, which will become the Cornwall of North America. Specimens of copper pyrites containing from 8 to 12 per cent. of metal have been taken from a lode 50 feet in breadth which crops out upon the surface, so that thousands of tons can be obtained at a trifling outlay. Several rich lodes of lead and a valuable vein of silver ore have also been discovered.

MEXICO.—Miramon has dissolved the Cabinet, and General Wool has met with a disastrous defeat. Degollado has taken command of the Liberal army, to march upon the capital. The Archbishop has excommunicated the Liberal party on account of their decree for the nationalisation of the church property. This decree however has everywhere else been received with favour, even in the city of Mexico. Captain Aldham, Commander of her Majesty's naval forces, has visited the President, and announced that by order of the British Government he would not enforce the measures heretofore contemplated for the redress of complaints, nor do anything to embarrass the Administration. Mr. Whitehead, the commissioner of the Mexican bondholders in Mexico, who has been a resident there for 30 years, has been banished the country by the Miramon Government, and has returned to England by this packet.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE CASE OF DR. SMETHURST.—No answer has yet been received from the Secretary of State to the memorials and other communications that have been made to him from different quarters, applying for a respite of the prisoner, on the grounds that he has been convicted on insufficient testimony, and that he is probably innocent of the crime for which he is sentenced to die. There is no change whatever in the demeanour of the prisoner, who appears to be impressed with a belief that if he does not receive a free pardon the capital sentence will at all events be remitted. The Lord Chief Baron has been applied to in reference to the case, and all the papers have been submitted to him; and it is understood that he has distinctly stated that his opinion with reference to the case has not been in any way altered by the statements that have been published since the verdict of the jury has been delivered, and the supposed new facts that have been brought to light, and that he still thinks the prisoner was justly convicted of the crime; but he at the same time said that if the advisers of the Crown thought that any reasonable doubt had been created as to the righteousness of the verdict he should not think it his duty to offer any opposition to the prisoner being recommended to the merciful consideration of the Crown. On Tuesday afternoon the Lord Chief Baron had an interview of nearly two hours' duration with Sir G. C. Lewis at the Home Office, and on Thursday his lordship had another interview with the right hon. gentleman. On the same day Mr. H. B. Sheridan, M.P., accompanied by Mrs. Smethurst, and Mrs. Smith, the landlady of the boarding-house at Bayswater, where all the parties had resided, had an interview with Sir G. Lewis, and presented a petition to the Queen, signed by Mrs. Smethurst, praying for a remission or commutation of sentence. Mr. Waddington was present during the interview, which lasted an hour and a half. Yesterday morning Mr. Tindal Atkinson, of the Middle Temple, presented a memorial in favour of a commutation of the sentence signed by 29 practising members of the bar. Three of the medical witnesses for the defence, Dr. B. W. Richardson, Dr. J. L. W. Thudicum, and Dr. Francis C. Webb, have addressed a letter to the Home Secretary, explaining their views of the case in a scientific point of view, leaving circumstantial evidence entirely aside, and stating that they have come to the following conclusions:—

"1. The symptoms and pathology of Isabella Bankes were consistent with dysentery occurring in a pregnant and previously unhealthy woman, and her death is fairly ascribable to such producing cause. 2. The symptoms and pathology of Isabella Bankes are not consistent with the hypothesis of poisoning by arsenic, by antimony, or by both these poisons, nor is death fairly ascribable to them. 3. There is no chemical proof whatever that either antimony, arsenic, or any other irritant poison was ever feloniously administered to Isabella Bankes."

Dr. Tyler Smith, physician to the Hospital for Women, was also published a letter stating his belief that, looking to the fact of Miss Bankes's pregnancy, and the known disorders excited by that condition in some constitutions, the symptoms and post mortem appearances were not inconsistent with disease and death from natural causes. The following letter from Mrs. Smethurst, the wife of the convict, was published on Saturday in the daily papers:—

"Sir,—It is with the most painful reluctance that I address you, but I feel bound, from a sense of duty and justice, to bring before you one or two facts—small in themselves, but tending to great results—which, if known, may remove from my unhappy husband some of the unjust suspicions and prejudices which have fallen upon him. Since our marriage—30 years ago—up to the time of his departure with Miss Bankes, we have lived together in perfect happiness and contentment. I have always received from my husband the most uniform kindness and attention. I have had several illnesses, in all of which he has himself attended upon me both as medical man and nurse. He received no property whatever with me, and has not only supported himself and me entirely since our marriage, but, from the incapacity from illness of his younger brother to follow any calling, has supported him also. From my knowledge gained from long experience of my husband's humane character and amiable disposition, I believe him to be quite incapable of committing the crime of which he stands convicted. Up to this time his moral conduct has been irreproachable, and, without wishing to cast any reflection on the memory of the deceased Miss Bankes, I must express it as my opinion, grounded on my own observation, that the first advance came from her, although, unhappily, it met with too ready a reciprocity on his part. In answer to some observations made in respect to no one having visited my husband during his confinement, I beg to say that it is in accordance with his own wish; that I have frequently expressed my desire to do so, and many friends have expressed the same wish, which he has invariably declined—feeling that he could best support his great trial in strict seclusion.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, MARY SMETHURST."

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE.—The Conference of the Building Trades on Monday declared no dividend, but Messrs. Trollope's men were paid 12*s*. skilled, and 8*s*. unskilled labourers. A meeting of the executive of the Central Association of Master Builders was held on Tuesday, when Messrs. Trollope reported a considerable increase in their number of men. After a discussion conducted with closed doors, the Association adjourned for a week. A large meeting of operatives was held on Monday at the Surrey Gardens for the purpose of receiving a report and considering their present condition. About 8000 persons were present. Mr. Potter, the secretary, stated that the dividend declared last week had caused some dissatisfaction, but some difficulty was sure to arise when 14,000 or 15,000 men wanted payment. Messrs. Trollope's men had been on strike four weeks, and the amount paid to them in the first week was 14*s*. to skilled artisans, and 8*s*. to others—amounting to 180*l*.; in the second week, 20*s*. to skilled artisans, 15*s*. to others—amounting to 215*l*.; third week, 15*s*. to skilled artisans, 10*s*. to others—making 150*l*.; fourth week, 12*s*. to skilled artisans, 8*s*. to others—making 140*l*. The total income had been 1401*l*. 5*s*. 2*d*., and the expenditure 1337*l*. 12*s*. 7*d*., leaving a balance of about 60*l*. Committees had been established in Glasgow, Liverpool, Wolverhampton, Birmingham, Nottingham, Plymouth, Oxford, and other places, and special general meetings of trades had been called throughout the country for the purpose of raising subscriptions. Resolutions pledging the meeting not to resume work until the obnoxious "document" is withdrawn, was unanimously agreed to. On Thursday a preliminary meeting of the Anti-Strike Committee and non-Society men engaged in the building trades was held in the Adelaide Gallery, at which it was resolved to establish a fund for the relief of the men who are opposed to the strike and unconnected with the Society, and to present a requisition to Alderman Cubitt, inviting him to act as Treasurer. On Saturday a man called Thomas Carmady was charged at the Westminster Police Court with creating a crowd in the street, and threatening a carpenter in the employ of Messrs. Trollope, and using abusive language calculated to incite him to commit a breach of the peace. Although the evidence was not conclusive of an attempt to intimidate, there was no doubt that defendant had used insulting language in a thoroughfare, for which he was sentenced to pay a penalty of 20*s*., or be committed for 14 days; and for having used that which amounted to a threat, he was ordered to enter into recognisances in the sum of 20*l*. to keep the peace the for three months.

THE COMMISSIONAIRES.—The Commander-in-Chief has signified his approval of the system lately established to provide employment for wounded soldiers and sailors, and has taken the corps under his especial patronage. In addition to the 50 men at present employed in London, upwards of 20 more are employed in Liverpool and Manchester, and it is intended during the autumn to extend the advantages of the system to all the large cities in the kingdom, and thus secure to every wounded man of good character a certain means of occupation. Among the posts lately established in the metropolis are the General Post Office, London and North-Western and London and South-Western Railways, at the termini of which the directors allow men to be stationed.

RATING OF GOVERNMENT ESTABLISHMENTS.—The War Department and the Admiralty having consented to pay a fixed annual sum in lieu of rates to the various parishes containing Government establishments, a surveyor has been appointed to assess the present value of such works, upon which basis the payment will be fixed.

REVISION OF THE LITURGY.—A conference on this subject was held at Lord Ebury's residence in Park Street on the 24th ult., at which it was determined that steps should be immediately taken for ascertaining the sentiments of the laity. In the course of the meeting it was stated that the clergy are too much fettered by their engagements to be able to give free expression to their opinions, and that it is highly desirable that the public voice should be heard through the laity in a matter of so much importance. Hitherto the matter has been mainly confined to the House of Lords, but in the next session of Parliament a member of the House of Commons will bring forward the question in that House simultaneously with the renewal of Lord Ebury's annual motion in the Peers. Petitions are also to be got up in favour of the measure both in England and Ireland.

THE POISONING CASE AT POPLAR.—George Frederick Royal, alias Reynolds, alias Regnold, for whose apprehension the reward of 100*l*. was offered last week, on the charge of having murdered Zipporah Wright by administering a quantity of cantharides to her after her confinement, was apprehended on Monday at Upper Sydenham, where he has been working as a shoemaker ever since the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against him. He was examined on the same day at the Thames Police Court, and was remanded for a week.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—On Tuesday the great ship was officially entered "outwards" at the Custom House, by the commander, Captain Harrison; the destination named being New York. Few or no policies of insurance have been taken on her at Lloyd's, the underwriters being generally unwilling to transact any business until the completion of the trial trip, the reason assigned being the possibility of the vessel not getting safely out of the Thames. Mr. Lever last week made an amended offer to charter the ship, but the company again declined to entertain his proposition. On Saturday morning the Grand Duke Constantine visited the ship, and for upwards of three hours remained on board inspecting every part of her, from the lowest deck to the iron masts and colossal wooden yards. He expressed himself perfectly astonished at the magnitude of the whole undertaking for a commercial speculation, though, merely judging of it from a nautical point of view, he had little doubt of its success. He claimed for the Russian Government the credit of having the second largest vessel in the world—the General Admiral—though, as regarded fineness of lines and beauty of form, he considered the Great Eastern to as much surpass that man-of-war as she did in size and power. On leaving the vessel his Imperial Highness proceeded to Deptford to examine the new steering apparatus which has been invented for the Great Eastern by Mr. Langley, the ship-builder of that place. By means of this ingenious invention Captain Harrison or the officer of the watch on the bridge will be enabled to steer the ship by a signal indicator with as much certainty as if he guided the wheel himself. A small illuminated dial, with a moveable index, is fixed on the bridge in front of the officer of the watch, and connected with another of the same description in front of the men at the helm. Moving the index finger of the machine on the bridge to port or starboard moves the index of the machine before the helm at the same time, so that not a second is lost in putting the helm hard up or down. In the same manner the rudder itself is connected with another small dial before the helmsmen, which tells by its index that they have exactly obeyed orders, while this again, communicating with a similar machine on the bridge, shows the officer of the watch the instant his commands are executed. The movements of the latter dial being, of course, regulated by those of the rudder, the officer on duty has always the helm, as it were, under his eye, and can detect if the men suffer the vessel to deviate a quarter of a point from her course even for a second. The apparatus, moreover, by simply moving the index finger to hard aport opens up two red lights on the port side, and by moving it to starboard opens a double green one on the starboard side, thereby affording small vessels every facility for getting out of the ship's way.

FURTHER DISTURBANCES IN ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.—In spite of the precautions taken last week by the Bishop of London there was a repetition of the disturbances on Sunday, though not to a very serious extent. The morning service was conducted by the Rev. Frederick George Lee, S.C.L. of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. At the commencement of the service Mr. Lee appeared at the altar, to which he did reverence, in the vestments of a Roman Catholic priest. He knelt in front of the altar and intoned the prayers, and when the time came for reading the lessons that duty was performed by a layman, who ascended the desk dressed in a plain white surplice of a pattern similar to that which is worn by acolytes of the Church of Rome. At the close of the communion service Mr. Lee (who had previously dispensed with the Litany) ascended the pulpit in white robes, consisting of chasuble, manciple, stole, &c., the principal robe being a yellowish white cloak, fastened close round the neck, trimmed with broad gold lace embroidery, with a cross woven into the back. After Mr. Allen's lecture in the afternoon Mr. Lee was preparing to conduct the "Rector's service;" and as the church was thronged by an excited crowd of at least 1000 persons, it was evident that a serious disturbance might be expected, but the outbreak was prevented by the firmness of Mr. Thompson, the churchwarden, who went into the vestry and informed Mr. Lee that he would, in fulfilment of his duty, render him all the assistance he could in his performance of the service, but that he would not be responsible for the result if the service were persisted in. The result of the interview was at 4 o'clock made known by the churchwarden, who ascended the steps of the reading-desk and announced that the 4 o'clock service was suspended. Still the people were unwilling to leave the church. At length a man with vigorous lungs proposed that the doxology should be sung, and gave it out in due form. It was accordingly sung by the whole congregation, and at its close, and after a few hisses and groans, the churchwarden, with the assistance of the police, succeeded in clearing the church. The parish is in a high state of excitement. At a meeting of the vestry on Thursday it was unanimously resolved to call the Bishop of London's attention to the dress worn by the Rev. F. G. Lee on Sunday, and a vote of thanks was given to the churchwardens for their conduct on that occasion. Placards are posted in every direction calling upon the parishioners not to allow themselves to be fettered by Puseyism, but to enlist under the free banners of Protestantism.

SALE OF GAME OUT OF SEASON.—During the past 10 days several poulterers and game dealers have been summoned before the different police courts for having unlawfully in their possession certain head of black cocks, in contravention of the Game Act. The prosecutions were instituted by a Society which has recently been formed in connection with the Field newspaper for the prevention of the sale of game out of season, and which intends not only to prevent illegal traffic on the part of the licensed dealers, but also to assist them by preventing hawkers from selling the forbidden game about the streets. In some cases where the charge was proved, a small fine was inflicted with costs; in others, where the game had been consigned to the dealers from Scotland, the magistrates dismissed the case on the ground that the Act did not apply to Scotland; and in others where the summonses alleged sale, and no sale was proved, the informality was held to be fatal, and the summonses were dismissed. In the course of the inquiry the counsel for the Society said that they did not wish to press particularly against the licensed dealers, their chief object being to let them know the law and prevent an illegal traffic. At the same time they wished to call attention to the fact, that any person purchasing game of the men who sell in the streets is liable to a fine of 5*l*., and that the Society will take proceedings against such purchasers in all cases which may be brought under their notice.

AURORA BOREALIS.—On Monday morning a most brilliant display of aurora borealis was visible in the metropolis from soon after midnight till daylight. Vivid streams of light shot up from the horizon in the north, extending from east to west, and became at times red, presenting the appearance of the reflection from a large fire. The atmosphere was so strongly illuminated that it appeared as if the moon were shining, and streams of light, resembling the rays from the sun as reflected upwards from the back of a cloud, continued to be brilliantly visible during the whole time. The sky was remarkably clear, and the stars shone with a brilliancy that is unusual even in winter.

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES IN ST. PAUL'S.—The expenses incurred in fitting up St. Paul's for the Special Sunday Evening Services from Advent to Easter have been defrayed, and from the success attending this establishment preparations are now making for embellishing the aisle where the services are performed as well as for affording increased accommodation to the public. The enlargement of the organ, it is stated, is essentially necessary for properly conducting the choral services on these occasions, and the Dean and Chapter have appealed to the public for the necessary funds in order to render the organ worthy of its position in the metropolitan cathedral.

RE-DECORATION OF THE ROYAL EXCHANGE.—A large staff of artists under the direction of Mr. Sang are now engaged in re-embellishing the ambulatories of the Royal Exchange, one-half of which has already been completed. The designs are perfectly new, and are executed in real fresco, the colours being applied to the mortar while wet, and absorbed as it dries. Crystallisation takes places, and the work becomes part of the structure, permitting the application of the rudest means when necessary to cleanse it.

DESTRUCTION OF THE STEAM-BOAT PIER AT BATTERSEA.—On Thursday morning the tide in the river ran unusually strong, and carried away the Crystal Palace Steam-boat pier at Battersea, which now remains under the arches of Vauxhall Bridge. It is supposed that the piles were not driven sufficiently deep to render it secure.

WRECK OF A STEAMER AT LONDON BRIDGE.—On Wednesday morning as the Bride penny steamboat was leaving the pier at London Bridge on her trip to Westminster, she ran foul of a sunken lighter and was driven against the buttress of the bridge. The instant she struck the engineer, with great presence of mind, endeavoured to reverse the engines, but being unable to do so he blew the steam off. Had the power been left on a moment longer the boat must have exploded. She sunk however soon afterwards, but not until the passengers and crew were rescued, though for a time it was feared that several persons were drowned. The operation of raising the wreck commenced on Thursday, and it is said that the hull is not so much injured as to be past repairing.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's weekly return states that the health of London is now in an average state. The deaths in the week ending on Saturday, August 27, amounted to 1217, whereas the corrected average in the corresponding weeks of the previous years was 1120, if the two weeks of 1849 and 1854 are excluded, when cholera was epidemic. During the week the births of 840 boys and 870 girls, in all 1710 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1523.

Provincial.

Bath.—In consequence of the continued illness of the Right Rev. Bishop Carr, he has been compelled to resign the rectory of Bath, to which he was nominated in 1854, on the resignation of the Hon. and Rev. W. J. Brodrick. The rectory is worth about 800*l.* a year, and is in the gift of Mr. Simeon's Trustees.

Bradford.—The Musical Festival in aid of the funds of the local Infirmary took place last week with complete success. It commenced on Tuesday evening with Haydn's Creation, the evening performance of the oratorio being an innovation intended to meet the convenience of the working classes. On Wednesday morning the Dettingen "Te Deum" was performed, with a selection from Judas Maccabæus. On Thursday morning Mendelssohn's St. Paul (which created so lively an impression at the festival of 1853) was performed; and on Friday morning The Messiah. The principal singers were Madame Clara Novello, Mrs. Sunderland, Madlle. Tietjens, Madame Nantier Didiée, Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Giuglini, Signor Belletti, Mr. Santley, and Signor Badiali.

Carlisle.—On Saturday afternoon Schaw's Hotel, at Gilsland, well known to tourists in that locality, was totally destroyed by fire. It is supposed that the fire was caused by the overheating of one of the numerous flues in the establishment. There were about 200 visitors staying at the hotel at the time but no serious accident occurred, and the damage is covered by insurance in several offices.

Dover.—An inquest was held on the 24th ult. before the borough coroner on the body of Jeremiah Hammond, a Dover pilot, who, with three others, lost their lives by the schooner Robert Garden being run down by the Ondine screw steamship, off the South Foreland, early on the morning of the 7th ult. The jury returned a verdict to the effect that death was caused by the collision, and that the said collision and loss of life was attributable to Capt. James Hunt, the master of the Ondine, neglecting to port his helm in time to pass astern of the schooner. The coroner said the verdict amounted to one of Manslaughter, and it was arranged that Captain Hunt should put in bail to answer the charge at the next assizes.—An extensive series of manœuvres was executed last week in order to show the capacity of the entire range of fortifications in this garrison, from the most distant battery on the east of the castle to the last gun west of the citadel, to resist an attack. The whole of the heavy guns in position at the different batteries between these points were thus brought into operation, and the Duke of Cambridge, who was present, expressed his entire satisfaction with the result.

Durham.—George Benning, who was sentenced to death at the last assizes for attempting to shoot his sweetheart at Southwick, has had his punishment commuted to penal servitude for 15 years.

Gloucester.—On Friday morning a respite during her Majesty's pleasure was received for Ellen Rutter, who was sentenced to death at the assizes for the murder of her husband; and it is expected that the sentence will be commuted to transportation for life. The respite is attributed not to any sympathy for the woman, who has been a bad character all her life and has admitted her guilt, but the fact of the brutal treatment she had experienced from her husband, and which constituted the grounds upon which the jury recommended her to mercy.

Hitchin.—An accident which has been attended with severe, and possibly fatal results, happened a few days since at an archery meeting held in the grounds of Mr. W. Wilshire (late M.P. for Yarmouth), near this town. Mrs. Chesshyre, the wife of an Essex clergyman, who was among the party, dressed in the prevailing style of fashion, suddenly sat down on the grass, and in so doing, snapped one of the steel hoops which supported her dress. Unfortunately the sharp end penetrated her body, and inflicted a severe internal wound. Medical attendance was fortunately at hand, but the hemorrhage was stopped with the greatest difficulty. The lady still remains in a precarious state.

Iver.—A painful circumstance occurred a few days since in this village. A young man, named Moss, had been in a desponding state from disappointment in love, and his medical attendant directed that he should be watched, as he would probably commit some rash act. He was watched, but he eluded the vigilance of the watchers, and committed suicide by hanging himself. An inquest was duly held, and a verdict returned of Temporary Insanity. The coroner issued his warrant for interment, and the curate, the Rev. H. Horsman, in the absence of the rector, the Rev. W. S. Ward, was informed that the funeral would take place on the following Wednesday. He replied that he could not officiate, and would not insult the Almighty by reading the funeral service over one who had made away with himself. In vain the churchwarden requested him to perform the service. The body was therefore left in the church all night, and the churchwarden wrote to the Bishop of Oxford, who sent an express commanding the curate to bury the body without delay, and to make the fullest apology for his conduct. This was done, but the excitement in the locality still continues.

Jersey.—The fine schooner Alca, the property of Captain Phillimore, R. Y. S., late of the Grenadier Guards, was totally lost on the night of the 18th ult., on her passage from Alderney to Jersey, by running on a reef of rocks 30 feet above the sea, at low water, owing to the ignorance of the Alderney pilot. The yacht went down in eight fathoms in less than 20 minutes after striking. Captain Phillimore, Mr. Delmé Radcliffe, his son, and 14 more souls, were saved, having barely time to gain the three boats and leave the wreck. They had then to row in the dark to St. Helier's, 12 miles distant, against wind and tide, which set like a sluice through a passage studded with sharp rocks; and after seven hours of hard labour they reached that port, saving only the clothes they had on. Not a particle of the valuable property on board could be rescued, as the yacht had gone to pieces before daylight. Captain Phillimore's loss is not less than 7000*l.* The Alca was a new vessel, built by Camper, in 1857.

Leeds.—On Saturday the two men named William Appleby and Walter Bearder, suspected of being the persons who murdered Mr. Richard Broughton, of Roundhay, on the 6th ult., were examined before the sitting magistrates. The prisoners had been brought by a writ of habeas corpus from the House of Correction at Wakefield, where they are at present awaiting their trial for a burglary committed at Batley. Several witnesses were examined, and the prisoners were remanded to a future day. The evidence affecting them was not conclusive. Three or four persons deposed that they were like two men seen near the place of the murder a short time before the murder, and the pawnbroker's assistant, who received the watch in pledge, could not identify either of the prisoners as the man who pawned it, but said that Bearder very much resembled the man. The police hope to be able to obtain further evidence before the prisoners are again brought up for examination.

Liverpool.—After the jury returned an open verdict in the case of the seaman who died from injuries inflicted upon him on board the American ship Conqueror, the American Consul laid the matter before the Minister of the United States in London, who applied to the Secretary of State for a warrant. This warrant having been immediately issued Charles Bontelle, the first mate, was again taken into custody, but after having been examined several times he was liberated on Monday, it being understood that the magistrates at Liverpool had no jurisdiction in the case.

Ludlow.—On the evening of the 27th ult. a serious fight took place between some 30 gipsies and a number of men in this town. It originated in a public-house, and was afterwards renewed in the public street, where one of the gipsies hurled a brick at a man named Pearce, inflicting a severe wound under the left ear, which caused death in a few minutes. Twenty of the gipsies were arrested; 19 of them were fined for rioting, and the jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against a young gipsy named Macgennis, who threw the brick.

Lydney.—A shocking tragedy, by which Louisa Cooke, a servant girl only 15 years of age, lost her life, occurred on Tuesday at Lydney, a small town between Gloucester and Chepstow. It appears from the evidence given at the inquest, that at 6 o'clock in the morning Dr. Pownall, who has been staying for the last three weeks at the house of Mr. Leete, a surgeon in the town, knocked at the bedroom door of the servants and called them up. The poor girl, Louisa Cooke, in answer to his summons, dressed herself quickly and went out. In a minute or two a faint cry of "Murder" was heard, and immediately afterwards she rushed into Mr Leete's bedroom with her throat cut, exclaiming, "Master, he has murdered me, I must die;" having repeated which two or three times she fell down dead. Dr. Pownall, who did not attempt to deny the charge, said, when brought before the coroner, "I can tell you; I unfortunately did it. I can hardly assign any motive. I felt I was bound to do something, and could not resist it." Evidence was given to show that Dr. Pownall had been an inmate for some time of Northwood's asylum, near Bristol, but had been recently discharged as cured, with a certificate to that effect from Dr. Davey, the medical superintendent; and until this shocking occurrence had afforded by his conduct no grounds to doubt that his reason had been restored. The jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Dr. Pownall, who was on Wednesday removed to Gloucester to await his trial at the assizes.

Maidstone.—On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Davis, wife of a bricklayer in this town, murdered her infant by hanging it to the bed-post, and then committed suicide by the same means. She had for some time past been in a desponding state of mind, but no alarm was excited, as her conduct to her husband and children was uniformly kind.

Plymouth.—On Tuesday afternoon an accident of a very alarming character occurred in the Sound, on board her Majesty's screw steamsloop Pioneer, Commander Reilly, under orders for the west coast of Africa. She had some slight defects to make good, and was getting up steam for the purpose of proceeding into Hamoaze, when the main steam pipe burst close to the communication, as John Dunn, leading stoker, was on the point of opening the communication-valve; Mr. William Bone, engineer in charge, Mr. Charles Piller, third engineer, Mr. John Oliver, third engineer, John Dunn, Charles Devine, and James Murphy, stokers, and James Renninson, second-class boy, unfortunately rushed aft, where the steam was most dense, and were, of course, much scalded, especially in their faces. Mr. J. A. Leicester second-class engineer, prudently shut off the communication, and escaped uninjured. The ship was speedily enveloped in steam, and as there was a smart south-west breeze its effects were most detrimental aft. The looking-glasses in the captain's cabin were shivered, and the boots shrivelled. Boats from the ships of war with their surgeons and assistant-surgeons were soon alongside, and the steam tender Confiance conveyed the seven worst cases to the Royal William Victualling Yard, whence they were taken in cots to the naval hospital. The Pioneer was afterwards sent into Hamoaze. The latest accounts state that Dunn is in a very precarious state, and that Mr. Bone is suffering severely; the others are not in great danger.

Portland.—On Friday, as the chief engineer of the Portland breakwater was steering a four-oared galley from Weymouth to the breakwater, a shot from her Majesty's ship Blenheim, fired by a coastguardman practising on board, struck the boat and killed one of her crew. In the course of the evidence it transpired that the boat was at least 60 to 100 yards out of the line of fire; and that the man who fired the gun, from the position in which he was placed, could not see the boat approaching the line of fire. The jury returned a verdict of Excusable Homicide, with a request that the coroner would represent in strong terms to the Board of Admiralty that in the opinion of the jury "gross neglect is allowed to exist on board her Majesty's ship Blenheim during their practice of firing, thereby endangering life and traffic in Portland Roads."

Portsmouth.—On Saturday morning the Queen paid a visit to this dockyard for the purpose of inspecting the head-quarters of the 32d Regiment on their landing from India, prior to their proceeding to their destination—the camp at Shorncliffe. The troops were landed soon after breakfast, and preparations made to receive her Majesty by the military and naval authorities. A dais was hurriedly prepared in front of which the 32d were drawn up in line with their band and colours, the latter having emblazoned on their silk the names of Roleia, Vimiera, Corunna, Salamanca, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, Peninsula, Waterloo, Punjab, Mooltan, Goojerat, and Lucknow. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, with Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, shortly afterwards arrived in the Fairy screw yacht amid the customary salutes, and were received on landing by Major-General Sir J. Y. Scarlett, Admirals Bowles, Grey, and their respective staffs. Her Majesty immediately proceeded to the ground where the troops were drawn up, passing down in front and rear, after which the troops marched past in quarter distance column, and afterwards again reformed in line opposite to her Majesty, who desired that the Lucknow men should be called to the front and expressed a wish to see Lieut.-Colonel Lowe, who, until wounded, commanded the regiment during the siege, and Dr. Boyd, who had medical charge of the corps throughout the same memorable period. Both these officers, the only ones then on the ground who had served with the 32d during the defence of the Residency of Lucknow, were accordingly presented to her Majesty by Colonel Carmichael, commanding the regiment. Her Majesty expressed her gratification at seeing them again returned to England from India, and also at the appearance of the men in general. Her Majesty then returned to Osborne under the customary salutes and the cheering of the crews who had manned the yards of the different vessels. The East Kent Militia furnished the guard of honour for the occasion. At the close of the inspection the 32d were marched to the railway station, and left by special train for Dover, where they were received with extraordinary honours both by the troops at present stationed in that garrison as well as by the inhabitants at large.

Shields.—On Friday afternoon while the William and Mary, one of the old tug steamers on the Tyne, was following and annoying a new passenger steamer called the Louise Crawshay by blowing steam over her from the waste pipe, the boiler burst, blowing up the deck and doing other serious damage. A fireman called Cockburn, who is supposed to have been putting the fire-damper down at the time of the explosion, was blown about 10 yards away from the vessel, and, falling into the Tyne, sunk immediately. The other two men who were navigating the boat leapt over the stern into the river, but were rescued by means of life-buoys thrown from the Louise Crawshay.

Stourbridge.—A strike has taken place among the chainmakers of Worcestershire and South Staffordshire, by which at least 3000 men have been thrown out of employment. The principal seat of the trade is near Stourbridge and Dudley, but it is also carried on to a large extent near Wolverhampton and Walsall, where the neighbouring iron and coal-fields furnish abundance of raw material for the purpose. The strike is for an advance of 1*s.* per cwt. on what are technically called "half-inch" chains, with a proportionate advance on other descriptions. The price hitherto paid for chains of this kind has been 4*s.* per cwt., and as it is considered that 5 cwt. is a fair average week's work for an adult, the rate of wages would appear not to exceed 25*s.* a week. It appears that the supply of labour for this class of work exceeds the demand, and that the chain trade at present is far from active. Indeed, in the manufacture of the finer and lighter chains, boys, and even girls, are largely employed, and it is the competition of these youthful workers which renders the remuneration for this branch of labour so low. Although the men are generally on strike throughout the district, some few, who are not connected with the union, are still at work at the old prices. The unionists are strongly incensed against these men, and avow their intention, if the present movement should be successful, of insisting upon their discharge before they themselves return to work. On Monday several of the "turn-outs" were charged at Stourbridge with leaving their employment without proper notice, but the case was adjourned. The employers present stated that but for the interference of the union they should be willing to give a rise upon a scale which had previously prevailed, and that 75 per cent. of their men had been coerced into joining the union.

TREDEGAR.—On Monday a woman named Martha Taylor, the wife of a collier, was taken into custody on a charge of murdering her stepdaughter, aged 14 years. The body was found on the previous day in a pond adjoining the town, and it is alleged that the girl was thrown into the water by her stepmother. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, who was also committed for trial by the local bench of magistrates.

TYNEMOUTH.—The long and tedious strike of the Tyne shipwrights has been brought to an end by the principal dock owners complying with the terms demanded, and re-opening their yards. The advanced wages are 5*s.* per day. The men have been backed up by other trades, and by the shipwrights in employment in other parts of the country, and have been receiving 5*s.* per week each man.—A meeting was held in this town last week for the purpose of presenting a cabinet of standard books to Mr. Lindsay, M.P., as an acknowledgement, on the part of the electors and non-electors, of his services to the Mechanics' Institute. In the course of the evening Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Justice Haliburton, who accompanied him, spoke at some length on the subject of strikes. The following is an abstract of their remarks :—

MR. LINDSAY said : "There were strikes when knowledge was more rare than it is now. There were strikes in olden times, and if knowledge has done nothing else, it has done this—that whereas in the strikes in olden times there was bloodshed and violations of law, intelligence has taught the working classes this at least—that though they may differ from their employers, they have no need to violate the law. Now I will tell you, in the first place, what many of the working classes have yet to learn. They have first to learn that the well-being of the working classes is as essential to the tranquillity and happiness of the State as it is to their own comfort and happiness. They have next to learn that the increase of revenue and stock is the increase of national wealth, and that as demand for those who live by wages naturally increases with increase of national wealth, and cannot possibly increase without it. Now these are facts which I would wish the working men to study, to think seriously over, and then perhaps they will not be so disposed as they are at the present time to combine amongst themselves to enforce higher wages when the demand for their labour does not warrant it. Now I wish you would also learn this fact—labour is the poor man's capital; bear that in mind—it is as much his capital as ships or land are my capital. He has a perfect right to go into the market and dispose of that capital, either in this country or any other country, to the best advantage in his power. That I should wish the working classes clearly to understand, and I should wish the employers also to understand it. I have said that labour is your capital, and I say you have a perfect right to combine, if you think proper, among yourselves, to increase the value of your labour. Well then, while you have the right to combine among yourselves, I would first ask, is your combination for your own interest? That is the question. Now it is with me very questionable if it is, on the whole, for your interest. You may think you gain by it, but I do believe that in the long run you lose. Now comes the next point. While, as I have said, you have a perfect right to combine among yourselves and say that you will not take less than a certain wage per day, you have no right to say to your neighbour that he shall not do so, if he thinks proper; because while you exercise your own judgment, if you attempt to force your neighbour to adopt your course, you are exercising a species of tyranny over your neighbour, inasmuch as you are not allowing him to exercise his own free will. Now, I would like to speak one word as to the effect of combinations. There are rules laid down which say that a certain man shall only work a certain number of hours. It may be perfectly right, I say, that he shall—take for instance the mason trade in London—that he shall only use the trowel with one hand—that in fact he shall not give his energies full play. Well then what is the effect of that? The effect of it is this—that the skilled labourer, the man of industry, and the man of energy, who could make his 5*s.* 6*d.* or 6*s.* a day if he were allowed to have full scope for that energy, is curtailed in his energy: and the man without energy—the indolent man—is put upon the same footing, because his wages are fixed the same as those for the man of energy, industry, and skill. Now then while I say that it is injurious and false policy for the men to combine and force an increase of wages when there is not an increased demand, I say it is equally impolitic and equally erroneous for the masters to combine. There are in Sunderland and this port various grades of shipbuilders. There is one who, by his greater skill and greater energy, has more orders for ships. He can afford to pay the workman 5*s.* a day, and make a profit; and what right have the other masters to dictate to such a shipbuilder as that, and say that, because they are only paying 4*s.* a day to the carpenters, he shall not give more than 4*s.* a day? Why, if it is worth his while to give 5*s.* a day, the other masters have no right to say that he shall not give 5*s.* He only gives 5*s.* a day on the presumption that he will get value for what he has given to the men. Therefore it is as impolitic and as unwise on the part of the masters to enter into these combinations as it is on the part of the men. That was the operation of the attempt to regulate prices: and the same thing I will candidly tell you exists with regard to wages—be it on the part of the masters or on that of the men. Why should the indolent man, who perhaps working as hard as he usually will work makes 4*s.* a day, be placed upon the same footing as the fine, manly, energetic fellow in the same line, who could make his 7*s.* or 8*s.* a day? Why, do you think that those intelligent men throughout England will continue to stand that? No; as they get more knowledge—as they get more educated, they will find that these combinations among themselves are only tying their hands, curtailing their energy, and limiting their skill, for the benefit of the indolent and less efficient class of workmen."—MR JUSTICE HALIBURTON said "Mr Lindsay is a practical man, and whatever a practical man says is listened to with proper respect; therefore it is that I agree with Mr Lindsay in the remarks which he has made relative to the strikes that are now unhappily prevailing in this country. But there is one consolation to be drawn from those strikes that I have never yet heard anybody allude to, and it is—there is no country in the world that could afford to have strikes but England. They are very expensive things, and they only belong to a rich country, and I defy any man to point out any country in the world where mechanics can go upon strike for three months together as they do here. If the mechanics in the States were to strike they would be starved out by Saturday night."

Ireland.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PASTORAL.—The document published by the prelates is the principal topic of discussion in the Irish newspapers. Its chief result has been a reaction in favour of the present national system among the supporters of the Church Education Society, who now speak and write bitterly against the idea of a separate grant. The bishops are to meet again in three weeks to propound their decision on collegiate education, and to commence the platform and parliamentary agitation which they hope will lead to their speedy triumph. As a preliminary to this they are making preparations for a meeting of such members of the House of Commons as are likely to support their views, to be held in Dublin within a month. It is said that 20 Irish M.P.'s have already given in their adhesion to the course chalked out by the Ultramontane party, and the screw is to be put upon others. Two Roman Catholic journals, the Cork Reporter and the Newry Examiner, express themselves in terms of strong hostility to the episcopal manifesto, and state that, so far from its being an expression of lay Catholic opinion, it will only influence the peasant and not the educated classes of Ireland. The former journal says :—

"On the part of the peasant as well as of those who understand more distinctly the boundaries between spiritual and secular affairs, we protest against the decision that virtually condemns him to ignorance—for it is simply absurd to imagine that any Government can so far forget either its duty or its dignity as to concede what the authors of the Pastoral demand. To hand over, as required, the secular education of the Irish people to the control of the zealots of rival churches, as the price of some years of official tranquillity, would be to commit the gravest dereliction of public duty in regard to this country of which men entrusted with the functions of government could be guilty. To do it in obedience to a threat, such as the Pastoral virtually amounts to, would be a humiliation that we have not yet witnessed the like of among statesmen."

THE IRISH EXILES.—Mr. Richard O'Gorman, jun., left Dublin last week on his return to New York, the city of his adoption, where his friends say that he has been steadily rising to fame and fortune. Mr. John Mitchell it appears is on his way to France, and the war journals intimate that Ireland need not expect his presence until he is prepared to land at the head of an invading army.

THE STRIKE IN DUBLIN.—A few of the masters have submitted to the demand made by the carpenters, and have granted an increase of 2*s.* in their weekly wages, but some of the most extensive employers have refused compliance. The plasterers, and other trades connected with building, are now inclined to strike for higher wages also.

THE M'MAHON SWORD.—The Nation announces that Marshal M'Mahon will accept "with gratitude" the sword of honour proposed to be presented to him by the Irish people, his anciens compatriotes, as soon as the requirements prescribed by the rules of the French service shall have been complied with.

WRECK OF LORD DROGHEDA'S YACHT.—The Marquis of Drogheda's schooner Fancy, 140 tons, has been totally lost off the coast of Sligo. The marquis and marchioness, with Major Foster, A.D.C. to the Lord-Lieutenant, were on board at the time, and with the crew were all saved, but a vast amount of valuable property went down with the vessel.

Railways.

SOUTH-EASTERN.—At the half-yearly meeting on Thursday the report was unanimously adopted, and a dividend was declared at the rate of 4 per cent. for the half-year, being an increase of 1 per cent. as compared with the corresponding half of 1858.

GREAT NORTHERN.—On Thursday, after long negotiations with the London and North-Western, the trains of the Great Northern for the first time ran into the Lime Street Station at Liverpool. This station will hereafter be open to the Great Northern, and thus give that company an outlet on the western coast of England.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE TILBURY AND SOUTHEND.—The inquest on Mr. Bennett terminated on Saturday, when the jury, after hearing the evidence of scientific witnesses as to the fracture of the axle of the engine, returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

ACCIDENT ON THE BRISTOL AND EXETER AND CREDITON.—On Wednesday week, as a Bristol and Exeter excursion train to Barnstaple was passing the Cowley Bridge junction, the engine, tender, and two empty third-class carriages next to it ran off the line and turned over on their sides upon the embankment. The other carriages which contained the excursionists remained on the line. Mr. Mears, superintendent of the St. David's station, was on the engine, and was thrown with such violence under the steps of the tender, that his leg was broken, and he was otherwise severely injured. The driver and stoker escaped without injury.

ACCIDENT ON THE MONMOUTHSHIRE.—On Friday afternoon a shocking accident occurred to Mrs. Harrison, wife of Mr. George Harrison, secretary to this railway. They resided by the side of the line, about a mile and a half from Newport, and were in the habit of walking upon it whenever occasion required. In the course of the day Mr. and Mrs. Harrison had been out a short distance by train, and were returning on foot along the line. Mr. Harrison had taken a side footpath, while his wife was walking upon the "six-foot," as the space between the up and down lines is termed, and was 40 or 50 yards behind. They were within about a quarter of a mile of their house, on an embankment, when a down train from Hereford, consisting of about 14 or 15 trucks, laden with timber, came upon them. The speed was inconsiderable, not more than five or six miles an hour. The engineer perceived them at a few yards' distance, and gave a loud whistle, but without attracting the lady's notice. Mr. Harrison also turned round, and made the most energetic motions—without avail, however, until the train was within half a dozen yards, when she appeared to be frightened, and jumped from the "six-foot," a place of comparative safety, on the down line in front of the engine. One of the buffers struck the unfortunate lady on the back and knocked her down, and the whole train passed over her with the exception of the last car or break-van, which being lower than the others, caught up the body, and in its wheels completed the dismemberment of the mangled corpse. Mr. Harrison had in the meantime fallen to the ground insensible. His wife's remains were carefully collected, and conveyed in carts to Malpas, where an inquest was held on Saturday night, and a verdict of accidental death returned. The engine-driver was exonerated from all blame.

Law.

WESTERN CIRCUIT: WELLS.—Housebreaking by a Policeman.—William Wiltshire was indicted for breaking and entering the house of the Rev. Richard Dawkins and stealing a quantity of articles. The prisoner was a policeman stationed at Port Zeyland, and had been promoted at the instance of Mr. Dawkins, who was clergyman of the parish. In the autumn of the year 1858 many articles and money were continually missed from the prosecutor's house. He spoke to the prisoner, who said that it was evident the robberies must have been committed by some of the servants, because any other person would have taken all the things and money they could get. It was at last discovered that the property was always stolen while the family were at church on Sundays, when the house was locked up. Suspicion was at length excited, and on the Friday last Mr. Dawkins told the prisoner that his son, an undergraduate at Oxford, who had been staying at home, was about to go on a visit at Easter, and he wished the prisoner to be extremely watchful, as he was timid during his son's absence. The prisoner assured him he would be very watchful, and he might rest assured that everything should remain. On Saturday, the 23d, the prosecutor's son drove through the village with a carpet bag in a gig, as if about to take a journey, and he did this as publicly as possible, but he left the gig when he had gone a little way, and returned through the fields to his father's house. On the next morning, Easter Sunday, all the family with the exception of the son went to church. The son posted himself in a room with the shutters shut and a candle, where he could hear everything. In a very short time he heard a noise at the lock of the front door, and the lock was withdrawn, and some one opened the door and entered the house. He then according to previous arrangement fired a gun. Mr Dawkins, who was performing duty in his church, on hearing the report of the gun, told the congregation that he could not proceed any further, as his house was being robbed. The congregation instantly rushed out, followed by the prosecutor, and they found the prisoner in the hall. The prosecutor went up to the prisoner and said, "Well, William, caught at last?" The prisoner said, "I am here in the performance of my duty, sir." Mr. Dawkins told a constable to search the prisoner at once. He however refused to allow him to do so until the superintendent arrived. The prosecutor however insisted upon the search being made at once. The constable then proceeded with the search, and found round his neck a hair guard which had belonged to Mrs. Dawkins, and which had been stolen from her dressing-case, which had always been kept locked in the bed room. This guard had been stolen, together with other valuable rings, on the 8th December, 1857. A large bunch of 50 or 60 keys was also found upon the prisoner, and a piece of wire, bent so as to form a picklock, was likewise found in his pocket. The jury found the prisoner Guilty. The prisoner was then convicted of another robbery, and there were several other indictments against him. Mr. Justice Compton told the prisoner that this was an exceedingly bad case, and sentenced him to be kept in penal servitude for 10 years. The Shoreham Boat Accident at Watchet.—George Wedlake and A. [illegible] were indicted for the manslaughter of several persons at Watchet. The grand jury threw out the bill. Mr Clerk said that this case arose out of an unfortunate accident which occurred by the upsetting of a boat which was going from an excursion steamer. The two prisoners had charge of the boat, and people crowded into it until it was upset. The coroner having investigated the matter, had ignored the bill. He should not, therefore, proceed upon the coroner's inquisition. The learned judge said he did not think any culpable blame rested on the prisoners, and they would therefore be discharged.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT: LIVERPOOL.—Forging a Will.—Ann Horrocks, John Hope, Joseph Berry, and Ruth Berry, were indicted for forging a will at Salford on the 23d of April last, and for uttering the same knowing it to be forged. It appeared in the evidence that the deceased, Ann Dean, whose will was alleged to be forged, kept a small shop in a cellar at Pendleton in Salford. She was an illegitimate child, and by economy and care for many years had amassed a considerable sum, having in her banker's hands nearly 600*l.* She was unmarried, and her nearest relation (though, from her being illegitimate, he was not her lawful relation) was John Dean, who kept a draper's shop in Salford. The latter became seriously ill in April last, and fancying that the cellar in which she lived did not agree with her, she took lodgings at the prisoner Hardy's, who kept a beer house, where she went on the 13th of April, and died that night. She had expressed her intention to leave her property to Isaac Dean, but on her death Hardy and his daughter, Ruth Berry, and her husband, Joseph Berry, set up a will purporting to be made by deceased and attested by Luke Hardman and one of the attesting witnesses. For the prosecution it was alleged that two wills were forged by the prisoners, one in substitution for another, the first not suiting their purpose, and that two wills were made by the prisoner Hope, an attorney whose name had been struck off the roll. It was also contended that deceased was too ill to make a will, and never did make one. The will alleged to be forged was drawn by the prisoner Hope and copied by Luke Hardman, and to this will deceased was said to have affixed her mark, though she could write well. Luke Hardman was admitted to give evidence as approver. After two days' trial the jury found all the prisoners Guilty with the exception of Ruth Berry, who was Acquitted under the direction of the judge on the ground that she probably acted under the coercion of her husband. Mr. Baron Watson in passing sentence [illegible] hoped this case would be a warning to all who engaged in great crimes, that at any period they might be turned round upon and brought to punishment by their accomplices. In the present case, if Hardman had not first turned round upon the prisoners it was evident the prisoner Hope was quite ready to have done so. It was quite evident that when this poor old woman was dying at Hardy's House the prisoner Hardy and Berry and his wife had conceived the crime of forging a will for her in their own benefit, and they had afterwards met with a ready tool to assist them in their criminal and abominable design in the prisoner Hope, with his mischievous smattering of law. He hoped that the sentence he should pass would be a warning to all that such designs, when found out, would meet with exemplary punishment. The sentence of the Court was that each of the prisoners undergo 14 years' penal servitude.

Obituary.

THE HON PATRICIA YOUNG, eldest daughter of the late Lord Panmure, and widow of Gilbert Young, Esq., of Youngfield, died at Lincluden House, near Dumfries, on the 23d ult. She was born in 1795, married in 1826, and leaves issue two sons. She was the sister of the present Lord Panmure, and her death is the third bereavement in his domestic circle which his lordship has sustained during the last 18 months.

THE VEN. CHARLES HARDWICK, Archdeacon of Ely, lost his life in the Pyrenees on the 18th, under very melancholy circumstances. He left England at the beginning of August for a short tour in the Pyrenees. On Tuesday, the 16th, accompanied by an English gentleman whom he had met at Bagneres de Luchon, he ascended a mountain near the Port de Venasque. They reached the summit safely, and had made part of the descent, when the archdeacon proposed taking a different path from that by which they had ascended. His companion, however, preferred keeping to the known track, and reached the foot of the mountain in safety. After waiting a long time he became alarmed, and on inquiry was told by some shepherds that the descent attempted by the archdeacon was impossible. All attempts to trace him on that day were fruitless, but a strong body of guides and police having been procured from Bagneres, another search on the following morning resulted in the discovery of his body. He appeared to have achieved the most difficult parts of the descent, and then to have fallen down a shelving mass of rock through a distance of about 200 feet. He must have been killed instantly, as the skull was split, his left arm broken in two places, and his watch shattered to pieces. The remains were interred at Bagneres de Luchon on the following Sunday. Archdeacon Hardwick was a Fellow of St. Catherine's, Cambridge, where he resided, and held the offices of Christian advocate in the university, and divinity lecturer of King's College. He was only 38 years of age, and had only been appointed to the Archdeaconry of Ely a few months previous to his death. He was the author of a "A History of the Christian Church from Gregory the Great to the Reformation;" "A History of the Church during the Reformation;" "History of the XXXIX Articles;" "Sermons for Town Congregations," and "Christ and other Masters;" a work of which only four parts have been published, and which, had he lived to complete it, promised to be of lasting service to the Church. He was buried on Sunday the 21st ult. in the cemetery at Luchon, the service being performed by the French Protestant pastor of Toulouse.

THE REV. SIR CHARLES FARNABY, BART., died on Monday last at his residence, Wickham Court, near Bromley, Kent. He was born in the house in which he died, in 1787, and succeeded his father in 1802. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1808, and was rector of West Wickham, a living in his own gift, from 1814 to 1848. As he has died without issue, the baronetcy becomes extinct.

MISS ELIZABETH GRAY, eldest daughter of Sir Charles Gray, late Supreme Judge of Calcutta, died at 10, Southwick Place, Paddington, on Friday, from injuries sustained by fire. The unfortunate lady has been of unsound mind for the last 10 years, and was residing at the house of a medical man in whose care she had been placed. During the night she appears to have got out of bed unperceived by her attendants, and set herself on fire with the night lamp. She was in her 37th year. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict that she destroyed herself by setting fire to her clothes while in an unsound state of mind.

MR LEIGH HUNT, the poet and essayist, died on Sunday morning, at Putney, after having been for some time in feeble health. He was the son of a clergyman of the Church of England, and was born at Southgate, Middlesex, in 1784; he was consequently in his 75th year. His father was a West Indian, and his mother a Philadelphian; but at the period of the American Revolution his father, who was then in the Law, took the Royalist side, and was forced to fly to England. Having taken orders, he was for some time tutor to Mr. Leigh, the nephew of the Duke of Chandos, who had a seat at Southgate. His son, Mr. Leigh Hunt, received his education at Christ's Hospital, with his friends Coleridge and Lamb. On coming of age he assisted his brother John in the establishment of a Sunday paper called the News, for which he wrote the theatrical criticisms. He had previously been employed in the office of his brother Stephen, an attorney, but had relinquished that employment for a situation in the War Office, which he gave up on becoming, in 1808, founder and joint proprietor of the Examiner. This journal he edited for many subsequent years, and rendered exceedingly popular. Some remarks against the practice of flogging in the army became the subject of a prosecution before Lord Ellenborough in 1811, when he was acquitted. Soon afterwards a fashionable newspaper having called the Prince Regent an Adonis, Mr. Leigh Hunt, in a fit of indignation at the Regent's having broken his promise to the Whigs, added—"of fifty." The prince's vanity triumphed over his discretion, and on the pretended ground of some words of more serious import, a prosecution was instituted, in which a jury found a verdict of guilty against Mr. Leigh Hunt and his brother John, and each was sentenced to pay a fine of £500 and to suffer two years' imprisonment. On their liberation Mr. Hunt continued to write as before, and for some time maintained the Examiner at the head of the weekly press. Meanwhile Mr. Leigh Hunt, on the invitation of his friends Shelley and Lord Byron, went to set up the Liberal in Italy, where, after the almost immediate death of the former, he continued to reside for about four years, a small portion of which was passed under the same roof with Lord Byron, but not happily. In 1847 the Queen, at the recommendation of Lord John Russell, bestowed on him a pension of 200*l.* a year. Among the more important of his poetical works are his "Captain Sword and Captain Pen," the "Palfrey," the collection of his narrative poems entitled "Stories in Verse," and the "Legend of Florence," a play in five acts. The list of his prose works includes "Sir Ralph Esher," a fictitious autobiography of a gentleman of the court of Charles II.; the "Indicator," the "Companion," the "Seer," "Men, Women, and Books," "Stories from the Italian Poets," "Table Talk," "A Jar of Honey from Mount Hybla," "Imagination and Fancy, Wit and Humour;" three volumes of Autobiography, comprising a corrected and final account of his relations with Lord Byron; the "Religion of the Heart," the "Town, its Memorable Characters and Events;" and the "Old Court Suburb." Among the long list of his translations may be mentioned Tasso's "Aminta," Redi's "Bacco in Toscana," and the "Lutrin of Boileau." To these productions may be added his versions of the plays of Wycherley, Congreve, and Farquhar, and his collections from prose writers and poets, under the various titles of "A Hundred Romances of Real Life," "A Book for a Corner," and his collection, of the least objectionable passages from "Beaumont and Fletcher," made for the purpose of enabling families to become acquainted with them. Mr Leigh Hunt may be said to have been the last of a group of poets and essayists who achieved fame almost contemporaneously in the earlier years of this century, his name and writings having been associated with those of Byron, Shelley, Coleridge, Hazlitt, Lamb, Wordsworth, Southey, Scott, Moore, Jeffrey, and many others.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.
MONDAY, Aug. 29.

The number of Beasts is large, but the average quality is very middling, consequently prices are not lower for coarse descriptions. The supply of Sheep is again small, the prices are on the average better. Choicest Lambs and Calves are in demand but other qualities meet with a dull sale. From Germany and Holland there are 1550 Beasts, 3160 Sheep, and 176 Calves: from Scotland, 85 Beasts: from Ireland, 250; and 2477 from the northern and midland counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 1.

The number of Beasts on offer is large, but the average quality is middling, choice descriptions are therefore scarce as dear as on Monday. We have a fair supply of Sheep and Lambs for the season; they are readily disposed of at full prices. Good Calves are dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 320 Beasts, 1930 Sheep, and 300 Calves, from the northern and midland, 400 Beasts; and 122 Milch Cows from the home counties.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Aug. 29.

This morning's market was moderately attended, and the supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent was good, but a large proportion consisted of the new crop, much of which was poor both in quantity and condition; the sales of wheat were at a decline of 2s to 3s per qr on the prices of this day se'nnight, but at a late hour little progress had been made in its disposal; old must be written 1s to 2s per qr cheaper, and the little business transacted in foreign was also on rather lower terms. Barley is a fair sale at last Monday's prices. Beans and Peas sell slowly at late rates. The Oat trade is dull, and inferior qualities and Russian are 6d to 1s per qr lower. In the value of Flour there is no alteration. Of Maize 3rd 8s 4 the supply was small, and the finest samples brought 15s. per bushel.

FRIDAY, Sept. 2.

Although some heavy showers have fallen during the last eight days, they have been powerless in effecting the value of grain, and our Scotch letters inform us that but a small portion of the Wheat crop remains in the fields. The quantity of Wheat offered for sale throughout the kingdom continues to be in excess of the demand, and a further decline of 1s to 2s. per qr. is generally reported. No important alteration has occurred in the price of Barley, but Oats, Beans, and Peas have been nearly everywhere quoted cheaper. Oats 6d to 1s., Beans 1s., and white Peas in some markets unsaleable at a decline of 2s. per qr. It may be worthy of remark that the very low price of much of the new Wheat, causing it to be largely used for feeding purposes, must in some degree affect the value of spring corn. Flour is a dead sale, and in several markets 1s. 3d. per sack cheaper. The arrivals of grain from Southern Europe off the coast this week are trifling, as are also the sales, the latter including Polish Odessa Wheat at 43s. 6d., Odessa Ghirka at 41s., Taganrog Ghirka at 44s. 6d., all per 492 lbs.; Galatz at 37s. to 37s. 9d., Sandomirka at 42s. both per 480 lbs.; Ibrail Maize at 27s. 3d. per 480 lbs.; Taganrog Barley at 22s. 9d. per 400 lbs., Odessa ditto at 25s per 450 lbs. The arrivals of English Wheat this week have been good, small of foreign, fair of foreign Oats and Barley, and moderate of all other grain. The attendance at this morning's market was small. English Wheat met a very slow sale, and Monday's prices were unobtainable. Foreign was very little inquired after, and to have effected sales lower prices must have been submitted to. Barley is a slow sale at Monday's prices. Beans and Peas are unaltered in value. For Oats there is a fair demand, and Russian are fully 3d. per quarter dearer.

ARRIVALS FROM AUG. 29 TO SEPT. 2.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Aug. 30.—The foreign arrivals since Tuesday are quite on a moderate scale, and the greater part of the Wheat is from Egypt. Of European corn we have a fair supply. The weather is now quite broken, and since Sunday a good deal of rain has fallen in this neighbourhood. Our market still labours under great depression, and the business passing is altogether in retail, and prices somewhat irregular. We had only a small attendance of either town or country buyers at our Corn Exchange this morning, and the demand for Wheat was quite in retail at a reduction of about 1d. per cental on the rates of Friday. Flour was generally held pretty firmly, but where sales were made a decline of 6d. to 1s. per sack was necessary. Indian Corn had a fair consumptive demand at about previous rates. Oats and Oatmeal irregular in value. Egyptian Beans gave way 6d. per qr. Peas and Barley nominally unchanged. The market closed very dull.

FRIDAY, Sept. 2.—Grain market dull. Wheat and Flour easier to buy, but without any quotable decline. Indian Corn rather better. Beans 6d. lower. Egyptian 33s. 6d. Oats, Oatmeal, and Barley a shade easier.

COOL AND REFRESHING BALM.—Among the many luxuries of the present age, none can be obtained possessing the manifold virtues of OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA. If applied to the roots of the hair, it imparts the most delightful coolness, and agreeable fragrance of perfume. It also at this period of the season prevents the hair from falling off, or if already off or turning grey, will stop its further progress, and restore it again. Those who really desire to have the hair, either with wave or curl, should use it daily. It is celebrated for strengthening the hair, freeing it from scurf, and producing new hair, whiskers, and moustaches. Established upwards of 30 years. No imitative wash can be had. Price 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.*, and 11*s.* only.—C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 22, Wellington Street North, Strand, W.C.

FINE HEAD OF HAIR.

THE BEARD, WHISKERS, AND MOUSTACHE.—ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL is universally in high repute as the most successful article ever offered for the growth, restoration, and in improving and beautifying the human hair, proved beyond question by its unparalleled results for more than half a century past, and which no other specific has failed. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey, strengthens weak hair, cleanses it from scurf and dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. Its invaluable properties have obtained the patronage of Royalty and the aristocracy throughout Europe; while its introduction into the Courts of Royalty, and the high esteem in which it is universally held, with numerous testimonials constantly received of its use, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits. Price 3*s.* 6*d.* and 7*s.*; family bottles (equal to four small), 10*s.* 6*d.*, and double that size, 21*s.*—CAUTION: on the wrapper of each bottle are the words, ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, &c., in white letters, and their signature, "A. ROWLAND & SONS," in red ink. Sold at 20, Hatton Garden, London, E.C.; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

DR. DE JONGH'S

(KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM)

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL administered with the greatest success in CONSUMPTION, GENERAL DEBILITY, RHEUMATISM, INFANTILE WASTING, AND ALL THE DISORDERS ARISING FROM DEFECTIVE NUTRITION.

is the most efficacious, the most palatable, and the most curative effects, unquestionably the most economical of kinds. Its immeasurable therapeutic superiority over other variety is attested by innumerable spontaneous testimonials from Physicians and Surgeons of European celebrity.

OPINION OF EDWIN LANKESTER, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., Late Lecturer on the Practice of Physic at St. George's School, Superintendent of the Food Collection at the Kensington Museum, &c.

"I believe that the purity and genuineness of the Oil secured in its preparation by the personal attention of DR. DE JONGH, a Chemist and intelligent a Physician as DR. DE JONGH, who has also written the best medical treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I should deem the Oil prepared and sold under his guarantee to be preferable, to any other, as regards genuineness and medical efficacy."

Sold ONLY in IMPERIAL half pints, 2*s.* 6*d.*; pints, quarts, &c., capsuled, and labelled with DR. DE JONGH'S stamp and signature, without which none is genuine, in the United Kingdom by respectable Chemists,

News of the Week.

THE Deputation appointed by the Tuscan National Assembly to offer the sovereignty of that Duchy to the KING OF SARDINIA arrived at Turin on Saturday, and was received by HIS MAJESTY on the same day. Count GHERARDESCA, on behalf of the National Assembly, having offered the annexation of Tuscany to Piedmont as the unanimous and unconditional resolution of his countrymen, the KING said that he received their wish as a solemn manifestation of the will of the Tuscan people, who, after having "made the last vestige of the foreign domination in Tuscany to cease," desired to contribute to the constitution of a strong kingdom which should defend the independence of Italy. But the accomplishment of their wish could only take place by "negotiations which were about to begin on the affairs of Italy." HIS MAJESTY intimated that the question could only be decided by a Congress of the European Powers, and added that he would support their cause before those Powers, "becoming himself strong by the rights which were given him by their wishes." The effect of this answer is that KING VICTOR EMMANUEL, without admitting Tuscany to be a part of the kingdom of Sardinia or committing himself to the assumption of its Sovereignty, accepts the office of representative of the Tuscan people before Europe, and reserves his decision as to the acceptance of the offer made to him by the National Assembly. From Parma we learn that the result of the vote on the annexation of that Duchy to Piedmont was 63,403 votes in favour of the annexation, and 506 against it. The elections have since been concluded with admirable order, and the opening of the Assembly took place on Wednesday with great solemnity. Accounts from Bologna state that the National Assembly of the Romagna on Tuesday unanimously adopted a resolution declaring that the inhabitants of the Romagna will no longer submit to the temporal government of the Pope, and on the following day, with the same unanimity, agreed to a motion for the annexation of the Legations to Sardinia. The Assembly at the same time authorised the President to present an address to the EMPEROR NAPOLEON and to KING VICTOR EMMANUEL, expressing their sympathies for Venetia, and offering to make pecuniary sacrifices in her favour. Meanwhile the Zurich Conferences, after a succession of interviews and discussions which have led to nothing, are virtually suspended. Austria has called upon the EMPEROR of the FRENCH to fulfil the Treaty of Villafranca by the restoration of the Grand Dukes, and has refused to admit the principle that the people of the Duchies and the Legations have any right to choose a Sovereign for themselves. If, however, the difficulties attending the restoration of the Grand Dukes should prove to be insurmountable, Austria, it is said, has intimated that she would prefer the nomination of Prince NAPOLEON as King of Central Italy to the annexation of the Duchies to Sardinia. Prince RICHARD METTERNICH has been sent to St. Sauveur to propose another interview between the EMPERORS of FRANCE and AUSTRIA for the consideration of these questions, and the Castle of Ahrenberg, in Switzerland, is said to have been selected as the scene of the interview. The Moniteur of yesterday, in an article on these complications, states that as the Grand Dukes will not be re-established by force, Austria will be freed from her engagement to grant large concessions to Venetia. It expresses strong doubt whether a Congress would obtain better conditions for Italy than the Treaty of Villafranca, and concludes by saying that the only way to resolve the difficulty would be War. But "Italy must be aware that France is the only Power which makes war for an idea, and France has fulfilled her mission."

By the last mail from the United States we learn that the American General HARNEY has taken possession of the Island of San Juan, or Bellevue, in Puget Sound. This Island is claimed by both nations, and is important to this country in connection with the new colony of British Columbia, inasmuch as it commands the entrance to Fraser's River. It is not known whether this seizure was the result of orders received from the Government at Washington, but as it has occurred while a detachment of British Engineers was actively engaged in surveying the country and fixing the boundary, there is reason to apprehend that it may lead to another boundary dispute between this country and the United States.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND. On Thursday, the 1st, the Queen and Prince Consort walked in the grounds of Balmoral. In the afternoon the Queen, Prince Consort, and the Princess Louise drove to the Woods of Abergeldie, which were driven for deer. The Prince Consort, accompanied by Sir George Grey, went out shooting. The Princesses Alice and Helena rode out. On Friday the Queen and Princess Alice rode out. The Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince Arthur, went out deer shooting. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Alice, drove to Invercauld, and honoured Mr. and Mrs. Farquharson with a visit. The Prince Consort went out deer stalking. On Sunday the Queen and Prince Consort, the Princesses, and Prince Arthur walked in the grounds. On Monday the Queen and Prince Consort and the Princess Louisa and Prince Arthur drove out. The Princess Alice and Princess Helena also drove out. Lord and Lady John Russell dined with her Majesty in the evening. On Tuesday the Prince Consort went out shooting, accompanied by the Queen and the Princess Alice.

THE PRINCE OF WALES was present on Saturday at a review of the 16th Lancers in Edinburgh. The Prince wore the uniform of a colonel in the army, and while the regiment was going through its evolutions his Royal Highness rode a trooper's horse, and joined in the different movements with the rank and file, including a charge of cavalry, in which he acquitted himself as a fearless horseman. In the evening his Royal Highness visited Musselburgh, and had some exercise in the national game of golf on the Links. On Sunday the Prince attended Divine service at Holyrood Palace, where the Rev. Mr. Tarver, chaplain to his Royal Highness, officiated.

THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE embarked in the Russian frigate General Admiral on Tuesday evening, and left the Motherbank at 7 o'clock on Wednesday morning under steam for Cronstadt. The Grand Duke visited the yard of the Thames Iron Ship-building Company at Blackwall on Thursday week, and spent some hours in inspecting the ships in progress, including the large steam ram building for the Admiralty. On Saturday his Imperial Highness visited the Museum at the India House.

THE EMBASSY TO PERSIA.—Major-General Sir Henry Rawlinson, the new Envoy to Persia, has left England this week with his suite. He will proceed by way of Paris and Marseilles to Malta, from whence H.M.S. Caradoc will convey him to Constantinople, and subsequently across the Black Sea to Poti, at the mouth of the Phasis or Rhion. He will ascend the Rhion in a Russian steamer to Mérani, and then travel post by Tiflis, Erivan, and Nakhshivan to the Persian frontier at Julfa, on the Arras. The remainder of the journey, by Tabriz to Teheran, will be performed on horseback.

THE CHANNEL FLEET, consisting of eight screw ships of the line, five steam frigates, and a screw gunboat, carrying in all 998 guns, anchored in Torbay on Friday, and left again on Wednesday morning on a cruise.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of yesterday publishes a long and important article on the state of Italy, of which the following is a summary:—

"The Emperor of Austria had promised to grant concessions on a large scale to Venetia, but requiring as a condition, sine qua non, the return of the Archdukes. The Emperor Napoleon accepted these conditions. It is easy to conceive that, if after the conclusion of the peace, the destinies of Italy had been entrusted to men who had more at heart the future of their common fatherland than little partial successes, the aim of their endeavours would have been to develop and not to obstruct the consequences of the treaty of Villafranca, and then Venetia would have been placed in the same position as Luxembourg with Holland. The Archdukes will not be re-established by foreign force, but that portion of the treaty of Villafranca not having been carried out, Austria will find herself freed from all engagements taken in favour of Venetia. Instead of a policy of reconciliation and peace, a policy of defiance and hatred will be seen to reappear, which will entail fresh misfortunes. Much, it would appear, is expected from a congress, which we hail with all our wishes, but we strongly doubt that the congress would obtain better conditions for Italy. It would not be right to ask from a great power important concessions without offering equitable compensations. War would be the only way to resolve the difficulty; but Italy must be aware that one power alone makes war for an idea—and that is France, and France has accomplished her mission."

The statement that the English and Russian Cabinets have made proposals to France and Austria, for the holding of a congress, is said to be without foundation. It is confidently asserted that a fresh interview between the Emperor of the French and the Emperor of Austria will shortly take place in Switzerland. Letters from Berne state that the Castle of Ahrenberg has been prepared for their reception, and that the admission of visitors to view the castle has been suspended for the present. Prince Napoleon quitted Paris on Thursday for Auvergne, on his way to Switzerland. It is supposed that his journey has reference to this interview. Prince Richard Metternich, the Austrian Ambassador at Paris, went to St. Sauveur last week, and was received by the Emperor, with whom he had a long conference. The Prince returned on Saturday to Paris, and has since left for Vienna, in order to make known to the Emperor of Austria the result of his interview. Count Arese was at St. Sauveur at the same time as Prince Metternich, and has since returned to Turin to convey to the King the opinion of the Emperor on the subject of the annexation of the ex-Duchies to Piedmont. The Emperor and Empress will leave St. Sauveur for Biarritz on the 11th or 12th inst. The Empress will then remain at Biarritz, and the Emperor, after visiting Bordeaux and Nantes, will proceed to the camp at Châlons. In the course of next month the Emperor will be present at the inauguration of the colossal statue of the Virgin which has been erected on a rock in the town of Puy (Haute Loire), and which is formed partly of guns taken in the Crimea. The Empress has just presented the dress worn by her on her first appearance at church after the birth of the Prince Imperial, the embroidery of which cost 25,000f., to the statue of the Virgin on the altar of Notre Dame de la Garde, at Marseilles.— The Plenipotentiaries of the Paris Conferences assembled on Tuesday to consider the double election of Prince Couza in the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia.—The Paris papers state that 23 millions of the loan for the war still remain, and that it is the intention of the Government to employ this sum on the fortifications of Brest and of Cherbourg. It is also announced that the Minister of Marine has ordered 200,000 projectiles and 30,000 carbines for the navy. The Indépendance Belge last week contained an article stating that France had only made peace with Austria in order to prepare for war with England, and that it is the Emperor's policy to tear up the treaties of 1815, and bring down England from the maritime supremacy which she holds in virtue of those treaties. The Constitutionnel contains a long article in reply to this statement, in which it says that such assertions ought to be treated with contempt, but as they do mischief they therefore deserve reprobation. It concludes by saying:—

"On the whole the Imperial Government, which conducted with England as an ally the campaign of the Crimea, and which made against Austria the glorious campaign of Italy, has no need to strive against the exclusive supremacy of any Power. Thanks to the firm and loyal policy of the Emperor, France, after the lapse of a very few years, can act with all the assurance of her restored dignity, as the equal of the most powerful nations. She does not desire to offend any people in their rights or their honour; she does not prepare the debasement or humiliation of any; and she does not fear that any one will humiliate or offend her. She has no wish to dictate to England any more than England assuredly desires to dictate to her. This is a situation of things calculated to reassure and not to alarm Europe—a situation which the Emperor himself one day admirably defined in saying, 'When France is satisfied Europe is tranquil!'"

—The great majority of the Paris journals contain articles praising the speech of the King of Sardinia, and coming to the conclusion that a Congress must be at last resorted to for settling the affairs of Italy. The Legitimist journals, however, have always declared against that course, affirming that the terms stipulated at Villafranca render any such steps quite unnecessary, and that a great Catholic interest should not be confided to the discussion of schismatic and Protestant States. One of these journals concludes by saying:—

"We oppose a Congress because, if it be important to England to make us expiate by injurious concessions to her the recent military triumphs we have made her witness, it is important for us to refuse her such satisfaction; because when we have done enough, as in this case, to disarm the systematic malevolence of an adversary, and have not succeeded, it only remains for us, says the wise man, to wait and see what will happen; and because finally, if two milliards of voluntary loans and two millions of soldiers are required for a just war against England, they will certainly be forthcoming."

M. Victor Hugo has just published a translation of the plays of Shakespeare, which has been his occupation during his long exile, and it is said that he will gain a more lasting triumph by this work than by any of his political effusions. A new system of watering high-roads and macadamised streets, and preventing the accumulation of dust, has been adopted in France. The roads are watered with a mixture of hydrochloric acid and water which hardens the earth quickly, and keeps it in that state during the day. At Lyons the plan has been successfully adopted for some months to the great satisfaction of its inhabitants.

SPAIN.—The Emperor of Morocco has declared traitors to the country all the tribes on the coast who have insulted the Spanish flag, and has promised to inflict exemplary chastisement on them before the very walls of the fortress of Ceuta. The Spanish Government, however, not feeling satisfied that this promise will be fulfilled, is continuing its preparations for sending out an expedition, and has directed the Spanish consul at Tangier to present an ultimatum. The basis of the Concordat which was signed at Rome on the 25th August was the absolute sale of the landed property taken from the clergy. The value realised by such property is to be paid to the clergy in bonds not transferable.

BELGIUM.—The Senate in its sitting of Tuesday last adopted the first article of the bill for the fortification of Antwerp by a vote of 34 against 15. Four members abstained from voting. The King of the Belgians left Laeken on Saturday morning for the Lake of Como, where he will meet his daughter, the Archduchess Maximilian; and it is said that his Majesty, before returning to Brussels, will pay a visit to the Emperor Napoleon at Biarritz.

DENMARK.—The Council of State is announced for the 26th September, and the opening of the Diet will take place on the 3d October. It is said that Prussia and Austria have informed the Danish Government that the affairs of Holstein are under discussion by the Federal Diet, and that this communication needed no further reply from Denmark.

BAVARIA.—M. von Abel, the former Minister, died on Saturday. The subscription to the military loan is closed; a great number of applications for shares had to be refused or reduced.

PRUSSIA.—The agitation which has for some months prevailed in Germany in favour of a new German union to replace the Federal Diet at Frankfort is beginning to assume an important character. At Eisenach on the 14th ult., at a meeting of Deputies from 21 of the States into which Germany is divided, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"1. We see in the present political situation great dangers for the independence of our German Fatherland, which have been increased rather than diminished by the peace concluded between Austria and France. 2. These dangers arise from the imperfect Federal Constitution of Germany, and they can only be avoided by a speedy change in this Constitution. 3. To this end it is necessary that the German Diet should be replaced by a firm, strong, and permanent Central Government, and that a National Assembly should be called. 4. In the present circumstances it is only by Prussia that effectual steps can be taken to reach this end; to secure the initiative of Prussia must, therefore, be the object of our efforts. 5. Should Germany be again threatened from without before the Central Government is definitively constituted, the conduct of her military forces and diplomatic relations abroad must be confided to Prussia. 6. It is the duty of every German to give his support to the Prussian Government, so long as its aims coincide with the aims and necessities of Germany, and its actions are directed to securing for Germany a strong, free, and united Constitution. 7. We expect from all friends of the German Fatherland, whether they belong to the Democratic or Constitutional party, that they will prefer the national independence and union to the claims of party, and will work together with one accord and with perseverance to arrive at a strong German unity."

The Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha, in answer to an address presented to him requesting him to support the patriotic efforts now making by the German people for reform, assured the deputation that he not only hails with joy the efforts which tend to the formation of a great national party, but that he will be always ready to assist them with his action and advice when the object shall be to procure for their fine country the consideration and the power to which the German nation has a legitimate right to pretend.

SWITZERLAND.—Accounts from Zurich state that on Tuesday week there was a meeting of the French and Sardinian Plenipotentiaries. On Wednesday there was a meeting of the second Plenipotentiaries of the three Powers. On Thursday there was a meeting of the Plenipotentiaries at which the regulation of certain points relating to the limits of the Lombard frontiers and the separation of the civil and ecclesiastical jurisdictions was taken into consideration. On Friday there was a Conference of the four French and Austrian Plenipotentiaries which lasted two hours. On Saturday there was no conference. On Tuesday the French and Sardinian Plenipotentiaries had a Conference, which lasted one hour. The subject was the settlement of the Lombard frontiers. Count Colloredo and M. de Bourqueney afterwards had a short consultation. It is said that Austria desires a guarantee from Sardinia against all future secret intrigues in Italy previous to making any concessions at the Conferences.

AUSTRIA.—Letters from Vienna state that none of the measures announced in the Ministerial programme have yet been carried out. It is asserted that the privileges to be granted to the Jews will not be the same throughout the whole Empire, but will be influenced by local circumstances. The principal privilege granted to them will be the right of acquisition of house property in larger towns. It is also reported that Austria intends to discount that portion of the Austrian debt which will be transferred to Lombardy, and to sell the public domains.

ITALY.—The members forming the Tuscan deputation arrived at Turin on Saturday at noon. The municipal body and some members of the Parliament received them at the railway terminus. The streets through which they passed were richly decorated, and numerous bodies of national guards were stationed in line along the principal streets. An immense crowd was collected to welcome the deputation, who alighted at the Hotel de l'Europe, where they addressed the people, thanking them for the enthusiastic reception they had met with. The King received the deputation at 4 P.M. when Signor Gherardesca, a member of the commission, addressed the King in the following terms:—

"If the wish of Tuscany for annexation with Piedmont only served for the aggrandisement of your Majesty's State, we should entertain doubts as to the acceptance of our vote by your Majesty. But our wish being inspired by the sentiment of Italian nationality, we hope that the thought of Italy will decide your Majesty to accept it."

The King replied as follows:—

"Gentlemen,—I am deeply sensible of the wish of the Tuscan Assembly. I thank you in my name, and in the name of my people. We have received your wish as a solemn manifestation of the will of the Tuscan people, who, after having made the last vestige of the foreign domination in Italy to cease, desires to contribute to the constitution of a new kingdom, which shall defend the independence of Italy. But the Tuscan Assembly will have comprehended that the accomplishment of its wish can only take place by the resolutions which are about to begin on the affairs of Italy. I second your desire, becoming myself strong by the strength which are given me by your wishes. I will support the cause of Tuscany before the Powers in which the Assembly puts its hopes, and especially before the magnanimous Emperor of the French, who has done so much for the Italian cause. I hope that Europe will not refuse to practise towards Tuscany that work of redressing grievances which it has in less favourable circumstances, practised towards Belgium, and the Danubian Principalities. Your country gives an admirable example of moderation and concord. You will add those virtues to that one which assures the triumph of all honest undertakings, and which overcomes all obstacles, namely, perseverance."

On Sunday evening a grand illumination took place throughout Tuscany. The arms of the House of Savoy were placed upon the gates of the Palazzo Vecchio and the Palazzo Pitti amid the enthusiastic cheers of the populace. The municipal body of Florence gave a grand fête, and the Government issued a proclamation expressing the words which the King of Sardinia had addressed to the Tuscan deputation. On the same day the municipality of Milan arrived at Turin for the purpose of inviting the deputation from Florence to visit that city. The deputation accepted the invitation, and on quitting Turin on Wednesday proceeded to Milan.—The Provincial General of the Romagna has opened the National Assembly by a speech, of which the following is a summary:—

"The people of the Romagna, after having exhibited prudence during the last three months, hastened in crowds to the electoral districts to record their votes. Now, it is for you, gentlemen, to give expression to the wishes of the people. The good result of my Government is owing to the nation who have elected me. I have endeavoured to provide for the defence of the country against aggressions from all sides by forming a league with the neighbouring States. Constitute your Government, and intrust it to him who possesses your confidence."

On Tuesday the Assembly unanimously adopted the following resolution:—

"We the representatives of the people of the Romagna, calling on the Deity to witness the righteousness of our intentions, declare that the people of the Romagna, strong in its right, will no longer submit to the temporal government of the Pope."

On Wednesday the Assembly unanimously adopted the following resolution:—

"We declare that the people of the Romagna desire annexation to the constitutional kingdom of Sardinia under the sceptre of King Victor Emmanuel."

The Assembly also authorised the President to present an address to the Emperor Napoleon and to the King of Sardinia, expressing their sympathies for Venice, and the Assembly further offered to make personal sacrifices in her favour. At night the city was illuminated, and the joy of the inhabitants is said to have been indescribable. Count Reiset, the French Minister, has taken his departure. The Marquis de Ferrière le Vayer, the French Ambassador at Florence, has been recalled by his Government. From Parma we learn that the elections have been concluded with admirable order. The most respectable men in the country have been elected, and the opening of the Assembly took place on Wednesday with great solemnity. After the religious ceremonies at the Cathedral, the Deputies proceeded to the Palace amid the cheers of the people and National Guard. The Dictator Farini addressed the Assembly, reviewing the history of the rule of the Bourbons in the Duchies, and terminated his speech amid cries of "Viva Vittore Emanuele." The vote respecting the annexation of the Duchy of Parma to Piedmont has been made known. There are 63,403 votes in favour of the annexation, and 506 against it. General Fanti has assumed the command-in-chief of the Confederate troops of Central Italy. It is said that General Kalbermatten, the commander of the Papal army, who had been ordered by the Pope to march from Pesaro and drive out the national troops, has returned to Rome on the plea that his force was insufficient for the purpose. It was reported at Rome that the Pope had signed a convention with the Spanish Government, by which her Catholic Majesty will place a military force at the disposal of the Holy See, sufficient to reduce the rebellious Roman provinces to obedience. Letters from Naples state that since the departure of the Swiss mercenaries, a mutinous spirit has shown itself among the Papal troops, and that the 7th Regiment of Chasseurs and a portion of the artillery have broken out in open acts of insubordination, uttering cries of "Vive l'Italie! à bas l'Autriche!" Accounts from Palermo state that the Swiss stationed in that capital have left for Marseilles to the number of 1300; but complete tranquillity prevails throughout Sicily.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—Accounts from Corfu state that the Ionian Parliament, which was to have assembled on the 10th of September, has been prorogued by the Lord High Commissioner to the 10th of December.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor of Russia reviewed on the 6th ult. the two naval divisions at Cronstadt which are about to leave for the Mediterranean and the Amour. The vessels were drawn up in line in the great roadstead. The first line consisted of the vessels destined for the Mediterranean, consisting of corvette Hango-Udd, the frigate Ilia Mouromets, carrying the flag of Rear-Admiral Nordmann, and the corvette Voll. The vessels destined for the Amour are the corvette Posadnik and the clippers Naiezdnik and Razboïnik. His Majesty, on board the steamer Alexandrie, escorted by the steamer Strelna, visited each vessel successively, and spoke kind words to the officers and men, expressing his satisfaction at the appearance of the vessels and crews.

THE CAUCASUS.—An order of the day announces the entire submission of Andia and Itchkeria to the expeditionary force of Prince Bariatinski. Itchkeria, up to the commencement of this year, was almost a terra incognita. The capture on the 1st of April last of Vedene, the last refuge of Schamyl, enabled the Russian army to enter the province. These two countries join Daghestan, and form the most inaccessible part of the enemy's territory. Since the taking of Vedene the Russians have pursued their success, and the inhabitants of Andia and Itchkeria having now made their submission, it is thought probable that in five years magnificent roads will be made in the Caucasus, and that travellers will be able to pass through the whole country without danger.

TURKEY.—Advices from Constantinople to the 21st ult. state that disturbances have taken place in Candia, caused by the collection of certain taxes from the Greek inhabitants. Five of the tax-gatherers have been murdered, and two battalions of soldiers have been sent to arrest the chief leaders in the affray. A Circassian deputation had arrived at Constantinople, and presented to the Ambassadors of the several Powers a declaration protesting against the invasion of their country by Russia, and stating that the whole of their provinces would be forced to submission if abandoned by the Porte.

SYRIA.—A letter from Beyrout of the 18th of August informs us that a sanguinary conflict has taken place in a village two leagues from that town between the Druses and Christians, in which more than 40 persons were killed, and several houses occupied by Europeans were pillaged. The Governor of Beyrout sent 150 Irregular Cavalry to the spot, and order was restored, but too late, as the disturbance had extended to other villages, and it is feared that a general war will take place between the Druses and Maronites, similar to that which caused so much destruction in 1846. There are in the Lebanon several extensive silk mills of great value, the property of Europeans, which, if the disturbances extend, will probably be destroyed.

EGYPT.—The French Government has intimated to the Porte that it will support the Suez Canal undertaking merely for commercial and industrial purposes.

MOROCCO.—The Moniteur of yesterday contains a despatch from Tangiers, dated Sept. 6, stating that the Emperor of Morocco is dead, and that Sadi Mohammed has been proclaimed Emperor at Fez and in Mequinez. Tranquillity prevails at Tangiers.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Accounts from the Cape to the 24th July state that the principal topic of discussion in the colony is the recall of Sir George Grey, the Governor. Meetings have been held and resolutions passed regretting his recall, which is attributed to his attachment to the system of federation and to the opposition he offered to the nomination of Mr. Cole, a cousin of Lord Derby, to the office of Auditor-General. Tranquillity reigns throughout the frontier and the States beyond. The Cape Parliament was prorogued on the 8th of July, after sitting 144 days. Among recent decisions it declined to annex British Kaffraria to the colony.

UNITED STATES.—Accounts from Washington state that the United States Government has bestowed upon the subject of the African slave trade its earnest attention, and, with a view of suppressing the traffic as far as possible, has initiated measures more efficient and extensive than ever before for that purpose. The squadron for the coast of Africa is to consist of 4 steamers and 4 sloops of war of light draught, for the purpose of more effective pursuit when the slavers run into shallow water; the number of guns is raised from the treaty number of 80 to 116; the most efficient officers have been appointed to command; and the naval depôt has been removed from Porto Praya to St. Paul de Loanda, in order to be nearer the principal points of traffic. The American coast is also to have a squadron of 4 steamers, which are to cruise in the neighbourhood of Cuba, for the purpose of capturing any slavers which may escape the vigilance of the African squadron.

CANADA.—The foundation-stone of the last pier of the Victoria Bridge has been laid by Mrs. Hodges, assisted by General Sir W. F. Williams. Sir Allan M'Nab is seriously ill, having been attacked with bilious fever and the gout simultaneously.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—The American General Harney has taken possession of the island of San Juan, or Bellevue, in Puget's Sound, which is claimed by both nations. The island is important, as it commands the entrance to Fraser's River. It is believed that this seizure will lead to a speedy settlement of the boundary question. An expedition left Victoria on June 23 for Queen Charlotte's Island to search for gold. Governor Douglas has issued a proclamation repealing the law which assessed a tax of one dollar on passengers proceeding through the colonies.

AUSTRALIA.—Accounts from Alexandria state that the Northam steamer got clear off the reef on the 25th of August, and arrived at Suez on the 28th with all the Australian mails and passengers. The damage was not so serious as reported, and she started for Bombay on the 31st.

Parliamentary Addresses.

THE RIGHT HON. JAMES WILSON, at the Cutlers' Feast at Sheffield on the 1st inst., spoke as follows on the duties of his new appointment as Chancellor of the Indian Exchequer:—

"At the moment that I made up my mind to accept that responsible duty, the first thing I determined upon was to make myself personally acquainted with the trade and commercial intercourse of India with England. Gentlemen, finance is not mere arithmetic, finance is a great policy lies at the bottom, as the rest of the Government of every country. Without sound finance no sound Government is possible; without sound Government no sound finance is possible, and therefore the first conclusion at which I arrived was, that I would not every day which I had to spend in England in personally knowing and understanding the commercial relationship between England and India. I have long held the opinion, and that opinion is not strange to this city or to England, that at the commercial and local policy of a nation lie the foundations, the happiness, the prosperity, and the welfare, not only of the working classes, but of the capitalists also. I have never been able to distinguish between the interests of the one and the interests of the other. I have never been enabled to distinguish how in any way the most and his employer, or those who are indebted to the employer for the profitable occupation of their capital, could in the slightest degree be divergent as to the prosperity of the one, relying upon it depends the prosperity of all. It has been upon these broad grounds that I for many years advocated those principles of free trade which have at last fortunately become the acknowledged policy of the country, not only I may say by the universal assent of all parties, but even by those who were strenuously opposed to those opinions a few years ago. I know of no principle which is good in England which is not good all over the world. There may, indeed, be striking distinctions of race and nationality, and a variety of reasons why the same principles should be carried into operation in different ways, but at least thus I will say, that a sound principle here is a sound principle everywhere, and that I believe that those principles by which the prosperity of this country has been developed are the only principles by which the prosperity of any people, in any part of the world can be secured. It has been on that ground chiefly that I have sought to understand the commercial relationship between the Indian Empire and this country, and one of the steps I have made in that object has been to visit this town. You will perhaps permit me to refer in a few words to the peculiar circumstances under which our Indian empire at the present moment exists. One of your honourable members, whom I regret not to find present, has distinguished himself by describing in vivid language what constitutes a British colony. He has painted in the brightest colours an English colonist going and into a country, taking with him English institutions, and carrying out with him English religion and English ideas. That, gentlemen, is not the case with regard to our Indian Empire. We have had a committee sitting on the administration of India for the last two sessions, and that committee has just presented its report to the House of Commons, and in the commencement of that report they find it necessary to call attention to the distinguishing mark between the Indian empire and our other colonies. They state that it differs in the respect. You have no thought of settling numbers in that country in the ordinary term of colonists. You have laws that are altogether known and established, and almost antagonistic to yours; you have a religion and settled national customs; you have a dense population and a low rate of wages, altogether inconsistent with the settlement of any English labourers. Notwithstanding all this, you have a population of not less than 200,000,000 of people to govern; you have acquired for yourselves a responsibility, and it is for England to say whether she will shrink from that responsibility. We will not now inquire as to the wisdom of these accessions. We have the responsibilities on our hands, and these responsibilities we must not shrink from. It may be that, in the hands of Providence, we are designed as the instruments of civilisation, and it may be that we are designed as the instruments for conveying a better religion than it has been the fortune of those races to possess, but whatever it may be, here we are in the possession of a great empire, with 200,000,000 of people whom we have undertaken to govern, and we must not shrink now from the responsibility which devolves upon us. That being the case, let us never forget that we have a duty to perform to 200,000,000 of people, irrespective of the interests of the British empire. I believe that every one of those interests is identical, and I believe that the development of their interests will prove to be best for the development of ours; but be that as it may, we have undertaken the duty, and whatever be the duty, that duty we ought to fulfil. It has been well observed by Sir John Lawrence and others that the instant the late mutiny broke out, the instant the power of the English people was withdrawn, that instant you had anarchy. Old feuds and old passions, which had been latent for many years, had then an opportunity of exhibiting themselves. And that proves to you what it would be if your ruling hand were withdrawn, if you were to slacken that power which you have exerted, and I hope successfully exerted, over the whole empire. Seeing that we have that duty to perform, it is for us to take the most enlightened view with which we can accomplish our object. One great point of discussion is the interference of Government with the religion of India. I believe that the great bulk of right-minded and moderate men are of opinion that while it is our bounden duty to give free and unlimited opportunity for the spread of the Christian religion, yet it would not be either wise or prudent for us as a Government to interfere with the religion of the natives. I am one of those who believe that if you have a great duty to perform in a country like India, it will be best performed by example, by showing that your system of religion is of a higher and better quality than theirs, by impressing them with the justice of your laws, by the liberality of your actions towards them, and by that intercourse which is, perhaps, though it may be called a low motive, I believe practically to be one of the best, by that intercourse which is promoted by the exchange of mutual interests, of commerce and industry. What we have to look to is the development of the resources of India. No doubt we have enormous difficulties to encounter. We have the difficulty of caste, and I will ask any man who knows this country to consider how impossible the progress of society would have been if every class of men had been fixed in one position, incapable of rising above that point, or altering themselves. In India you see the people tied down by caste, and whatever their talents or exertions may be, they cannot rise; so you may well conceive the enormous impediment which exists to the progress of that country. Knowing that these difficulties exist, it is our duty to consider how we can best contend against them. It is the character of the English people, knowing difficulties, not to attempt to shirk them, but to meet and overcome them. Now, difficult as the task may be of contending with that feeling of caste in the east, I have hopes that with the introduction of railways, with free commercial intercourse between man and man, with a fair and open communication, and above all by the justice which is administered in the European courts in India to the lowest as well as highest, you may in course of time even conquer that difficulty. The railways which have been already opened have done much to that end, for you find people of different castes travelling in the same carriages who have never before been seen together. The physical impossibility of distinction is putting an end to distinction, and by that means we may hope in course of time to overcome this difficulty, which I take to be the great impediment to the civilisation of the east. However that may be, we have had our duty to perform. We have to follow out the principles we have found to succeed in the west, we have to give to industry a fair field; we have to give it its own encouragement which law and order can possibly give, and to rely for our success and for our prosperity upon the prosperity of the people; and, above all, we have to rely upon [illegible] between our eastern empire and [illegible] of this country. You have had some experience of this policy in this country. You know very well that for many years great differences of opinion existed as to the [illegible] and commercial policy of this country, and yet, [illegible] that notwithstanding the great difficulties which Sir Robert Peel encountered, he at last succeeded in putting your finances in a flourishing condition, and they were able to [illegible] the claims of property and of social and political reaction. That I believe, will be the case with regard to India. In the great mission which I have accepted it shall be my duty, as I shall feel it to be my interest, to study the development of that country in its industrial resources. I believe that in doing so I shall best [illegible] whose [illegible] and that [illegible] is most important. I believe that it is only from the general prosperity of the people and the extension of their commerce that you can expect [illegible] and improve the state of the Exchequer of India. Entirely you may say that you have placed the empire on a sound [illegible] from which you have nothing to fear from external oppression or from internal insurrection. He trusted for the future without any further enlargement of that empire, except the interests of the people made a very strong claim upon us, and that those friendly feelings would compel us to [illegible] the common subjects of our Queen are living at peace and fair play. By these measures and by such a policy as I expect to see [illegible], but at no distant day, a [illegible] than Empire united with a flourishing United Kingdom."

MR. SOTHERON ESTCOURT, M.P., at a meeting of the Bear Club at Devizes, spoke as follows on the subject of the national defences, with especial reference to the state of the militia:—

"He had that morning received a letter, written to him under the direction of the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Lieutenant of the county, calling attention, to the very much shortened [illegible] of the Wiltshire Militia, commanded by Lord Methuen. He believed it was allowed on all hands that [illegible] who had an opportunity of knowing anything about the matter, that the Wiltshire regiment stood as high, if not higher, than any in the service for the effective condition in which it had been placed. Surely then, they were not going to allow so admirable a regiment to fall off for want of [illegible]. They were not going to sit quietly at home and see their [illegible] the business of other people; I dare say that as soon as the existing acts in our code fails short some of our [illegible] fellows will join the Militia." It was the business of every one of them to do all in his power to keep up the efficiency of the regiment. Year after year he heard people talking about the defences of the country. Yet, what had we, or what had any other [illegible] to keep up those defences? He certainly thought that the best defence for England was the navy. If ever we were to be attacked he believed the battle would take place off the shores of France. He hoped that the navy would be so kept up that we should be enabled to fight the battle at a distance from our shores; but, at the same time, we must run no unnecessary risk, and all must do something to provide for the internal defence of the country. Now that the harvest was over surely the farmers ought to do something to encourage the young men in their employment to serve for a certain time in the Militia. Coming closer home, as a Yeomanry officer he would ask them why they did not in Devizes emulate that excellent regiment commanded by Lord Alfred Paulet. It was not enough for them to make fine after-dinner speeches unless they followed them up by something like practice. They ought to try by encouraging others to join the yeomanry and militia to do something to keep up those defences, which he trusted would never be put to the proof, but which we should feel bound by ourselves to find defective if ever there was a prospect of attack; and it must be remembered that we had a strong power across the Channel which, though not a threat, should always be regarded as a warning. It was our duty to keep our neighbours as well as we could upon their own territories, but in doing so we should take care that if ever they came here we were fully prepared to meet them."

MR. WINGFIELD BAKER, late M.P. for South Essex, was entertained on Monday at a public dinner at Chelmsford, given in his honour by the electors and non-electors of that division of the county. In returning thanks for the toast of his health, he said:—

"As the meeting was a non-electors' festival, he hoped the word 'non-elector' would soon be less prominently before the country. The British constitution had been described as distinguished by the greatest perfection, but still he thought there was no task of which a statesman might be more proud than that of extending the franchise. He was addressing a portion of the labouring population, and it was sometimes said that they were represented because labour was attached to property. But to those who used this argument he would say, 'Would you like labour and property to change places?' Would they let the case stand thus—'Labour which represents the value of property is represented; therefore, you men of property who are claiming to be represented need not be?' The worst of the matter was, that in any assembly where one particular interest predominated the bias was always in favour of those so represented. The question had now arrived at such a stage that even the opponents of the Liberals admitted the soundness and urgency of their reasoning on behalf of the labouring population, and four months since—although it was doubtless in some degree in hope that they might retain power—they introduced a Bill on Reform which stood [illegible] against them. The working classes must in future be a moral power in the State; if they were to exert an effective influence on public affairs they must make their intelligence felt. A Reform Bill was promised for next session, and he hoped the promise would be realised. If it was to be realised it must give the country that which was essential for its realisation—viz., a 10*l.* franchise in counties. Without this it was impossible for the working classes to have that share in the representation to which they were entitled. Referring to local matters he urged that the Liberal party of the county must be prepared and united for a contest."

MR. PALK, M.P. for South Devon, at a large meeting of the Conservative party at Ashburton made the following statement of the course likely to be adopted by the Conservatives early in the next session:—

"I am told that the Ministry of the present day, far from having a majority in the House of Commons, is a Ministry on sufferance, and is supported only by a minority of the people. How long do you think this wretched Government is going to stand? Do you think that they are the men to bring in a Reform Bill that would be satisfactory to you and to the people of this country? Do you think that the man who sacrificed your interests and your honour at the behests of France is the man to maintain your interests and your honour? Well then, what is the duty of the great Conservative party? It is—and let there be no mistake about it—as soon as Parliament meets, to bring this question to an issue, and by a vote of want of confidence; which I hope and trust I shall see moved, to drive from power that Government which for years and years have maintained themselves in office by the greatest bribery and corruption, which has only just been found out, but to which the country is becoming alive. For wherever a fresh election takes place, although the Conservative candidate may not in every place be successful, you will find that the Conservative candidate has had the greatest number of hands held up in his favour; and therefore if the Conservative cause rested on universal suffrage the Conservative and not the Whig would have been elected."

MR. KEKEWICH, M.P., at the same meeting said :—

"It appears to me that we ought to view the present Government with very great suspicion; and the reason I view them with suspicion is, because they consist of gentlemen holding so many opinions that I think it is impossible for them to agree without some compromise of principle, and nothing is worse in the rulers of this country than any compromise of political principle. I regard the Government just as we see beautiful figures through a kaleidoscope. They are made-up shreds and patches, but when viewed altogether they present to the eye a very pleasing and imposing effect. What is this Ministry composed of? I do not wish to do them any wrong. I know the difficulties which public men have often to labour under; that sometimes there must be a little compromise of principle, but not too great a compromise. My hon. friend has told us that we should go to the House of Commons next session and propose a want of confidence in the Government. Let us, if we have a majority, have a fair stand-up fight; let us fight with confidence and courage, and try which is the strongest man. But do not resort to factious votes in trying to turn out the present Administration. If we determine to turn them out let us do it in an honest and straightforward manner."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

DEPARTURE OF THE GREAT EASTERN.—In consequence of unforeseen difficulties in completing the necessary arrangements, the departure of the Great Eastern from the river did not take place till Wednesday morning, on which day soon after daybreak the preparations for getting under weigh were made. Several powerful tugs were in attendance, the four principal ones being named, curiously enough, the Victoria, Napoleon, Alliance, and True Briton. Captain Harrison and the pilot, Mr. Atkinson, took their places on the starboard paddle-box. Mr. Scott Russell remained on the bridge to direct the action of the engines, both of which (screw and paddle) were under steam. Captain Comstock, one of the ablest American navigators, who brought the General Admiral over to this country, stood aft to transmit directions to the men at the wheel, as Mr. Langley's new steering apparatus was not completely fitted. Mr. Prowse, the chief officer, took charge of the fore part of the ship, and to all the other officers were allotted stations, either to transmit directions or signal to the tugs. Precisely at a quarter past 7 the last moorings were let go, but as at this time the sweep of the tide had turned the ship's bows so as to point rather in shore of the Seamen's Hospital ship, it was necessary to turn her slowly astern to get sufficient room to round the very sharp curve of the river below Greenwich. The screw engines started first, working beautifully, without noise, heat, or even apparent vibration, and when the paddle machinery came into play, a few revolutions sufficed to get her head round to the point required. The order was then given to go ahead slowly, and for the first time the Great Eastern started into motion, and with the slow majestic beat of her huge paddles moved grandly down the river, amidst the cheers of thousands of people who thronged the banks or put off in boats to witness her departure. The very first turn at Greenwich showed Captain Harrison and all the officers of the vessel that the great ship was as thoroughly under command as a river steamboat, and that the only difficulty to be overcome, or rather to contend against, was her length in turning the sharp curves of the river at Greenwich, Blackwall, and Woolwich. The vessel's draught was 21 feet 10 inches aft and 22 feet 3 inches forward—about the very worst trim in which she could have left her moorings, being down by the head 5 inches instead of some 5 feet down by the stern. A depth of 23 or 24 feet was the minimum required at the turnings, and that over a length of 800 feet, which is more than the breadth of the Thames at Westminster, so that these curves of the river were at first regarded with a certain amount of anxiety and distrust. A few moves of the vessel, however, showed that she was perfectly in hand. She steered as easily as a wager-boat, and her engines were found capable of starting her into motion or arresting her progress literally almost by a single movement of the hand. At Blackwall Point the river forms an acute angle, round which the tide sweeps with strong but most unequal force. The admirable manner in which Captain Harrison and the pilot managed the ship, the power and regularity with which the engines worked, would, if unobstructed, have soon got the vessel round this point. But a barque was moored right in the centre of the river, while a little beyond her lay a schooner in such a manner as effectually to block the "fair way" down the stream. The tugs were signalled to get the Great Eastern's head round, and tried to do so, but the strain was too much; at the most critical moment two of the hawsers parted, and for a few minutes the vessel was in a perilous position, as the sweep of the tide was strong and in an instant drove her towards shore. Nothing but the great power of her own engines saved her, though it was a delicate matter to use them properly. It was necessary instantly to counteract the influence of the tide and get her head off shore; but, at the same time, to do so in such a manner as would not give way enough to take her on shore on the opposite side of the river. Fortunately this was effected, fresh hawsers were passed to the tugs, the barque, the cause of all the peril, weighed her anchor, and after an anxious delay of 10 or 15 minutes, the Great Eastern worked slowly round and turned the point of danger. This was a great relief to all on board, and carrier pigeons were immediately sent up from the vessel and the shore to spread the welcome news. Once past Woolwich, all the difficulties were over. The tugs continued their assistance, but the vessel was so perfectly under control that while the tide was against her their assistance might have been easily dispensed with. But for the delay at Blackwall Gravesend would have been reached by 11 o'clock. As it was, however, the tide turned and set with the ship before that hour, when the vessel was at Long Reach off Purfleet. An immediate halt was therefore necessary, as in turning a few sharp corners with the tide the vessel's whole broadside would have become exposed to the full force of the stream, and not all the tugs in the river would have prevented her going ashore at once. It was therefore determined to anchor off Purfleet till Thursday morning. A single one of Trotman's anchors was let go at the bows, and the course of the ship, which it was said no anchors could ever hold, was at once checked, and the Great Eastern actually began to swing round in the Thames as much under command as a cutter. For the single instant during which she swung and remained broadside to the stream she seemed literally to bridge across the river. There was room enough for her to swing, but not a foot to spare. The vessel came round to the full force of the tide, and her chain cable taughtened up out of the water for a moment like an iron bar, but the single anchor never yielded an inch from the spot where it was first dropped. On Thursday morning at half-past 8 o'clock the ship resumed her course, and proceeded slowly down the river, in tow of the steam tugs, amidst the cheers of the vessels in the river and of thousands of people who thronged the shores at Greenhithe, Grays, Northfleet, and Gravesend. Just after passing a difficult turn below Long Reach, a little brig, which was quite safe when she was sailing up, appeared frightened at the sight of the huge vessel, and, altering her course, stood almost across the path of the Great Eastern, and was within an ace of being run down. On arriving at Sea Reach, the tugs were cast off, and the great ship was for the first time left to her own control, amidst the cheers of the passengers and crew, the ship's band playing the National Anthem. An increased amount of speed was then put upon her, and though less than two-thirds of her power was employed, she ran from the Lower Hope point to the Nore lightship, a distance of 15 statute miles, in two minutes under the hour. The Nore Light was reached at half-past 12, and the anchor let go in 8 fathoms. Before anchoring the vessel was put about, and went completely round under steam in less than three-quarters of a mile. In a few minutes afterwards Admiral Harvey came alongside in his yacht, dipping his ensign as he approached, as every vessel, man of war or merchantman, which has yet met the Great Eastern has hitherto done. In an hour afterwards the ship was surrounded by yachts and sailing boats of all kinds. During the run down from Gravesend the fixing of Mr. Langley's steering apparatus was completed, and worked to perfection. After adjusting the compasses, the ship left the Nore at 9·15 yesterday morning for Portland, to receive her passengers for the trial trip. At 11 o'clock she passed Margate at a distance of 8 miles from the shore, and she was expected to reach Portland between 7 and 8 o'clock this morning.

ST. GEORGE'S IN THE EAST.—The Bishop of London has addressed a letter to the vestry clerk of this parish in answer to the memorial of the vestry respecting the late disturbances in the church. In this letter, which is of great length, the Bishop says that the preservation of order rests with the churchwardens, and that his episcopal authority is, in reality, extremely circumscribed, though he is of opinion that this curtailment of power is by no means a thing to be regretted. His lordship doubts in the present case whether he can interfere authoritatively with the arrangement of the services, and though he may, perhaps, obtain some legal control over the "childish" extravagance in ecclesiastical costume, he remarks that the proceedings in any suit for that purpose would be tedious in their character, uncertain in their results, and by no means conducive in their general effects to the best interests of the Church. There remains therefore only his mediatorial authority as Bishop to be brought into action, and that, he significantly observes, has been slighted beforehand by one party, and not directly appealed to by either. His lordship adds, that if the vestry have any charge to bring forward of unsoundness of doctrine or other distinct violation of the law of the Church, which they think they can substantiate, he will be ready at once to hear and investigate it. With respect to the Rev. F. G. Lee, the Bishop says that that gentleman has no leave to minister in his diocese, and he has ordered an intimation to be sent to him to desist from so officiating till he obtains his lordship's formal authority; and he has written to Mr. Maconochie, who is a licensed curate in the parish, desiring him to take the service in the parish church till the rector's return. His lordship, in order to enforce obedience so far as he has the legal powers, in what he calls "this miserable controversy," calls on the churchwardens at their peril to do their duty in preserving order in the church, and bringing offenders to justice, according to the statute; and on the other hand, prohibits all unusual vestments, such as are complained of in the celebration of Divine service. In conclusion he advises the vestry formally to request the rector to join with them in submitting the whole case to his episcopal arbitration—both parties binding themselves to act as he may direct.

REPRIEVE OF DR. SMETHURST.—A reprieve was received on Friday evening at Horsemonger Lane Gaol, respiting the sentence upon Dr. Smethurst during her Majesty's pleasure. It is said that Sir George Cornewall Lewis, after a careful consideration of the evidence taken at the trial, as well as of the opinions which since the trial have been elicited from eminent medical men, that the death of Miss Bankes might possibly have been produced by natural causes, decided to grant the respite, the result of which is that his life will be spared. The reprieve was quite unexpected by the officers of the prison, who had so generally come to the conclusion that there was no chance of the sentence being commuted, that on Friday morning the persons who have charge of the scaffold and the apparatus connected with it were engaged in examining its different portions to see that they were all in working order. On being informed of the arrival of the respite Dr. Smethurst did not betray so much emotion as might have been expected under the circumstances, but he shook hands with the governor, and in an earnest manner asserted his entire innocence of the crime for which he had been condemned to die, and added, "What a dreadful thing it would have been to die an ignominious death for a crime that was never committed!"

THE RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.—On Monday night last a remarkable scene was witnessed at Woolwich. A meeting had been announced for 7 o'clock in the Town Hall to receive some account of the religious revivals in the North of Ireland from two gentlemen who had recently returned from a personal visit, the Rev. J. Baillie, of London, and General Alexander, of Blackheath. Long before the hour of meeting the hall was crowded to excess, and when Colonel F. Eardley-Wilmot, R.A., took the chair he stated that a second meeting would be held in the same place at 8 o'clock to accommodate a great concourse of people who were assembled outside. On the platform were many officers of the garrison as well as clergymen of the town and neighbourhood. The first meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. A. De La Mare, after which the Rev. J. Baillie and General Alexander successively addressed the meeting, giving some details of what they had witnessed. Both expressed themselves as solemnly impressed with what they had seen that they shrunk from coming forward before a mixed assembly to describe it; but as these were not simply subjects of curious speculation, but matters of life and death, which deeply concerned every soul before them, they felt it their duty to state the things which they had seen and heard. The stillness of the audience was very marked while the experience of several of the converts was related, especially while General Alexander stated three most striking features of the Irish revivals —a deep overwhelming conviction of sin, perfect realisation of the personality of the Devil, and the abounding mercy and almighty power of the Saviour. He said that two answers to the questions of doubting Christians were worthy of serious attention. First,—May not this be merely excitement? There is no excitement among the converts, except during conviction of sin; afterwards all is calm peace and holy gravity; the excitement is among those who go prejudiced to inspect the work. Secondly,—Will this be permanent? He believed it would, but if the sow that is washed returns to her wallowing in the mire he could only say that, wonderful as is the work now, this would be even more wonderful. Mr. Baillie then gave out two verses of the 40th Psalm, the converts' favourite psalm, and after prayer by the Rev. W. Hare, Chaplain to the Forces, the meeting with great reluctance left the hall to give place to those who were waiting outside, who soon filled the house to overflowing a second time. After prayer by the Rev. W. Hill, of the London Diocesan Home Mission, the former speakers again addressed the meeting, giving further details of their visit. The most solemn feeling pervaded both assemblages. At the conclusion the same two verses of the psalm were again sung with deep earnestness, and a concluding prayer was offered by the Rev. W. M. Thompson.

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE.—A meeting of the executive committee of master builders was held at the Freemasons' Tavern on Tuesday, when it was resolved, after a long discussion, that as Messrs. Trollope had resumed their works, the members of the association should also resume their works, by opening their shops on Monday next on the basis of the declaration agreed upon on the 1st of August, and that arrangements should be made by the association to assist them in carrying out that object. A deputation of foremen, appointed at a meeting of that body held at the Adelaide Gallery on Saturday last for the purpose of representing to the masters the propriety of reducing or modifying the declaration to a shop rule, attended at the Tavern, to present the resolutions agreed to at that meeting, but as it is part of the constitution of the association not to receive any deputation they were not admitted personally, but the resolutions with which they were charged were received by the secretary. Meanwhile the Anti-Strike Committee is steadily assuming a more important character, both as regards numbers and means, while the contributions received by the Union men from various parts of the country enabled them on Monday to distribute the sum of 1245*l.* 9*s.* to 7846 persons, including 4889 skilled artisans and 2957 labourers.—A great meeting of operatives connected with the building trades, including Society and non-Society men, was held yesterday in the Surrey Music Hall, at which it was resolved not to resume work on Monday in any shops in which the "document" is presented, and pledging themselves not to do so unless it is unconditionally withdrawn. It was stated by the chairman that at Mr. Kelk's that morning the document had been presented for signature, and all the workmen had turned out to a man. The same course had been taken at the Messrs. Trollope's, and with the same result.

ODD FELLOWS' BURIAL GROUND.—On Monday morning, about 400 members of the Odd Fellows' Society, with their wives and families, were conveyed in an express train to Woking, to witness the inauguration of a burial ground for the Pimlico district of Odd Fellows in the Necropolis. The ceremony commenced at 1 o'clock by the Rev. Mr. Lemaire delivering a discourse of a religious character on the ancient and biblical custom of a tract of ground being set apart for the burial of the dead. After that, the company adjourned to a plot of ground in the cemetery, an acre and a half in extent, which has been set apart for the members of the Pimlico District, where Mr. Stiff, the Provincial Grand Master, delivered an inaugural address, and formally opened the ground. Dr. Pettigrew then addressed those assembled on the advantages of extra-mural burial. It is stated that the unity of Odd Fellows consists of very nearly 300,000 members. There are 4000 lodges, numbering, on the average, about 80 members. The Pimlico District has nearly 2000 members. The subscription of each member is about 6½*d.* a week, for which he insures between 10*l.* and 12*l.* at his death, 5*l.* at his wife's death, and 12*s.* for illness, accidents, and donations to friends in distress.

THE HOUSE OF LONGMAN & CO.—This eminent publishing house has recently undergone an important change in the retirement of Mr. Brown and the death of a former partner, Mr. Orme. "When the house commenced business," says the Bookseller, "we know not; the first time we find the name is on the title-page of two works published in 1725 by J. Osborn and T. Longman. At this time the sign of their house was the Ship, which in 1730 became the Ship and Black Swan. What became of J. Osborn we cannot tell, but in 1736 we find Thomas Longman alone in business, which he appears to have carried on very successfully until his death in 1755. On the death of the first Thomas Longman, a nephew of the same name succeeded to the business. He died in 1797, leaving two sons. Thomas Norton, the eldest, succeeded to the business. Mr. Owen Rees entered in 1794, and soon afterwards became partner, and the business was carried on as Longman & Rees till 1803. Mr. Rees retired from the business in 1837, but died in the same year. In 1804 Mr. Cosmo Orme, a valued assistant, had entered into partnership with Mr. Thomas Hurst, who had got together a large country business; but it was thought desirable to retain his services, and the firm became that of Longman, Hurst, Rees, and Orme. From this time may be dated the great rise in the fortunes and business of the house. Perhaps nothing has tended more to raise the house to its present position than the plan adopted by the principals of introducing fresh blood from time to time—a plan which was carried out by the introduction of Mr. Rees, Mr. Orme, Mr. Brown, and in 1824, when Mr. Bevis E. Green, who had been apprenticed to Mr. Hurst in 1807, became a partner. This gentleman, who has had charge of the country department for many years, is the only remaining partner of the old firm Longman, Hurst, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Green. Mr. T. N. Longman died at his house at Hampstead in 1842, in his 72d year. He married Miss Slater, of Horsham, by whom he had a numerous family; and his personal property was sworn under 200,000*l.* His son, Mr. Thomas Longman, entered as partner in 1832. William, another son, of considerable literary abilities, became partner in 1839, and more recently Mr. Roberts, another gentleman who was apprenticed in the house in 1826, and who for many years represented it in the country, was in 1856 received into partnership. The firm now trade under the name of Longman, Green, Longman, and Roberts."

THE RECENT AURORA BOREALIS.—The continental papers state that the aurora borealis, which was seen in England on the 28th ult., was also visible throughout France and other parts of Europe, and even as far south as Rome. For several hours before and after the appearance of the aurora, the needles at the telegraphic offices in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and more distant places were violently agitated, and the electricity was so abundant that no information was obtainable for the newspaper offices, nor were private messages transmissible. The same phenomenon was observed in Paris and other parts of France. At Nantes, in particular, all the lines, except those of Napoleon Vendée and Rennes, were interrupted one day for six hours, and in one of the telegraphic offices it was found possible to light a chemical match by the sparks emitted.

FLOGGING AT WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—On Thursday morning all the available force of the depôt brigade were assembled at 6 A.M. for "punishment parade," to attend the flogging of three men belonging to their corps who had been tried by a court-martial on the previous day, and convicted of simple desertion, which signifies without re-enlistment. For this crime they had been condemned to suffer the punishment of 50 lashes and 84 days' imprisonment each, and to be branded with the letter "D." Two only were, however, brought forward on Thursday, the sentence of the third having been for some reason postponed to a future day. These two men had been discovered absent without leave, and had been brought back to garrison by the police. The first man, named Green, bore his punishment "like a true soldier;" but the second, named Davis, a young recruit, protested his innocence of the crime of desertion, bellowed and screamed for mercy, and supplicated Colonel Talbot and the medical officers present to have compassion on him, or he should die. As his back was covered with boils, which bled at every stroke, the cat was ordered to be withheld for a few moments, when, finding that his punishment was not at an end, he gave vent to exclamations for mercy, and partly succeeded in delivering himself by force from the straps which bound him to the halyards. The punishment was again ordered to be continued, when at every succeeding stroke his cries and exclamations were most lamentable, insomuch that officers and men swooned away at the sickening spectacle, and had to be carried into the open air. One officer and about a dozen non-commissioned officers and men who had recently entered the service fainted, and others stopped their ears and closed their eyes, lest they, too, should become unnerved, and be subject to the reproach and ridicule of their comrades. It is said that in consequence of the continued desertions for the purpose of obtaining the bounty on re-enlistment, the infliction of the lash is of almost daily occurrence at Woolwich, and that to guard against a repetition of the recent escapes of prisoners the sentences pronounced by the daily courts-martial are ordered to be executed without delay, and in most cases are carried out on the following morning soon after daybreak.

THE SUBURBAN POST.—The Postmaster-General has given notice that in consequence of recent improvements in connection with the district offices, the aid afforded by the use of the district initials, the separation in posting of the district from the general post letters, and the adoption of street-door letter-boxes, the operations of the department have been so much facilitated as to enable him to include in the evening delivery all letters posted between 4 and 6 P.M. in cases in which these aids are given. Consequently on Monday next the late evening delivery will be extended to many additional places within about six miles of the General Post Office, including all the following suburbs, viz.:—Barking, E.; Battersea, S.W.; Blackheath, S.E.; Bow, E.; Brixton, S.; Brompton, S.W.; Camberwell, S.; Charlton, S.E.; Clapham, S.; Clapton, N.E.; Deptford, S.E.; Dulwich, S.; Eltham, S.E.; Fulham, S.W.; Greenwich, S.E.; Hackney, N.E.; Hammersmith, W.; Hampstead, N.W.; Highgate, N.; Holloway, N.; Homsey, N.; Ilford, E.; Kensington, W.; Kilburn, N.W.; Lewisham, S.E.; Leyton, N.E.; Leytonstone, N.E.; Merton, S.; Norwood, S.; Notting Hill, W.; Paddington, W.; Peckham, S.E.; Penge, S.E.; Poplar, E.; Rotherhithe, S.E.; St. John's Wood, N.W.; South Lambeth, S.; Stockwell, S.; Stoke Newington, N.; Stratford, E.; Streatham, S.; Sydenham, S.E.; Tooting, S.; Tottenham, N.; Walthamstow, N.E.; Walworth, S.; Wandsworth, S.W.; Willesden, N.W.; Woodford, N.E.; Woolwich, S.E. This delivery will comprehend all letters and newspapers addressed to houses usually open to the letter carriers or provided with letter-boxes, and posted in London at any office or pillar letter-box before 6 P.M., or at the principal office at the district to which they are addressed before 6.45 P.M., provided—1, that they are fully prepaid by stamps; 2, that they bear the proper initial letters; and, 3, that at any office where a separate box is provided for the district post they are dropped therein. The Postmaster-General avails himself of this opportunity of reminding the public that the addition of the district initials to the address insures a priority of delivery to letters arriving in London by the day mails, and also to those addressed to places within the district in which the letters are posted.

SUNDAY BANDS IN THE PARKS.—The fourth season terminated on Sunday, and the report published by the committee expresses satisfaction at the liberal manner in which they have been supported, and states that the results of this season justify them in promising increased exertions in the next. The arrangement for lost children was so effective that no fewer than 23 were restored to their friends from the platform in the Regent's Park during the evening.

FATAL FIRE IN WATERLOO ROAD.—On Wednesday morning a fire broke out in a pawn shop near the Waterloo station, which caused the death of three persons. The occupant of the house, a Mr. Burton, with two of his sons escaped by climbing over the roof of the adjoining house, but his wife with a son and daughter were unable to climb the parapet and were burnt to death on the roof. It appears that, in order to give an external appearance of greater height to the house, the parapet had been built nearly 6 feet high, forming a complete trap from which there was no escape for women and children, while the fire in the rear rendered it impossible for the unfortunate persons to retrace their steps. The bodies have been removed to Lambeth workhouse to await the inquest.

THE POPLAR POISONING CASE.—George Frederick Royal, shoemaker, was brought before the magistrates at the Thames Police Court on Tuesday on remand, charged with poisoning Zipporah Wright, by administering to her a quantity of cantharides. The evidence of the witnesses examined extended to such length that it was impossible to take that of Dr. Letheby and the other medical witnesses, and the prisoner was again remanded to Friday. It appears that the antecedents of the prisoner are anything but good. He deserted his wife and two children about 18 months ago, in Kensington, and a reward was offered for his apprehension by the parochial authorities. About the same time he seduced the deceased, Zipporah Wright, a young woman of respectable family and connexions, and since he has been at Upper Sydenham he has been paying his addresses to a young woman to whom he represented that he was a single man, and once took her to the Surrey Theatre, and on another occasion to the British Museum.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Report states that the health of London is improving, and the mortality below the average of the season. In each of the corresponding weeks of 1849 and 1854 between 2000 and 3000 of the population died; in the week that ended on September 3, the registered deaths amounted to 1047. After excluding the years of epidemic cholera this is 76 less than the average number (1123), corrected for increase of population. The births of 1711 children, 878 boys and 833 girls, were registered during the week.

ALDERSHOTT.—The Fifeshire Advertiser says that during one of the Queen's recent visits to Aldershott while she was inspecting the camp she became fatigued, and expressed a wish for a cup of tea. She accordingly and without any ceremony entered the nearest officer's tent, which chanced to be that of Lieut. Drysdale, son of Mr. Drysdale, town-clerk of Kilrie, and to him the desire of his Queen was made known. As was to be expected the lieutenant found himself at first a little awkwardly situated for the reception of so distinguished a visitor, but the ease and homeliness, so to speak, of her Majesty quickly put all feeling of that kind to flight, and he proceeded to cover his humble table with the best cloth he had, and having handed out a soldier's "tea things," he retired, leaving the august lady with her attendants to enjoy her cup.

ARUNDEL.—The Sussex papers mention the death of a distinguished occupant of the keep of Arundel Castle—the celebrated horned owl called Lord Thurlow, who died last week at the patriarchal age of 100 years. He was hatched in the reign of George II. and was one of seven descendants of some very fine specimens of horned owls, who were introduced into the castle many years ago by the then Earl of Arundel. The oldest denizen of the keep is now about 63 years of age. The famous bird which has just expired has been blind for the last 25 years, and in walking about in the interior of the keep invariably ran against the projections of the building. It was carefully attended to by the keeper, and died from physical exhaustion.

BRADFORD.—On Saturday the borough magistrates, after a long investigation, committed a man named Thomas Clark, a second-hand clothes dealer in Chapel Lane, for trial at the next assizes for the wilful murder of Patrick Crowley, labourer, aged 27 years. A coroner's inquest previously held had resulted in a verdict of Wilful Murder against him. It appeared from the evidence that the prisoner, who is an Irishman, had a christening party at his house on the previous Sunday night, to which deceased and others were invited. In the course of the night a quarrel arose between the prisoner and deceased respecting the comparative merits and standing of their respective counties in Ireland, and the prisoner ordered deceased to leave the house. A scuffle ensued in which the prisoner stabbed deceased three times in the abdomen, inflicting such serious wounds that he died three days afterwards from peritoneal inflammation. The prisoner's unmarried daughter, aged 17, and his son-in-law, a tailor named Irwin, have been committed for trial at the sessions for violently assaulting the police and attempting to rescue their father after he had been taken into custody.

CAMBRIDGE. — On Thursday week the village of Willingham, in this county, was visited by a most destructive fire, causing damage estimated at 10,000*l*., 16 dwelling houses having been rendered uninhabitable, and a considerable quantity of corn, hay, straw, &c., destroyed. No lives were lost, but some men were severely burnt in endeavouring to save furniture from one of the burning houses.

COWBRIDGE.—An attempt at robbery which, in its daring, recals the exploits of Turpin and the olden race of highwaymen was made on Saturday morning between this town and Bridgend. The mail-cart, with the letters, was driving along the high road to meet the up-train to London, when at a point which is locally known as "the golden mile," the driver observed three ill-looking fellows at a short distance beyond him. Their appearance and manners excited his attention, and he determined to be prepared for them. As he neared them, he observed that they had divided, and so placed themselves that two would be on one side of the cart and one on the other, and that they all three were prepared for simultaneous action. The driver carried a heavily-loaded whip, and twisted the thong of it tightly round his left arm—for he was left-handed. This circumstance, no doubt, greatly favoured his defence; for, as the foremost robber made a spring at his right arm, he dealt him a heavy blow on the forehead with the loaded end of his whip. The blow was so well aimed that the robber reeled and fell before his companions could succeed in their attempt to grasp the horse's head. The driver urged on his horse, and the animal sprang forward, the shaft of the cart knocking one of the men over. The driver galloped on to Bridgend, where he procured the assistance of two police constables, who proceeded on horseback in the direction of "the golden mile." The highwaymen in the meantime had attacked Mr. Evan Jones, a butcher of Llisworney, and were in the act of robbing him when the officers came up with and captured them. They have since been sent for trial at the assizes.

DOVER.—A grand banquet will be given, by permission of General Craufurd, on the heights at Dover on the 13th inst. to the gallant 32d, the heroes of Lucknow, who recently arrived from India. The regiment numbers 228 rank and file, the whole of whom are to be regaled by the inhabitants, who have formed a committee to raise the required funds, and who intend to extend their invitation to the men's wives.

DUDLEY.—The Birmingham Canal burst its banks on Tuesday week, near a place called Dudley Port. The canal at that point runs over a limestone mine, and the amount of stone worked from under the surface has gradually weakened the earth until it has been unable to withstand the pressure from above. In the evening of the day named the banks sank 8 or 9 feet with a fearful crash, but though all the ground in the neighbourhood was immediately flooded, no lives were lost. The damage done is very great, however, and it will be impossible to work the lime pit for a long time to come. The traffic to Birmingham and Wolverhampton will be conducted on another branch of the canal.

HARTLEPOOL.—The barque Margaret, of this port, in ballast from Lisbon, bound for Pugwash, arrived at Falmouth on Wednesday, in consequence of the murder of the captain, Mr. Barker, on the 22d ult., by a Brazilian sailor, who had shipped at Lisbon as steward and cook. The act was perpetrated on the 22d ult. at 4 A.M., by his cutting the captain's throat, while asleep in his berth, with a carving knife sharpened for the purpose; he subsequently attempted to serve the watch in the forecastle in a similar manner, but was overpowered by the two mates, after wounding one of them. The murderer, whose name is Charles Amoys, has been committed by the Falmouth magistrates to the Central Criminal Court for trial, by which step (under the sanction of the Secretary of State) the case will be more speedily brought before the judges than if it had been sent to the county assizes.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The recent election of Mr. Leatham for this borough was celebrated on Thursday evening by a public banquet, at which 3000 ladies and gentlemen were present. The chair was taken by Mr. Hales, the chairman of Mr. Leatham's committee, and among the guests were Mr. Bright, M.P., Mr. Baines, M.P., Mr. Crossley, M.P., and the most influential members of the Liberal party in the district. Mr. Bright spoke at great length, and moved the following resolution, which was carried amidst much cheering:—

"That in the opinion of this meeting the great question of Parliamentary Reform, involving a more faithful representation of the people, greater purity of election, a wiser and more economical expenditure of public money, and an administration of national affairs more consistent with national interests, demands the immediate attention of the Legislature, and ought not to be postponed beyond the first opportunity for a satisfactory settlement."

LEEDS.—On Saturday night information was furnished to the police of a highly important character, and which while it opens up grounds for suspicion in a new direction also furnishes an elaborate clue to the supposed murderer of Mr. Broughton, at Harehills, on the 6th ult. It will be remembered that the murderer or murderers took a German silver watch from the person of Mr. Broughton, and that this watch was offered in pledge about two hours after the murder, in the first place at the shop of Mr. Topham, pawnbroker; and in the second instance and successfully at that of Mr. Barrass, in Dyer Street. At the latter place the man pledged the watch for 4*s*. Nothing more was heard about the watch, which was in the possession of the Leeds police, until Saturday night, when a young man named Smales, a collier from Whitwood, near Normanton, presented himself at Mr. Barrass's shop and tendered the ticket for the watch. Mr. Barrass at once took the young man to Mr. English, the chief constable, to whom he stated that he had bought it of a man called "Charley Normington" for 5*s*. In consequence of this communication Mr. English went over to Whitwood on Sunday morning, taking with him the young man Smales, and there succeeded in tracing several witnesses who connected Normington with the first possession of the ticket. These persons stated that he had made various efforts to dispose of it, and that when he at length succeeded in doing so to the young man Smales, he left the neighbourhood. It appeared also that while at Whitwood he told the wife of a collier that he had offered the watch at Mr. Topham's, at Leeds, but did not pledge it there; and that on the day after his arrival his landlady supplied him with a bowl of water, in which he proceeded to wash a handkerchief. She was struck with the colour of the water during this operation, and went towards the prisoner, who immediately folded up the handkerchief, and, wet as it was, placed it in his waistcoat, either in the pocket or within the breast; and on leaving her he left behind a shirt, which bears distinct traces of discolouration, apparently of blood. This shirt was given up to the chief constable, and is now in the hands of Mr. Nunneley, of Leeds, surgeon, for the purpose of examination. At present there is no continuous trace of the prisoner after leaving Whitwood, until Thursday last, when he broke into the house of his uncle at Bradford, and there stole some wearing apparel and other articles, which he brought to Leeds, and pledged. Mr. English on receiving this information disguised himself as a collier and went to Sheffield, where he succeeded in apprehending Normington in the suburbs of the town. He immediately brought him to Leeds, where he was examined before the Mayor and magistrates on Tuesday. In the course of the examination one of the witnesses proved that the prisoner and another man were at the cabin of a colliery, about a quarter of a mile from the place of the murder, on the morning on which it was committed, and that the prisoner had a thick stick or hedgestake with him, which the witness said he was almost sure was the same which had been found in a field near the site of the murder, and which, no doubt was the instrument by which the murder was committed. After the examination the prisoner volunteered to the chief constable a confession of some length. After giving an account of his being in company with another man, whom he fully described, he stated that the murderous blows were not struck by himself but by his companion; that he was then distant from Mr. Broughton a number of yards, and that after the attack he refused to travel in company with his "pal" again. This is tantamount to a confession of his own guilt, for the stick with which the blows were struck was his own, and he is found dealing with the pawnticket on the same evening. Mr. English subsequently sent a description of the second man to the chief constable of the West Riding, and he is expected to be speedily captured. The other men who were in custody on suspicion have been discharged.

NORWICH.—The local papers state that on Sunday week the son of a shoemaker, residing in St. Faith's near this city, while walking in the plantation of Mr. Joshua Reynolds, in that parish, found there a vagrant from Wisbeach, called John Back, lying on the ground in a state of great exhaustion. He called to the boy for assistance, telling him he was dying of starvation. The boy, who says he saw the man in the same place three weeks before, when he took him to be a keeper, at once returned to the village and gave the alarm. A number of villagers immediately started for the spot, and, finding the man too weak to stand, put him in a cart and drove him to the Union. On stripping him it was found that the side on which he had been lying was covered with sores; and the man stated that about five weeks ago he was taken ill and went into the plantation, which he had since been unable to leave. He had subsisted during that time on grass and the bark of the trees which grew near him. He says he was lying on the ground during the terrible thunderstorm that occurred a few weeks ago. Hundreds persons have visited the plantation since he was there, and the place where he has lain is distinctly marked upon the grass, while the marks where he gnawed the bark of the trees are plainly visible.

READING.—The hop-growers of West Surrey are making efforts to establish a hop fair in this town. The railway accommodation affords direct access to parts of the country, and the opinion has gained ground that a hop fair in Reading would, as a matter of course, attract many merchants who have now to attend Farnham hill and other places which are difficult to get at as far as railway convenience is concerned. A committee of gentlemen interested in the project has been formed to confer with the principal hop-growers in Surrey, Kent, and Worcestershire, and the matter has been so far taken up that there is a prospect of the first fair being held in Reading in the course of the present month.

WEYBRIDGE.—A fire broke out at an early hour on Thursday morning in one of the wings of the Oatlands Park Hotel, and was not subdued until the lamentable four of the bedrooms were destroyed. It is supposed to have originated in the billiard room, and to have been caused by some partially smoked cigar falling upon the flooring.

THE "REVIVAL" IN THE NORTH.—The letters from for some time past have been filled with details of this extraordinary movement, which seems to be spreading to the counties adjoining that in which it commenced, and to be making astonishing progress throughout the north. It is no unusual thing, according to the local papers, to see mills stopped in the busiest part of the day, in consequence of the hands leaving off work to attend meetings for prayer, and it is at these gatherings that the people are "struck," that is, suddenly filled with an awful sense of sin, which makes them roar and scream, and often lie without motion for hours. On recovery, they profess great peacefulness of mind, and are then looked upon as converts. Not only individuals, but whole villages have been thus transformed. The publicans, instead of receiving large sums on a Saturday night, cannot now sell a glass, and some have waited for this, but have themselves turned out the puncheons and pulled down their signboards. The drunkard's song, the ribald language, the curse and blasphemy that used to be heard in certain localities have ceased, and people have come forward in numbers and taken the temperance pledge. Of course the most contradictory opinions prevail as to the true character of the movement, but the testimony of a Roman Catholic Judge, Chief Baron Pigott, has been given unanimously in its favour. At the recent Down Assizes the Chief Baron, in sentencing three prisoners for murderous assault in connection with a miserable exhibition of party feeling, referred to the religious movement in the north as having extinguished all party animosities and produced the most wholesome moral results upon the community at large. His lordship spoke in the most favourable terms of the movement, and expressed a hope that it would extend over the country, and influence society to its lowest depths.

THE PRIESTS AND THE FAIRS.—The condemnation of the extra fair of Navan, commonly known as the Leinster fair, has been successfully carried into effect by the priests by means of a system of passive resistance. After full notice had been given to the people an attempt was made on Monday to effect sales, but from sunrise to sunset not a single head of cattle was to be seen on the fair green. There was no riot, nor any disposition to create disturbance.

THE LOSS OF THE ARGO.—On Saturday the Board of Trade issued the report of Mr. Porter, the magistrate, and Captain Harris, the nautical assessor, who have recently held an inquiry at Dublin into the loss of the Argo, New York and Galway steamer, on the coast of Newfoundland, on the 28th of June last. The report of Mr. Porter states his deliberate opinion that Captain Halpin's omission to slow the engine of his ship in a dense fog was the primary cause of the disaster, and that the loss of the Argo was therefore occasioned by the default of the master; and Captain Harris, the nautical assessor, expresses his concurrence in the report. The Board of Trade have consequently directed that Captain Halpin's certificate be suspended for six months.

THE RECENT MURDER IN COUNTY LIMERICK.—That there is no longer any doubt that the murderer Mr. Crow, one of the tenants on the Earl of Derby's estate, is sheltered by the people on the estate, his lordship has marked his sense of the outrage by issuing positive instructions to have the entire estate cleared of all tenants, with the exception of the immediate relatives of the murdered man.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—The first general meeting of the Association at Aberdeen will be held in the Music Hall on Wednesday next, the 14th inst., at half-past 8 P.M., when Professor Owen will resign the chair to the Prince Consort will assume the presidency, and deliver an address. The different sections will assemble every morning in the rooms appointed for them in Marischal College, for the reading and discussion of reports and other communications, from Thursday the 15th, to Tuesday the 20th. On Thursday evening 15th there will be a conversazione in the Music Hall. On Friday evening, the 16th, Sir Roderick Murchison, Director-General of the Geological Survey, will deliver a discourse on the Geology of the Highlands, in the Music Hall. On Monday evening, the 19th, the Rev. T. R. Robinson, Director of the Armagh Observatory, will deliver a discourse in the Music Hall on Electrical Discharges in Highly Rarified Media. On Tuesday evening, the 20th, there will be a conversazione at the Music Hall. The concluding general meeting will take place in the Music Hall on Wednesday, the 21st, at 3 P.M. The proceedings of the general committee, and the grants of money sanctioned by it, will then be stated. The exhibitions of portraits, &c., promise to be complete, and very attractive. The Prince Consort has intimated to the Town Council of Aberdeen that, as he has only made arrangements for staying one night in that city at his visit to the approaching meeting of the British Association, he will be unable to accept the invitation of the Town Council to a banquet on that occasion. His Royal Highness will be the guest of the Convenor of the county, Mr. Alexander Thomson, of Banchory House, about four miles distant from the city.

THE WALLACE MONUMENT.—The committee have awarded the first premium to Mr. J. T. Rochead, architect, Glasgow; the second to Messrs. Peddie & Kinnear, architects, Edinburgh; and the third to Messrs. Haig & Low, Glasgow. They had 80 designs to select from. The design to which the first prize was awarded represents a mediæval Scottish tower, the proposed height of which will be 220 feet, with a staircase leading to the summit.

HOLYROOD PALACE.—Since her Majesty's last visit to Edinburgh very extensive alterations have been made in the external aspect of Holyrood. Formerly surrounded with small houses and gardens, and almost inaccessible either from the town or the park, it now stands in the midst of a somewhat spacious and neatly-enclosed garden, and a carriage drive of ample breadth has been formed all along its front, communicating on the one side with the New Town, in the centre with the Old Town, by way of Canongate, and on the other extreme with the Queen's drive, the Royal parks, and the hills of Arthur's Seat. Among the still more recent improvements carried out are the renovation of the ancient mansion of Croft-au-righ, situated in the north-east corner of the palace gardens, occupied some time by the Regent Murray, while his sister, Mary Queen of Scots, still held sway over her kingdom; the erection of lodges at Holyrood, Parson's Green, and St. Leonard's, the outlets of the park; the formation of a fine sheet of water in the valley below St. Anthony's Chapel, and skirting a portion of the drive; and the extension of the drive from St. Leonard's to the village of Duddingstone, opening up some very picturesque ground, and a very useful public thoroughfare. Among the other improvements which have been effected are the erection of iron gates at the different entrances to the quadrangle in front of the palace; the enclosure of another large piece of ground within the royal park, almost below Salisbury Crags; and the erection of a fountain taken from a dilapidated but still attractive model in the courtyard of Linlithgow palace, in the place of a somewhat ungainly statue of her Majesty, placed in front of the palace some years ago. This fountain, which was put into play for the first time on the Queen's arrival last week, is Gothic in design and is remarkable for its sculptural embellishments, the most characteristic of which are a series of figures descriptive of the costumes and pursuits of the frequenters of the old Scottish Court. These figures, which are 16 in number, and are from 18 to 20 inches in height, have been executed from models furnished by Mr. John Thomas of London. For the supply of the fountain, water is obtained from the adjoining hills, and when its numerous jets are in full play, it is a welcome decoration to the Palace. Its cost, which is about 1400*l.*, has been provided for by a Parliamentary grant for the purpose.

Railways.

NARROW ESCAPE ON THE SOUTH WALES.—On Monday evening, as the express train from London to Haverfordwest approached the river Cleddau, it was observed that the drawbridge was raised. The train was then distant about 100 yards from the bridge. The driver instantly turned off the steam, and all the breaks were likewise applied, and the engine was brought to a dead stand when within a single foot of the opening. Another revolution of the engine wheels would have precipitated the train into the river.

Obituary.

LORD JAMES STUART, M.P. for Ayrshire, died very suddenly on Wednesday morning at Dumfries House, Cumnock, the Ayrshire seat of the Bute family. His lordship, who had been staying there for some weeks past, was at Ayr races last week, and, for his years, seemed to be hale and hearty. He had sat in parliament for nearly fifty years, having represented Carlisle as far back as 1818. He afterwards represented Buteshire, the Ayr burghs, and latterly Ayrshire. He was brother to the late Marquis of Bute, and uncle and heir presumptive to the present youthful Marquis.

THE RIGHT REV. BISHOP CARR, late Bishop of Bombay and rector of Bath, died in the latter city on Monday after a short illness. After resigning the episcopate of Bombay, he succeeded the Hon. and Rev. W. J. Brodrick as rector of Bath in 1854, and discharged the duties of his office till within a short period of his death. He had lately been suffering from an attack of paralysis, from which he never recovered, and prior to his death had resigned the rectory of Bath into the hands of the patrons, the trustees of the late Rev. Charles Simeon. Bishop Carr was a member of the Evangelical party in the church, but he displayed so much firmness and conciliation as to win the esteem of churchmen and laymen of all shades of opinion.

THE DEAN OF ST. ASAPH (the Very Rev. Charles Butler Clough, A.M.) died at the Deanery, St. Asaph, on Sunday last, after an illness of some months. He was born at Erbistock, Denbighshire, in 1793, and had therefore completed his 66th year. Having passed through Rugby and St. John's, Cambridge, he was in 1818 ordained as curate of Meifod, of which place he became vicar in 1820, and continued there till he was made Dean in 1854. He was Archdeacon of St. Asaph from 1841 to 1854. In 1817 he married Margaret Sidney, daughter of the late Mr. Edward Jones, of Wepre Hall, Flintshire, who died in 1826 without issue. He was an active member of the Diocesan Church-building Society, which may be fairly attributed to his exertions, and has increased the number of churches in the diocese by 25 per cent.

SIR JAMES GRANT, BART., of Monymusk, died on the 30th ult. at Woodhill, Inverurie, Aberdeenshire. He was born in 1791, and succeeded his father, the fourth baronet, in 1839. This family is descended from the ancient house of Grant of Grant, now represented by the Earl of Seafield, and diverged from the main stem in 1578. The late baronet, Sir Francis, was one of the senators of the College of Justice, and bore the title of Lord Cullen, derived from the ancient family seat in Banffshire. As the late baronet has died without issue, he is succeeded in the title and estates by his brother, now Sir Isaac Grant, Bart.

LIEUT.-GENERAL GILMOUR, R.A., died at Hammersmith on the 31st ult., in his 76th year. He had been in the service above 60 years. He received his commission of Lieutenant-Fireworker in 1800, and at that of Second Master in the following year. He afterwards served on the east coast of Spain, was present at the battle of Castalla, and was on several occasions engaged with the enemy in covering the retreat, and employed in the batteries against Tarragona. After leaving Spain he joined the army under Lord W. Bentinck at Genoa. He attained the rank of Lieut.-General in 1857.

MAJOR-GENERAL TORRIE, of the Royal Marines, died at Topsham, Devon, on the 31st ult., aged 67. He entered the service in 1808, and served as Lieutenant of Marines in the Apollo, 38, from 1809. He landed in command of a detachment of Marines in 1812 at St. Cecilia, and dislodged a body of troops from a strong position, and facilitated the capture of the vessel from which they had landed. He was afterwards at the attack and surrender of the Island of Augusta at the taking of Port Barbalo, at the attack of the sea batteries and surrender of the Island of Cattaro, and at the capture of the Dentz Island. He became Lieut.-Colonel in 1841, and Major-General in 1857.

LIEUT.-COLONEL SHAFTO, of the 64th Regiment, died on the 1st inst., after having attained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel entirely by personal merit. When serving in the 13th Regiment he took part in the first Burmese war, for which he had a medal, and while in the 64th he served in the campaign on the Sutlej, and was severely wounded at the battle of Ferozeshah.

MR. LYNE STEPHENS LYNE, Accountant and Controller-General of Inland Revenue, died on Saturday last. He had been suffering for many months from a paralysed illness, and was upon the partial recovery of upon important duties which an attack of paralysis put an end to his sufferings. Mr. Lyne was formerly Accountant-General of Excise, but, on the amalgamation of the Boards of Stamps and Taxes with the former department the office of Controller-General of Taxes was abolished, and an Accountant and Controller-General of Inland Revenue appointed. This important office was conferred upon Mr. Lyne, who has been long known as an able civil servant. The cause of his death, which is stated to have been occasioned by, the effect of a too close application to official duty.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 5.

The number of Beasts is about the same as on Monday last. Thursday's quotations are maintained for the choicest kinds, but other descriptions are rather lower. We have a larger supply of Sheep, and trade is not so brisk as of late; on the average prices are lower, and several remain unsold. Lambs are a dull sale, and Calves are rather lower. From Germany and Holland there are 1680 Beasts, 8626 Sheep, and 168 Calves; from Scotland, 80 Beasts; from Ireland, 300; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 200, and 2800 from the northern and midland counties.

Beasts, 5270; Sheep & Lambs, 29,160; Calves, 212; Pigs, 520.

THURSDAY, Sept. 8.

We have about an average supply of Beasts. Trade is dull, but there is not much alteration in prices. The number of Sheep and Lambs is not large, but sufficient for the demand. We retain Monday's quotations, although they are not so freely given. Calves are rather lower. From Germany and Holland there are 230 Beasts, 1980 Sheep, and 220 Calves; from Ireland, 43 Calves; from the northern and midland, 600 Beasts; and 118 Milch Cows from the home counties.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 5.

There was a fair supply of English Wheat to this morning's market, consisting chiefly of the new crop, the quality of which continues to be very variable. The finest samples were picked at about 1s. per qr. below the prices of this day se'nnight, but a large proportion remained unsold at the close. Business in foreign was very limited, and where sales were effected a decline of 1s. per qr. upon white qualities was accepted. Barley sells slowly at late rates. Beans are a quick sale at full prices. Peas are unaltered in value. Oats are dull, and Friday's advance is barely maintained. There is no alteration in the value of Flour.

Friday, Sept. 9.

Although the weather during the last eight days has been less settled and occasionally boisterous with heavy showers, it has on the whole been dry, with strong westerly winds. No interruption has yet occurred to the long continued dullness of the Wheat trade and gradual drooping of prices; the decline in the chief markets of the kingdom is quoted from 1s. to 2s. per qr. upon the week. Business in Spring Corn has also been depressed, and the turn in prices on each description in the majority of markets favoured the buyers, Barley in Scotland proving the exception, and commanding an improvement of 6d. to 1s. per qr. Business in Flour was inactive, and sold at a reduction of 1s. per sack in Liverpool and Newcastle. The arrivals of grain and seed-laden vessels off the coast from Southern Europe this week are considerable. The sales are to a moderate extent, including Polish Odessa Wheat at 41s. 3d. per 480 lbs. and Taganrog Ghirka at 42s. per 492 lbs.; Odessa Maize at 28s. 6d. to 27s. 10½d. Galatz at 28s. 9d. to 29s. per 492 lbs.; Ibrail at 26s. 6d. to 26s. 11d. per 480 lbs.; Taganrog Barley at 23s. 1½d. to 24s., Odessa at 22s., both per 400 lbs. The arrivals of foreign Oats this week are again considerable, and moderate of all other grain. The attendance at this morning's market was small, and the little English Wheat fresh up or left over from last day was taken slowly at former prices. Foreign attracted rather more attention without leading to any increased transactions; in the retail sales effected only late rates were obtainable. For Barley there is a retail demand at about late rates. Oats meet a fair sale at Monday's prices.

Arrivals from Sept. 5 to Sept. 9.

Liverpool, Tuesday, Sept. 6.—The arrivals of foreign breadstuffs since this day se'nnight are quite on a trifling scale; we have a little barrel Flour from New York, and a large parcel of sour from South America. From Ireland the receipts of Wheat and Flour are slightly increased, but of Oats and Oatmeal rather less. We had a fair attendance of both town and country millers and dealers at our Corn Exchange this morning; the demand for Wheat was, however, on the most retail scale, and prices remain at a decline of 2d. to 3d. per cental quoted last market day. Flour had only a small consumptive inquiry, and must be noted 6d. per sack and barrel cheaper. Indian Corn is unaltered in value, and a fair quantity is taken off for feeding purposes. Oats dull sale and rather lower; new Oatmeal in good request at from 30s. to 31s. per 240 lbs.; old is unsaleable. Egyptian Beans, Peas, and Barley had each only a small retail inquiry.

Friday, Sept. 9.—The grain market is dull, and attendance limited. Wheat 1d. per cental lower. Flour a shade easier, and difficult of sale. Beans and Indian Corn obtainable at a slight decline. Other articles without change.

GUTTA PERCHA TUBING FOR WATERING GARDENS

THE GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the following

Testimonial from Mr. J. FARRAH, Gr. to BOSWELL MIDDLETON JALLAND, Esq., of Holderness House, near Hull.

"I have had 400 feet of your Gutta Percha Tubing, in lengths of 100 feet each, with union joint, in use for the last 12 months for watering these gardens, and I find it to answer better than anything I have ever yet tried. The pressure of the water is very considerable, but this has not the slightest effect on the tubing. I consider this tubing to be a most valuable invention for Gardeners, inasmuch as it enables us to water our gardens in about one-half the time, and with one-half the labour required."

Manufactured by the Gutta Percha Company, Patentees, 18, Wharf Road, City Road, London, E.C., and sold by their Wholesale Dealers in town and country.

IMMEDIATE ORDERS WILL PREVENT DISAPPOINTMENT.

"SIGMA'S" UNIVERSAL SEED PLANTERS (Drills and Dibbles) lately dispersed since the Prize of the Royal Agricultural Society was awarded them. The "MULTUM IN PARVO," forming eight perfect implements, highly commended; see testimonials. The Measure Distributor carried off the Prize Medal in 1858, and recently found to prevail, see Gardeners' Chronicle, July 30 and August 6. "Simple, promising, and ingenious." The STEEL DRAW SHARE HOE closes a row between Turnips at one passage. Engravings sent.—C. PRATTEN, Hurstpierpoint, Sussex. All Patented.

GREAT REDUCTION IN THE COST OF EVERY DESCRIPTION OF STRAINED WIRE FENCES, BY

FRANCIS MORTON'S New Patented Improvements, which entirely dispense with every kind of separate straining apparatus, stone and wood blocks, skilled labour, and insure permanent rigidity and efficiency.

FRANCIS MORTON & Co., James's Street, Liverpool.

FRANCIS MORTON'S PATENT STRAINED FENCES combine the entirely new features of Hoop Iron; also the WIRE CABLE STRANDS, PLAIN FENCING WIRE, &c., stretched and made to retain PERMANENT RIGIDITY by SELF-ACTING CAST IRON WINDING STRAINING PILLARS, fixed with PATENT IRON STANDARDS, fitted with the new CONCAVE GALVANISED FACED PLATES. These are found to Combine more than any other kind of Fencing Standard, making a far more substantial fence at one-third the cost of wood or ordinary wire fencing, and lasting for one hundred years.

Expressly designed for the use of landed proprietors, tenant farmers, and for general enclosures. Price with the Patent Self-acting Winding Straining Pillar, and FRANCIS MORTON'S best Wire Cable Strands prepared for wood uprights, 8*d.* and 9*d.* per yard of fence; plain Gates with the Patent Iron Standards, 1*l.* 2*s.* to 1*l.* 5*s.* per yard of fence.

CAUTION TO PURCHASERS.—Wire Cable Strands of very inferior and quite unsuitable material are offered under the same name and Old Patents Lapsed Nonsense, which after a short use are found entirely to disappoint the expectations of purchasers. To guard therefore against imitations through other interested arrangements, &c., and to protect the character of our manufactures, we beg to notify there is no other manufacturer of our name of Wire Cable Fencing Strands or of Corrugated Galvanised Iron for Roofing; and for the Patent Wire Fencing, Corrugated Roofing, &c., will be supplied from our Manufactory here in Liverpool; and purchasers can only insure having the genuine Wire Cable Fencing Strands which have stood the test of upwards of 14 years' wear without deterioration by observing that our only correct address is FRANCIS MORTON & Co., James St., Liverpool.

RED SPIDER, THRIPS, SCALE, MEALY BUG, AMERICAN BLIGHT, ANTS, &c., prevented and got rid of by the PATENT GISHURST COMPOUND, which should also be applied when dressing Fruit Trees in autumn and winter. Price 1*s.* 6*d.* and 6*s.* per box, exclusive of carriage, with directions for use, and testimonials from the most eminent professional and amateur gardeners in the country. Where the consumption is not large the small-sized boxes are recommended.

Nearly all of the principal Nurserymen and Seedsmen in England, Scotland, and Ireland have taken in their supplies, most of the Nurserymen in the first instance for their own use, and are prepared to sell single boxes. A list of their names is occasionally advertised in the Gardeners' Chronicle, "Cottage Gardener, &c.

Extract from Leading Article in Gardeners' Chronicle, April 9, 1859.

"That it really kills red spider, aphides, mealy bug, thrips, and scale, it is impossible to doubt, in the face of reports of practical men, among whom we may mention Mr. D. Judd, of Althorp Gardens." Then follows a caution against the use of a too strong solution.

A new List of Testimonials stating the strength of solution and mode of application in the different cases has been printed and is now issued with the boxes.

News of the Week.

A GREAT disaster—the greatest which has ever been sustained by any European flag in the Eastern seas—has fallen upon the allied English and French squadron at the mouth of the Peiho river. It will be remembered that the treaty concluded by Lord ELGIN with the Chinese Commissioners provided that the QUEEN OF GREAT BRITAIN and the EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH should be represented at Pekin by Ambassadors, who should enter into direct relations with the EMPEROR OF CHINA. In accordance with these provisions, Mr. BRUCE and M. DE BOURBOULON were sent out to China as the Ambassadors of England and France, with orders to proceed to Pekin by the Peiho River. They reached the mouth of the river on the 18th of June, escorted by the allied squadron under Admiral HOPE and Capt. TRICAUET, and immediately sent letters on shore announcing their arrival. But the Chinese Plenipotentiaries who were to have met them at that place were not forthcoming, and the Ambassadors found that since Lord ELGIN's visit the Chinese had constructed fortifications on the banks of the river, and had barred the entrance of the stream with four formidable lines of booms and stakes. The officer sent on shore to communicate with the authorities was not allowed to land, and was informed by some petty Mandarins that there were no officials nearer than Tientsin, and that the Ambassadors might proceed to Pekin by a passage to the northward. They stated that the "country people" had thrown up the forts and barred the river as a protection against pirates, but the forts were not yet manned. In answer to the Admiral's request that the barriers should be removed in order to enable the Ambassadors to proceed to Tientsin, they promised that the removal should be commenced within 48 hours. This promise not having been fulfilled on the 20th the Admiral sent a letter to the Tautai at Tientsin, requesting free communication with the shore; but after two days' delay an evasive answer was received. The Ambassadors were now satisfied that the Imperial Government did not intend to permit their advance towards the capital. They therefore handed over the matter to the Admiral, who proceeded on the 25th of June to force the passage. Having hoisted his flag in the Plover gunboat, he advanced with 9 gunboats and 2 despatch vessels against the first barrier. It proved however too strong to be forced; but some of the stakes were drawn by the Opossum, and the Admiral immediately advanced against the second barrier. He had no sooner passed the breach made in the first than a gun was fired from the batteries, and, as if by magic, the masks of all the forts were rolled up; a Mongol force of 20,000 men appeared upon the walls, and a fire of from 40 to 50 guns was concentrated upon the gunboats with a scientific accuracy and skill which made it evident that they were served by European gunners. The action immediately became general, but the gunboats having no broadside fire were unable to sustain the heavy fire of the forts, and soon became entangled in the intricacies of the booms and stakes or stranded on the mud. Admiral HOPE was wounded early in the action, but gallantly kept the deck till he was again more seriously injured. Meanwhile the fire of the forts having slackened, the Marine and Naval Brigades, a small party of Royals, some Artillery and Engineers, were ordered to land and to take the batteries in flank. But the spot selected for this operation was a bank of mud so deep as to reach the knees, and in some places the waists of the troops. While wading through this they were decimated by a fire of artillery, gingalls, Minie rifles, and arrows, directed against them from the batteries. After struggling through the mud, they had to cross a ditch 10 feet broad, and 5 feet deep, and in so doing spoiled their ammunition. Their commanders, Colonel LEMON and Captains SHADWELL and VANSITTART, had by this time been wounded and disabled; and Commander COMMERELL and Major PARKE took the lead. They then encountered a second ditch through which they fought with undinching gallantry, and at length under an incessant fire 100 men out of the 1000 who had landed reached a third ditch close under the walls of the forts. But they had lost their scaling ladders in the mud, and being too exhausted to attempt the assault without reinforcements, which it was impossible to send, they were compelled to retire, the Chinese picking them off by the light of carcases and blue lights during the retreat. Meanwhile the loss in killed and wounded on board the gunboats had been very severe; the Lee and Kestrel had sunk, and the Cormorant, Plover, and Starling had run so fast aground that it was necessary to abandon them. Our loss was 81 killed and 345 wounded; the loss of the French was 4 killed and 10 wounded, being in each squadron about the same proportion to the numbers engaged. Among the killed were Captain M'KENNA, of the 1st Royals, doing duty on the Admiral's Staff, Lieut. GREAVES of the Assistance, Lieut. CLUTTERBUCK and Mr. HERBERT of the Chesapeake, Lieut. RASON of the Plover, Lieut. INGLIS of the Highflyer, and Lieut. WOOLRIDGE of the Marine Brigade. The list of wounded includes the names of Admiral HOPE, Captain TRICAULT, the French Commander; Captain VANSITTART, Captain SHADWELL, Captain WILLES, Colonel LEMON, Major CROKER, Captain SLAUGHTER, and Captain MASTERS, of the Royal Marines, and numerous other officers whose names will be found in another column. It is evident from these details that all hope of the Treaty being carried out is at an end, and that a fresh war ending in the capture of Pekin is now inevitable. Orders have already been issued for the immediate despatch of large reinforcements to China, and the Moniteur of Wednesday officially announced that "the Government of the EMPEROR and that of Great Britain are about to take measures together to inflict chastisement and obtain every satisfaction which so flagrant an act of treachery requires."

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday week the Queen, accompanied by the Princesses Alice and Helena, drove to Dhu Loch. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. On Thursday her Majesty and the Prince Consort drove to Strathdon, and returned by Ballater. On Friday her Majesty drove out, and the Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by the Princesses Alice and Helena, drove out and witnessed the driving of the Abergeldie Woods for deer. The Prince Consort went out deer shooting. In the evening the Prince of Wales arrived from Holyrood Palace. On Sunday the Queen, Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Alice attended Divine service at the parish church of Crathie; the Rev. Dr. Cook officiated. On Monday the Queen and Prince Consort rode out. In the evening the Queen, Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, the Princesses, and Prince Arthur, were present at a ball given by her Majesty and the Prince Consort to the gillies, keepers, &c., of the Balmoral and neighbouring properties. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Alice, rode out. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went to the Abergeldie Woods, which were driven for deer. The Count de Flandres arrived on a visit to her Majesty.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO LOCH KATRINE.—A deputation from Glasgow arrived at Balmoral on Tuesday, and presented a respectful request, in the name of the Lord Provost, magistrates, and council, that her Majesty would inaugurate by her presence the opening of the new supply of water from Loch Katrine to Glasgow, the works for which are now on the eve of completion. Her Majesty complied in a very gracious manner, and will proceed from Edinburgh to Loch Katrine on the 14th of October, and open the sluice by which the first stream of this magnificent store of water will be conveyed to Glasgow.

THE PRINCE OF WALES left Holyrood Palace on Saturday for Balmoral. Before leaving Edinburgh his Royal Highness desired to mark his recognition of the facilities offered him for study at the University by being registered as a student. The secretary to the University accordingly went to Holyrood on Friday, and after obtaining the signature of the Prince to his obligations as a student, delivered to him the usual matriculation ticket. It is rumoured at Oxford that the Prince will not occupy Frewen Hall, the residence which was taken for him in that city; but that the lodgings in Christ Church occupied by the late Canon Barnes will be fitted up for his reception. The Rev. C. F. Tarver, who has superintended the studies of his Royal Highness since 1855, will not accompany the Prince to Oxford, but will retire from the Royal service, and resume his duties as rector of Ilketshall St. John's, Suffolk.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE landed at Dover on Friday from Calais, on his return from Germany.

THE GRAND DUCHESS MARIE of Russia and her suite have left Claridge's Hotel for Torquay.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—Sir Baldwin Leighton was elected on Wednesday for South Shropshire without opposition, in the room of the late Hon. Windsor Clive.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR CHINA.—The Government have decided on despatching several additional steam-frigates and corvettes, together with a sufficient number of sailing frigates, to augment the squadron in the Chinese waters. A force of 1000 additional Marines will be sent out in them from the divisions at Chatham, Portsmouth, Plymouth, and Woolwich. Orders were received at the Naval rendezvous, Tower Hill, on Wednesday, to enter able and ordinary seamen, landsmen, petty officers, and artisans for the ships about to be despatched, and in order that they may be manned with all expedition the Coastguard are to be called on to volunteer.

THE VOLUNTEER RIFLE MOVEMENT.—Mr. Sidney Herbert, the Secretary for War, has written a letter to Lord Vivian, in which he says:—

"The volunteer movement is doing right well, and falsifying the sinister prophecies of its opponents, for there are no indications of slackness among those who take it up, but an evident determination to acquire a thorough knowledge of their duties; and the Government, I can assure you, fully appreciate the value of this public spirit. General Hay reports from Hythe that the volunteer officers who have come there for instruction have beat any officers he has ever had there under instruction—so great has been their zeal, as well as intelligence."

The following is a list of the principal towns in which companies have been already formed, and in most of which the different corps have made great progress in their drill and are now fully equipped:—Accrington, Aylsham, Ashford, Birkenhead, Brentwood, Bradford, Bridport, Bristol, Bungay, Blackburn, Bromfield, Birmingham, Coventry, Callington, Cheltenham, Cranbrook, Colchester, Canterbury, Cambridge, Chelmsford, Deal, Dover, Edinburgh, Exeter, Elmbridge, Falmouth, Fowey, Folkestone, Feversham, Gloucester, Gravesend, Greenwich, Grantham, Helstone, Ipswich, Ilford, London, Lewisham, Lynn, Liverpool, Lincoln, Louth, Marylebone, Maidstone, Malling, Monmouth, Newport, Norwich, Penzance, Plymouth, Pontypool, Padstow, Peckham, Ramsgate, Richmond, Rochester, Romford, Redruth, Rugby, Sevenoaks, Salisbury, Stowmarket, Sleaford, Stroud, Sheffield, Tunbridge, Tenterden, Taunton, Tynemouth, Tewkesbury, Woolwich, Woodbury, Wadebridge, Weybridge, Walton, Witham, Wisbeach, and Yarmouth. The London Brigade, London Scottish, and Surrey companies have accepted the offer of the Crystal Palace Company to place a portion of their ground near the archery butts at the disposal of the different London corps for purposes of practice. The Gravesend, Yarmouth, Plymouth, and other sea-coast corps are to be artillery, instead of rifle corps, by desire of the Government; and the Secretary at War on Thursday notified to the officers of these artillery corps that they will be attached to Militia artillery regiments, in order that they may be made perfect in their drill. The uniform varies in different localities, but it appears for the most part to be either dark green with occasionally a scarlet collar, or grey with black and scarlet or green facings. The London Scottish have decided on having a kilt company. It is stated that the Government contemplate issuing a further supply of 25 per cent. of rifles as soon as they are in a position to do so.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur, in an article containing the details of the late treachery of the Chinese, concludes by saying:—

"The Government of the Emperor and that of Great Britain are about to concert measures to inflict chastisement and obtain every satisfaction that so flagrant an act of treachery requires."

It is reported in Paris that 12,000 French troops are ordered to be held in readiness for China, and that General Wimpfen is likely to command them. It is also rumoured that the Governments of France and England have both agreed that it will be necessary to hold a Congress for the settlement of the Italian question. The article which appeared last week in the Moniteur on the complications in Italy has produced a profound sensation throughout France. It is said that it came direct to the office from the imperial residence at St. Sauveur, that there was no intermediate person employed, and that none of the Cabinet Ministers were acquainted with it until they read it in the official journal. It was immediately after the conversation with Prince Metternich, and just as the Ambassador was returning to Vienna, that the Emperor thus expressed his feelings. Their Majesties have arrived at Biarritz. The King of the Belgians was expected to arrive on Wednesday, the magnificent Château d'Ardoin having been hired for his reception. The interview between the Emperor Napoleon and King Leopold was expected to take place on Thursday. Count Walewski, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, was to leave Paris on the 17th for Biarritz. Count Reiset has returned to Paris from his mission to Italy. The French Government has sent an officer to the Island of Perim to ascertain whether the island has been converted into a citadel or is used simply as a lighthouse. M. de Sercey, who had been sent by the French Government to India on a secret mission, is said to have sent home a report containing a very gloomy picture of the situation of British India. M. Kossuth, who has been spending some time in Paris, has returned to London. It is said that he expresses himself as weary of political affairs, and as unable to cope with the intrigues of the present day. The Cathedral of Cambrai was nearly destroyed by fire on Friday last. In less than half an hour the roof fell in, but the interior of the church was preserved. The magnificent organ was totally destroyed. The loss is estimated at 350,000f. M. Jacques Coste, founder of the Paris paper Le Temps, and one of the journalists who most contributed to the success of the Revolution of 1830, died in Paris on Sunday last. He was one of the 40 who signed the protest against the ordinances published by Charles X.

ALGERIA.—Advices from Algeria state that a troop of Morocco cavalry had attacked two French outposts on the frontiers, and had met with a repulse.

SPAIN.—Letters from Madrid state that the English Ambassador had addressed inquiries to the Government concerning the concentration of Spanish troops in Algeciras. The reply of Spain is said to have been drawn up with great courtesy, but did not fully explain the reasons of the concentration of troops at this point.

AUSTRIA.—The Vienna official journals express their approbation of the late article in the Moniteur, and hope that it will have due effect on the people of Central Italy. Prince Richard Metternich left Vienna on Thursday evening for Paris. The official portion of the Vienna Gazette of Saturday contains an Imperial decree for the regulation of the Protestant churches in Hungary, the Woywodschaft, Croatia and Slavonia, and the military boundary district. By this decree, each Protestant parish has henceforth a right freely to elect its own rector, vicar, and schoolmaster. The supreme authority, legislative and administrative, is lodged in the General Conference and the Synod. In all matters of discipline the Protestant clergy are to be subject only to their own ecclesiastical authorities. Education is to be free, and the Protestant schools are for the future to be under the direction and inspection of their own ecclesiastical organs. The anti-Protestant Mortmain Act is abrogated, and the right is given to the different Protestant communities to acquire property in any and every legal way. A modification of the marriage law is conceded, and as soon as the Protestant Ecclesiastical Courts are established the Imperial authorities will cease to have a right of jurisdiction in matrimonial matters. A right of inspection in the case of schools is reserved on the part of the Crown, but only Protestants are to be appointed to the office. A general right of superintendence in the Conferences and Synods is also reserved, but this right does not seem to involve any actual control over the proceedings and acts of those ecclesiastical conventions. The non official part of the same Gazette contains an article promising that great concessions shall be made to the Protestants of all other provinces. A Protestant member has already been elected to the Consistory of Vienna. The Austrian Government has ordered two 50-gun screw frigates and 12 sloops and gunboats to be built at Pola. The uniform of the Austrian infantry is about to undergo a complete change; the white coats are to be abolished, and the troops are to have tunics and trousers of a bluish grey. The tunics are to have red facings, and the belts and accoutrements are to be in black leather.

ITALY.—The principal inhabitants of Turin have presented an address to the head of the municipality of that city, requesting him to appoint a committee of the Syndics or Mayors of the principal towns, for the purpose of making known in France the gratitude of the Italian people to the Emperor Napoleon, by erecting a monument in Paris at their expense expressive of those feelings. The National Assembly of Parma, in its sitting of Saturday, voted unanimously, and by ballot, the annexation of the provinces of Parma to the kingdom of Sardinia, "under the sceptre of the glorious dynasty of Savoy." In the same sitting an address of thanks to the Emperor Napoleon was unanimously adopted. In the sitting of Wednesday the Assembly unanimously voted the confirmation of Signor Farini as Dictator, and further resolved to take into consideration a proposal to authorise the Dictator to contract a loan, the amount of which remains to be fixed. The deputations from Parma and Modena arrived at Turin on Thursday. The members of the Municipality and the Parliament went to meet them at the railway terminus, and the people gave them an enthusiastic reception. They were received by the King on the same day, when his Majesty thanked them in cordial terms, and said, as he had previously said to the Tuscan deputation, that, armed with the rights he had acquired, he would support their cause before the Great Powers, and especially before the French Emperor. The members of the Modenese deputation were—Advocate Muratori, Count Ancini, Professor Zini, Advocate Brizzolari, Doctor Sacerdoti, and Professor Selmi; the Parmesan members were the Marquis Muschi, Count San Vitale, Maestro Verdi, Professor Piarrozi, and Marquis Dolsi. At Florence on Sunday Signor Ricasoli reviewed the National Guard, and subsequently published an order of the day thanking the Guard, in the name of the country and the King of Sardinia, for their bearing and discipline, expressing confidence in the future, and hoping that the Guard and the regular troops would support the wishes of the country. Accounts from Rome state that the Pope's health appears to be declining; he has had erysipelas in his left leg, which exhibited rather alarming symptoms, and caused fever and swelling in several parts of the body. In consequence of this illness his Holiness has suspended all audiences for several days, and intends to leave Rome as soon as possible for Castel Gandolfo. The Papal Nuncio at Munich, Prince Chigi, has been summoned by telegraph to Rome, to be present at the Council which has under its consideration important administrative reforms. Though the official journal denied the massacre of Perugia, the Pope has granted fresh rewards to those engaged in it, and has struck a medal in honour of the occasion.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—The Lord High Commissioner has further prorogued the Assembly from the 10th of September to the 10th of December. His Excellency left Corfu on the 4th inst. for Zante and the other islands, where he will remain for two months, in order to become acquainted with their local circumstances.

TURKEY.—Accounts from Constantinople state that the Sultan nearly lost his life on the 3d inst. An Ionian captain commanding an English steam tug drove his vessel twice against the Imperial caique, and the Sultan was saved with great difficulty. The captain has been arrested, and Sir Henry Bulwer has assured the Government that the most searching inquiry shall be made into the affair. One of the ladies of the Sultan's harem, a beautiful Circassian called Serserfras Hanum, who had been for some time one of the Sultan's favourites, has eloped with an Italian called Guatelli, the master of the Sultan's band. Reinforcements of troops have recently been sent from Constantinople to Candia, and several arrests have taken place. The Governor has sent in his resignation. The smuggling of arms continues, and a seizure of a bomb vessel charged with powder has been made. A secret understanding has been discovered among the Candian refugees in Greece. The principal Greek inhabitants of Candia have forwarded a memorial to the Porte to justify themselves.

SERVIA.—The political agitation in Servia is on the increase. The National Assembly (Skouptschina) has been convoked.

TUNIS.—The Bey of Tunis has been attacked with erysipelas in the left side, and the French physician has been summoned to his aid, but hopes were entertained of his recovery.

MOROCCO.—Advices from Tangiers state that no serious disturbances had taken place in any part of the territory of Morocco in consequence of the death of the late Emperor, and that Sidi Mohammed, who was on his march from Morocco to Fez, had been proclaimed Emperor at Fez, Mequinez, Tetuan, and Arabas, and was about to be proclaimed at Tangiers. All the Christians have escaped from Rabat.

BLACK SEA.—Letters from Trebizond give accounts of a frightful earthquake which has taken place in the Government of Tiflis. The entire city of Chirvan was engulfed by the fall of a neighbouring mountain. Accounts from Erzeroum state that a large fire had broken out in that city, which had also been visited again by repeated shocks of earthquake. An extraordinary flight of locusts, which settled on the Asiatic coast of the Black Sea, has committed terrible ravages, destroying the entire crop of maize and all other grain.

THE CAUCASUS.—News from the Caucasus to the 26th ult. states that the Circassian chief Schamyl has been made prisoner and is to be sent to St. Petersburg. His strongest place of defence, the fortress of Ischoch, had previously been given over to the Russians, with three cannons, and he himself had been wandering in the mountains, pursued by the inhabitants and by the Russians. His own people had forsaken him, while the inhabitants had turned their arms against him, and despoiled him of his goods and treasure.

INDIA.—Accounts from Bombay to the 21st ult. have been received. European intelligence has been received at Calcutta through the Red Sea Telegraph for the first time. The civil employés have raised objections to the threatened diminution of their salaries. The Commander-in-Chief has issued an order of the day, warning Europeans of the disadvantage of taking discharge; only a few, however, have withdrawn their names. The number of discharged in Bengal will reach 6000. The Sikhs on the Nepaul frontiers have had two successful engagements with the rebels. The rebel fugitives in the mountains of Nepaul number about 8000 men. Some excitement exists among the Mahomedans of the Punjab. The 5th and 6th Regiments of Madras Cavalry have shown symptoms of disaffection at Hydrabad. The telegraph from Kurrachee to Lahore is completed.

CHINA.—The accounts from China are of the most disastrous nature, our forces having been repulsed at the entrance of the Peiho with very severe loss. Mr. Bruce and M. de Bourboulon, the French Ambassador, arrived off the Peiho on the 18th of June, and sought communication with the authorities on shore. Our officers were not allowed to land, but some messages were interchanged between some petty Mandarins and Mr. Bruce's suite. The tenor of these was that the foreign Ministers would be allowed to proceed to Pekin by a passage to the northward, and that there were no officials nearer than Tientsin. They disclaimed acting under Imperial orders, stating that the forts and barriers in the river were constructed by the country people to protect them against pirates, and that the forts were not yet manned. At the same time they promised, in answer to the Admiral's request, to commence the removal of the barriers within 48 hours. Three days having passed without this promise having been performed, the Admiral sent a letter to the Tantai at Tientsin, but received, two days afterwards, an evasive reply. In these circumstances Mr. Bruce handed the matter over to Admiral Hope, who on the 25th June proceeded to force a passage. The following details of the operations and disasters which ensued are gathered from the official despatches and from the letters of officers which have appeared in the China and Ceylon papers:—

On the 24th of June the whole of the Naval and Marine Brigades, with the French frigate Duchayla, were towed in over the bar and put on board some junks which had been detained for the purpose out of gunshot of the forts. The remainder of this day was spent in making the final preparation for an attack on the forts, which were very substantially built, and had evidently had the benefit of European skill in their construction, as had also their guns during the action. The principal forts consisted of three bastions connected by curtains and armed with guns of from 24-pounders to 50-pounders. One of these forts was on the south bank of the river and another on the north, but that on the north ran at right-angles to the south batteries, and thus any ships anchoring parallel to the south forts—i. e., in the line of the river—were exposed to a raking or longitudinal fire from the north forts. Besides these, there were two or three other batteries which took part in the action, but without much effect. Four very formidable barriers crossed the river, the outer one being so situated that it was not more than 600 yards from any gun in the batteries, and considerably less than that from most of them. The flag captain partially destroyed one of these barriers during the night of the 24th, but was fired on by the batteries and retired. On Saturday, June 25, the gunboats Janus, Kestrel, Lee, Haughty, Plover, Starling, Opossum, Banterer, and Forester, with the despatch vessels Nimrod and Cormorant, took up their positions, the naval gunboat, the Banterer, being close to the outer barrier on the north side of the river, the line of vessels crossing the stream from that point [illegible], or in a south-easterly direction. The Admiral [illegible] the Plover, and, with the Opossum [illegible] about 7 A.M. to force his way through the outer barrier. The Opossum stranded at 6, but it was the flowing tide. However, by backing her anchor to one of the junks she managed to bring one up, and so made room to pass through. [illegible] the second barrier. The Admiral [illegible] the Opossum had no sooner pushed the bow of the Plover through the barrier, than a gun was fired at her from the [illegible]. She immediately returned it, when, as if by magic, the sides of all the forts were rolled up, a tremendous fire was opened on the squadron, and the action became general. The Lee, by signal from the Plover, passed through the stakes to the support of the Admiral. The Plover and Opossum were, however, soon obliged to slip, the fire being too heavy for them, and, followed by the Lee, dropped down out of the station [illegible]. The Plover suffered very much in hull and [illegible]. An officer was sent to the reserve to order up [illegible], but the tide was too strong for the boats to attempt to pull up. The American flag officer very kindly offered to tow the boats up to a position to enable them to reach the gunboats. At this the enemy's fire having slackened somewhat, [illegible] were sent down to the reserve for the Marine and Naval Brigades to prepare to land, and the Forester and the Opossum, together with the Toeywan, proceeded and towed them to the Nimrod, the place of rendezvous. At an early period of the action the Admiral had been wounded on board the Plover by a splinter in the thigh, and that vessel was almost entirely disabled. He [illegible] shifted his flag to the Opossum, where [illegible] on the side-ropes, and thence issued his orders, until a round shot cut the mainstay on which he was leaning, and caused him to fall to the deck, a height of 8 feet, breaking his leg and severely shaking him. After a short time he left the Opossum in the Duchayla's gig, and proceeded to the Cormorant, where he remained. At 5.45 the boats having assembled alongside the Nimrod, pushed for the shore with the Naval Brigade commanded by Capt. Shadwell, the Marines commanded by Colonel Lemon, and the French Contingent commanded by Captain Tricault of the Duchayla. The spot chosen for the landing was unluckily a bank of mud about knee deep. Just as the first boat touched the shore, a gun was fired from the forts, followed by a perfect hurricane of shot, shell, [illegible], grape balls, and rockets, from all the northern batteries, which mowed down our men as they landed. Nevertheless they all leaped out of the boats with undiminished ardour (many into water so deep that they had to swim to the shore) and dashed forward through the mud, which [illegible] in so heavy a covering for the body as they possibly could. The enemy's fire, however, continued to be so deadly, and the mud proved so deep (in most places reaching up to the men's knees and often up to their waists) that out of the 1000 men who landed barely 100 reached the first of three deep and wide ditches, which after 500 yards of wading through the mud, presented themselves before the gallant few who got so far, and out of that small number scarcely 20 had been able to keep their rifles or their ammunition dry. Nevertheless, they boldly faced these new difficulties, and 50 of them, with a crowd of officers (among whom were conspicuous the commanding officer of the French contingent, Colonel Lemon, Captain Vansittart, Commanders Commerell and Heath, R.N., Major Parke, and Lieutenant Hawkey, of the Marines, Major Fisher and Lieut. Maitland, of the Engineers), succeeded in getting as far as the furthest bank of the third ditch, from which they would certainly have made a good attempt to scale the walls had ladders been forthcoming; but, out of the number that were landed, almost one half either been broken by shot or had stuck in the mud. With the remaining one, however, 10 devoted men sprang forward, three of whom were immediately shot dead, and five wounded severely. A vertical fire of arrows, as well as a constant fusillade, was kept up on this gallant band, who now crouched in the ditch, waiting for reinforcements. The officers in vain encouraged their men to charge to the walls, but it was ineffectual; the men were few and [illegible] up, and even if they had not been, they never could have carried them against the thousands that lined the walls. Under these circumstances the commanding officer despatched an officer to the rear to ask for instructions, and the senior officer sent him back immediately with orders for the force to withdraw, as no reinforcements could be sent. When this order was received the wounded were despatched to the rear by twos and threes, and two hours having been given them to get to the boats, the small advanced party retreated in good order from ditch to ditch, examining the ground in their retreat for any wounded that might have been overlooked. The Chinese gave a yell of triumph when they saw this movement, and, if possible, redoubled their fire, while our poor fellows retraced their steps as best they could, many having to crawl on their hands and knees to prevent sinking into the mud altogether. Many poor fellows in the retreat fell to rise no more, but the wounded were saved and brought off. In the [illegible] Colonel Lemon, of the Royal Marines (who was one of the first into the furthest ditch), Captain Vansittart, of the Magicienne, and Captain Shadwell, of the Highflyer, were all severely wounded. The latter was badly shot through the foot shortly after landing, but nevertheless managed to struggle manfully forward, even to the advanced trench. Captain Vansittart had his leg shot off. Lieut. Graves, of the Assistance, Lieut. Clutterbuck, of the Coromandel, Mr Herbert, Mate of the Chesapeake, and Lieutenants Inglis and Wooldridge, of the Royal Marines, were all killed while gallantly cheering on their men; and at least three-fourths of the officers who landed were more or less severely hit. In effecting the retreat even more lives were lost, perhaps, than in advancing, as the Chinese, by lighting blue lights, were enabled to discover the exact position of our exhausted men, and so to shoot them down like birds. Even on arriving at the water's edge matters were not improved, as so many of the boats had been smashed to pieces by round shot that there were not enough remaining to take off the surviving men. Several were drowned in attempting to get off, while many had to remain for more than an hour up to their necks in water before they could get a place in a boat; and even then their dangers were not past, as the fire from the forts continued so heavy that several boats full of wounded were struck and swamped while pulling off to the ships. The Coromandel was made the temporary hospital ship, and the scene on her upper deck was truly horrible. It was nearly 1 o'clock before the last load of wounded was brought off to her, and long ere that hour she was crowded with the mutilated and the dying. Every exertion, however, was made by the medical staff, assisted by Dr Little, of the Marines, and long before daybreak every sufferer had his wounds tended. Every operation (and their number was sickening) was performed under the influence of chloroform. In the meantime the gunboats recommenced their fire with the forts which was continued with great fury all [illegible] after dark, when at length, all the ammunition being expended and the vessels all being in a sinking condition, the firing gradually ceased, and by 10 o'clock the action may be said to have ended. The Lee and Kestrel had already sunk, and the Haughty just managed to keep herself afloat till morning, when she went down, but was subsequently floated and got off. At 3 A.M. the Cormorant, with the Admiral on board and full of wounded, was so fast aground that it was considered necessary to leave her, as she was right under the batteries. For the same reasons the Plover and Starling, both immovably aground, were cleared of their crews. The morning of the 26th showed our squadron in sad condition, hardly a gunboat but was disabled. However, during the day the carpenters of the squadron were employed patching them up temporarily, and the Starling having floated, her second master proceeded in a dingy and cut her cable, when she drifted out of range with the ebb. Two night attempts were made by Captain Willes to recover the Cormorant and Plover, but without success. The Cormorant's ship company having remained till 11 A.M. to endeavour to float her, a terrific fire was opened upon her from batteries both north and south, and it soon became evident that she was sinking. Orders were therefore sent down to Commander Wodehouse to abandon her. Her ship's company and officers were embarked accordingly, but not before the water was up to her lower deck, and half an hour afterwards she went down head foremost. The same night fresh attempts were made on the Plover, but it was found impracticable, as she was full of water, and gave no hope of her being able to float. At daylight the Kestrel, which had sunk on the 25th under the batteries, was observed drifting out, and, having been towed by the Janus into shoal water, was eventually recovered. During that day the enemy got on board the Plover over the mud, and destroyed her by setting her on fire, but not before a great portion of her stores had been recovered. During the next two or three days the boats of the Chesapeake were employed destroying the abandoned vessels as much as possible. The belief is universal throughout the squadron that Europeans manned the batteries as well as Chinese. Our men were killed by bullets fired from Minié rifles, which the Chinese could not have used without European instruction. Men in gray coats with closely cropped hair, and with Russian features, were distinctly visible in the batteries, and the whole of the fortifications were evidently of European designing. Some of those who advanced near to the wall even go so far as to declare that they heard men calling for 'more powder,' in Russian; and it is reported that two dead bodies floated out of the river, dressed in Chinese clothes, but having incontestably European faces. The Americans, though they took no part in the action, were extremely kind in assisting the wounded, and in towing up several of our boats. As our ships passed in to the assault Commodore Tutnell was heard to say, "Blood is thicker than water," and in 100 different ways he and all his people, to the very cabin boys, acted up to this homely proverb. When he heard that the Admiral was wounded, at great personal risk he went on board the Cormorant to see him. His officers were loud in their praises of the daring of our men, and sent large presents of fresh meat and vegetables for the benefit of the wounded. Our loss was 426 killed and wounded, a frightful proportion in a force consisting only of 1300 men. The 1st battalion of Marines alone, which landed barely 400 strong, lost altogether 172 killed and wounded; the Chesapeake 17 killed or missing, and 32 wounded; and the gunboats 90 killed and wounded. The French, out of their small landing party of 60 men, had 14 men killed, and 2 officers and 8 men wounded No expectation is entertained of those who are missing being still alive. With such enemies as the Chinese, and under the peculiar circumstances of the case, all such hope is out of the question.

The following is a list of officers killed and wounded:—

Killed.—Captain M'Kenna, 1st Royals, killed on board the Plover; Lieut. Greaves, R.N., Assistance, killed on shore; Lieut. Clutterbuck, R.N., Chesapeake, killed on shore; Lieut. Rason, R.N., Plover, killed on board: Mr. Herbert, midshipman, Chesapeake, killed on shore; Lieut. Woolridge, Royal Marine Brigade, killed on shore; Lieut. Inglis, R.M., Highflyer, killed in boat.

Wounded.—Admiral Hope, severely; Captain Vansittart, Magicienne, loss of left leg below the knee; Captain Shadwell, Highflyer, severely; Captain Willess, Chesapeake, slightly; Captain Tricault, French frigate Duchayla, wounded in the arm; Colonel Lemon, Royal Marine Brigade, severely; Lieut. Purvis, R.N., Highflyer, slightly; Lieut. Buckle, Magicienne, severely; Mr. Burniston, master, Banterer, badly; Mr. Armitage, midshipman, Cruiser, severely; Mr. Powlett, midshipman, Fury, dangerously; Mr. N. Bowden Smith, mate, Chesapeake, severely; Mr. Phillips, second master, Plover, slightly; Lieut. Longley, Royal Engineers, dangerously; Captain and Brigade Major Croker, and Captain Slaughter, Royal Marine Brigade, slightly; Rev. H. Hulett, chaplain, Royal Marine Brigade, dangerously; Captain Masters, R.M., Chesapeake, severely; Lieut. Charles S. Williams, Royal Marine Artillery, slightly; Lieut. Crawford, Royal Marine Artillery, badly; Lieuts. Collins and W. D. Smith, Royal Marine Brigade, severely; Lieuts. Brenan, Douglas, Heriot, Willis, Price, Evans, Williams, Straughan, Smith, Coppin, and Carrington, Royal Marine Brigade, slightly; Lieut. Perceval, Fury, slightly; Mr. P. John Wagstaffe, assistant paymaster, Chesapeake, slightly; Mr. Ley, master, Cormorant, slightly; Dr. Watson, surgeon, Cormorant, slightly; Mr. G. S. Peard, Cormorant, slightly; Mr. S. Winter Parker, paymaster, Nimrod, slightly; Mr. W. L. Southey, second master, Lee, slightly.

The latest news states that the Plenipotentiaries have returned to Shanghai with some of the worst cases of the wounded. Captain Vansittart was scarcely expected to live. His leg had been amputated beneath the knee, and it was thought that another amputation would be necessary, as affording the only chance of saving his life. The admiral was doing well, though the French papers say that he had attempted to commit suicide, but was prevented from carrying it into execution by his officers, by whom he is much beloved. The American Minister was holding communication with the Chinese officials at a more northern entrance to the Peiho, and it was expected that he would proceed to Pekin.

UNITED STATES.—The forthcoming election of President is the great topic of discussion in the American papers, but at present Mr. Douglas is the only candidate fairly in the field. Colonel Shaffner has sailed from Boston on a voyage of exploration to the North Atlantic, in search of a feasible route for a line of telegraphic communication between America and Europe, by way of Labrador, Greenland, Iceland, the Faroe Islands, Scotland, and Norway. The papers contain notices of the brilliant appearance of the aurora borealis. Mr. Fortune, in a letter to the Washington Constitution, says that his success in cultivating the tea plant in America far exceeds his most sanguine expectations, and that the tea plantations in Upper India are succeeding admirably.

Parliamentary Addresses.

MR. BRIGHT, in proposing at the Huddersfield meeting the resolution mentioned in our last Number, spoke at great length on public affairs. The following is a summary of his speech:—

"We have a Government that professes to be constitutional and representative; it has all sorts of testimonials as to character—it has, in fact, everything in the world that you could desire of that kind, but, unfortunately, you are not able to discover in its conduct anything that justifies its bold pretensions. Nothing can be worse in my opinion than a representative government in the name, which is not a representative government in reality. For many years past, whatever may have been the opinions of the people, the returns made by the constituencies have given no certain majority in Parliament, and your Government, whether it has been the Government of Lord Derby, or the Government of Lord Palmerston, or the Government of any other Minister, has been faced by a numerous and powerful Opposition, which has rendered it unable, even if willing, to do those things which you the liberal people of Huddersfield and England wish your Government to do. The consequence has been that for many years past there has been only what we call wasted sessions of Parliament; and I am so distressed, so weary, so disgusted, and at times so hopeless that I often at the end of a useless session think myself a fool above all other fools for spending my time, my labour, my life in the House of Commons, and am half resolved, as a duty to myself and my family, to seek the only office that possibly I may ever hold—the office of steward of the Chiltern Hundreds. I am frequently tempted to take myself from Parliament and to cease labouring in a field where there is no soil to grow anything, and upon which neither the shower falls nor the sun shines. All that we have done of late years has been to vote with a listless apathy millions of money for which you have toiled. We have squandered scores of millions that under a just and economical Government would have remained in your pockets; we have added tax to tax; we have, it is true, taken some off; we have shifted an uncomfortable burden from one shoulder to the other, but the burden remains. It grows larger, and if you do not stagger and fall beneath it, it is because your industry, your productiveness, your resolution, and your patience surpass those of any other people in the world. Allow me to ask your attention to one or two questions. Look, for instance, at the Established Church and the question of church-rates. As long as men would pay and grumble,, and grumble and pay, our great Whig statesmen were not in the least convinced of the injustice of the impost. But when multitudes of parishes refused to pay, when Churchmen joined with Dissenters and wished for a change, then the leaders of the Whig party found out that church-rates might as well be abolished by law, seeing that the people had already abolished them in reality. Let me appeal to the Churchmen upon another point. We have archbishops and bishops who receive salaries from 5000*l.* to 15,000*l.* a year. It is well known at the same time that there are hundreds of meritorious clergymen, curates, and others, who have barely sufficient to keep their families in the very lowest degree of comfort. The question I now raise is, not whether we should have an Established Church or not, but whether the vast revenues of the Church should not be allotted with some moderate degree of fairness to the various workers in that vineyard wherein to labour is the highest honour which can befall a man. If it be necessary to have an Established Church with millions of revenue, surely it is just that those revenues should be distributed with some regard to the wants of the clergymen and to the amount of service they perform. Our Church is still in the fetters that were forged for her by the grievance of 300 years ago, and I know not at what distant date we may expect Parliament to do something to remove the monstrous inequalities which are connected with the distribution of her enormous funds. I come now to the question of land. We are fond of talking of feudalism and the dark ages, but the fact is that feudalism exists among us at the present day. If a man possessing landed, or what they call real property, leaves it without a will his eldest son steps quietly into the possession of the whole of it. Younger sons and all the daughters are cast upon the world so far as that property is concerned. A gentleman who has himself suffered grievously from the injustice of a parent used to say that if younger sons and daughters are thus to be treated, those who bring them into the world ought to adopt the plan which is ordinarily taken when there are too many puppies or too many kittens. Then again with regard to the question of title, why the title to half the landed estates in England is complex, bewildering, and utterly beyond the solution of the ablest lawyer, and yet you cannot get Parliament to alter it. Parliament touches this question as though it was going to be caught in a trap. Nothing equals the obtuseness of a landed proprietor about land, and every landowner fancies that if you make its transfer more easy in some way or other, it will slip out of his grasp, and therefore he is against every proposition for improvement. As to our military affairs, I can tell you that over the 12,000,000*l.* expended by the Horse Guards Parliament has almost no control whatever after it has voted the main sum; and it is the universal opinion that the Horse Guards' management of its 12,000,000*l.* and of the vast forces under its direction is a management where interest and jobbery reign supreme, and where the interest of the nation at large and fair-dealing to all applicants for preferment are very little considered. In a free country like this I wonder that certain things are permitted which now exist. I have been engaged for the last two months in procuring the discharge of a soldier, if I may call him so, for he is not a man nor, indeed, a young man, but a boy who was only 14 years and a month or two old when he was entrapped by the recruiting sergeant. It has taken the father of that boy, I believe, since last April or May to procure his discharge, and it has only been obtained at length on account of the urgent remonstrances that I made when memorial after memorial had been sent in vain by his parents to the Horse Guards and the Duke of Cambridge, which memorials have been replied to in the usual fashion, nearly meaning this,—'We have got your son in the barracks, he has taken the oath, he has taken the shilling and be he man or boy we will keep him there!' Mothers—for there are some mothers among you—think of a boy of 14 years of age being met in the streets by one of these unmitigated scoundrels and being asked, 'Are you wanting a job?' 'What do you want me to do?' says the boy. 'Oh, come and be a soldier.' 'But I am too little.' 'No, you are not, you are just the right height.' 'Well, but I am only 14.' 'Never mind that, say you are 18 and it will be all right.' Think of this, and then that it requires two months of correspondence, and memorials, and protests, and remonstrances before this boy of 14 can be brought back again to the home of his parents. But you have seen within the last day or two what they do with their recruits when they get them, and have read in the papers the account of the brutal flogging of one of these young recruits at Woolwich. If the main facts are true—and they are hardly called in question—I ask you, who are a fair representation of the people of the West Riding, as the West Riding is a fair representation of the intelligence, virtue, and greatness of the people of England—I ask you, is it with your consent? Do you believe that the constituencies of England, polled man by man, would permit the son of any one of those electors to have his back thus flogged and lacerated, and some 200,000 of their countrymen degraded to a position which is not exceeded in humiliation and ignominy by that of any slave in the island of Cuba under the lash of the planter and his driver? If we turn to the Navy, it was only in the last session that Lord Clarence Paget showed that 6,000,000*l.* or 7,000,000*l.* had been expended within a given time apparently in the building of ships, and there were no ships to be found. Now the Times has recently called upon Mr. Cobden, 'the man of one idea,' to come forward and rescue the country from this vast and profligate expenditure; and addressing me has said that if I would only condescend to come down from some of those abstractions in which I delight to the consideration of common business that paper would make me 'the hero of this great work.' Well, what is this great work? It is to save 5,000,000*l.* a year in the building and repairing of ships, and spend a portion of it in a more complete manning and efficient working of the ships you already possess. The man who wrote that appeal to Mr. Cobden and to the Commons knew perfectly well that any appeal to the House of Commons in behalf of economy for economy's sake is very much like the unprofitable occupation known in Yorkshire as 'whistling for the wind.' In the House of Commons I have opposite me a phalanx, when they are all there, of some 300 members of the Tory party: I am not about to exclude all of them from what I am going to say about them; but I will take to say, and, what is more, to prove, that if you will those 300 men, and add up everything which they pay directly and indirectly in taxes to the State, and put it one side of the ledger, and on the other side put everything which they or their immediate families receive from the State in appointments and salaries in one branch of the public service another, then it will appear they receive three times believe five times, I think I should not err if I said times as much as they pay. Why, then, am I to be to go to their stolid phalanx of tax receivers and expenders, and to beg and implore them to be moderate in the use of the public money? Every million a million to our taxes and to the State revenue is another estate to the patrimony of the privileged classes until you look them in the face, and say, 'Parliament not be the instrument of the House of Lords or of territorial proprietors, but shall fairly represent the of the people of England,' there is no remedy for the of which you complain. Look again to India, have gone through a century of crime. Parliament cently abolished the East India Company in name as of India, and has constituted the Queen of England and ruler of 200 millions of people whom she has never Asia; but the real government of India still council composed almost exactly of the very men who the Directory of the Company. Instead of being over by one of its own members it is presided over Secretary of State; last year Lord Stanley presided at the present moment Sir Charles Wood presides with that single difference, I give you my word for it, discover in the men, the measures, the policy, or the any single change whatsoever in the government of empire. And so I presume it will go on until some —some other great catastrophe—rouses Parliament slumbers. As to finances, out of the 70,000,000*l.* which raised this year in taxes, probably not 20,000,000*l.* thing near it, will be raised directly from property kind; the great bulk of the taxes are levied upon sumed by all the people of the country, and every in good employment, with fair wages and a moderate of comfort, pays a very much larger per-centage than do any of the richer and more powerful population kingdom. You have a government with all the absolute government, but without the responsibility solute government. You have a government which about 400 great, some of them rich, all of them titled and they are assisted and buttressed up by all the ritorial possessors throughout the United Kingdom. rule you, and they tax you, and they spend your taxes Now, I have not the slightest animosity against these I like them to be in their own place, but their own not, to my thinking, governing me without my consent governing you without your consent. Let them have fair play in the country. Let every man, be his blood as, I was going to say, Adam—but then the blood of would be as old as that, and I suppose, like old wine, be kept too old—but let their blood be as old as is the those who came over here with William the Conqueror, have fair play in the country, but let everybody else fair play also. I do not find among this class any eminence either in art or in literature, in industry or in commerce, or in the science of legislation, or in the practice administration. I never met with a lord or a man of a man of family, or a man of 'blood,' or a man boasting his ancestry, but I could find a match for him any day those whom I know to have no such pretensions; withstanding this that class has ruled us for 170 years, time in my opinion, not of their final extinction, but when they will be reduced to a participation with the people of the country in the government of the country is rapidly drawing nigh. What has been the general the legislation and administration of your governing 170 years? When they took hold of your government national debt was a mere nothing—not more than 600,000*l.* They have raised it to nearly 800,000,000*l.* exceeding in amount, I believe, all the other national all the other kingdoms of the globe. Your taxation is —much greater than that of any other nation of equal in the world. You have had, I believe, since that time years of warfare than any other nation in the world to be civilised and Christian has experienced; and at the time you have a larger per-centage of your population any visible property than is to be found in any other nation of the globe. Well, until anybody can throw these assertions, and I can prove that I am what is not true, I ask you can any man say that this been a wise, and just, and paternal, and moral government of this great and important kingdom? Look at your industry; look at your hours of labour; look at the wonderful productiveness of your industry. All this which you done has enabled you to bear these vast burdens, but, in consequence of these burdens, of this bad legislation, and this administration, you, the people of England, although condition of late has been greatly improving, you are not the enjoyment of the results of your industry to anything the extent you would have been if you had had for 170 years a government that could fairly claim to be just and economical in the expenditure of the resources of the country. What do I ask? Injustice to anybody? No, not the less have never shown myself, as it is termed, the mere demagogue who panders to the cry of an ignorant prejudiced multitude against his own light and knowledge and conscience. I have been as free to withstand what I felt were the errors of the people as I am now ready to withstand and to condemn the errors and the injustice of the Government; but I say that the people governed—unless we are less virtuous and less intelligent than even our rulers flatter us by telling us that we are—if the people governed, instead of a class, the nation humanity would gain. It is for this, and this alone, that we demand a better and a free representation. We believe would be the highest wisdom, looking a little ahead, for the governing class to concede it, and we are as convinced as we are of our own existence that the permanent power, welfare, peace, and grandeur of this nation depend upon our obtaining that which we seek—a fair and free representation of the people in the parliament of England."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION ON BOARD THE GREAT EASTERN.—On Friday afternoon, while the great ship was passing Hastings, a water chamber or "jacket" which had been constructed round the foremost chimney for the double purpose of preventing the heat of the funnel becoming inconvenient in the saloon, and of supplying the boiler with warm instead of cold water, suddenly exploded, blowing the huge funnel from the deck, destroying the saloon and adjacent cabins, and causing such serious injuries to the firemen in the engine-room that two were killed on the spot, three have since died, one jumped out of the port-hole to escape the steam and was torn to pieces by the ship's paddles, while six others were severely and one slightly injured. Mr. Francis Fuller who was a passenger on board had a narrow escape from being crushed by the fall of the funnel, while Mr. Rawlinson, assistant to Mr. Gray, of Liverpool, the superintendent of the compasses, was buried in the ruins of the saloon, but was rescued in time to prevent his being suffocated by the steam. As the passengers had just finished dinner they were all fortunately on deck at the time, with the exception of Mrs. Parry, the wife of Mr. Parry, the contractor for the ship's upholstery, who had just left the piano to go on deck when the explosion occurred, but she escaped without serious injury, and only received a slight contusion from the fall of the woodwork of the staircase. The captain's little daughter escaped by being sheltered by an iron bulkhead just as she was entering the ladies' saloon. It is said that if such an explosion had occurred on board a wooden vessel, even in one of the largest line-of-battle ships, the sides would have been blown out and the ship itself have gone to the bottom; but such is the gigantic strength of the Great Eastern that the shock was confined to the compartment in which it occurred, and the engines never ceased working for a moment. For a short time it was feared that the ship was on fire, and while her head was turned towards land as a measure of precaution until this doubt was solved, the hempen tiller ropes gave way, and the ship moved for the first time to the swell of the sea. But chains were at hand in anticipation of such an accident, and as soon as they were rove the motion ceased. After the alarm caused by the accident had subsided, it was resolved to proceed without delay to Portland, where the ship arrived at 10 A.M. on Saturday. Great preparations had been made at Weymouth and other places on the coast to receive the vessel with all honour, and many excursion boats went out with crowds of passengers to give her a cordial greeting. Their cheers however were not returned, and though their bands played inspiriting tunes, the Great Eastern made no sign, until at last the intelligence oozed out that some great calamity had occurred on board. From that moment a dead silence prevailed; and no questions were even asked of the passengers as they were taken on shore. The following are the names of those killed and injured:—Mr. William Briscoe, engineer, slightly injured; John Boyd, Michael M'Ilroy, Michael Mahon, Richard Edwards, and Robert Adams, firemen, dead; Edward Patrick Gorman, trimmer, jumped overboard and lost; William Tait and John Yoxon, trimmers, expected to recover; William Sparks and Walter Woodward, firemen, dangerously burnt and scalded. Sparks, Yoxon, and Tait were removed to Portland Hospital, and are progressing favourably. The inquest on the five dead bodies was opened in the Town Hall, Weymouth, on Monday, and adjourned to Wednesday for the attendance of Mr. Scott Russell and other witnesses from London. In consequence, however, of a communication from the Board of Trade that the Surveyor-General, Captain Robertson, could not attend before Saturday, the coroner again adjourned the inquiry to that day. From the evidence given on Monday it appears that soon after leaving Deptford the donkey engines for keeping the funnel cases, and through them the boilers, supplied with water, showed decided symptoms of infirmity, which as the vessel progressed on her voyage increased to such an extent that some of them were rendered altogether useless, and the others were only kept feebly working by the constant attention of some of the assistant engineers. Thus from the first there was a difficulty in keeping the boilers properly supplied with water, which was greatly increased by the fact that the supply had first to be forced up a considerable height to fill the funnel casing. This, it is supposed, induced those in charge to feed the boilers direct from the donkey engines, without passing the water through the funnel case. In shutting off the communication between the casing and the boilers, the engineers had every reason to believe they were performing a perfectly harmless operation, for it was well known there was an escape pipe to carry off any steam which might be generated in the case. It was, however, afterwards ascertained that this pipe had, previous to the departure of the vessel from Deptford, been used for testing the casing by hydraulic pressure. For this purpose a brass cock had been fitted to the end of it, and this by some shocking inadvertence was never taken away, and was either left turned off, as the engineers of the vessel assert, or was turned off after the vessel left the Thames, as Mr. Scott Russell says it will be proved by witnesses that the cock was open when she left the river. When, therefore, the communication between the bottom of the casing and the boiler was interrupted the water left in the funnel was rapidly converted into steam, and the whole apparatus became a monstrous vertical boiler without a safety valve or any vent whatever. That all the water left in the casing was converted into vapour long before the explosion took place is quite certain, and it was evidently not till the confined steam had gone on expanding and probably decomposing for some hours that the casing at last blew up with a force precisely similar to what would have taken place had the space between the inner and outer casing of the funnel been filled with gunpowder instead of steam. It appears also that the employment of these casings is so much disapproved of by many practical engineers that Messrs. Boulton & Watt refused to use them for their screw engines, and that they have long since been discarded in the Cunard and other great lines as dangerous and expensive. The damage done is estimated at 5000*l*., for which sum Mr. Scott Russell has contracted to restore the whole. In consequence of this accident fresh arrangements have been made for the departure of the vessel. It is now announced that she will not leave Portland on the trial trip till the 8th October, and that she will leave Holyhead for Portland, United States, on the 20th October instead of the 29th inst.

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE.—On Monday morning the Associated Master Builders re-opened their doors (which had been closed since the 6th August) to such operatives on strike as chose to work on the conditions of the declaration, upon which the masters, with some few exceptions, continue to insist. The result is that up to Thursday night above 2000 men had resumed work on the terms of the declaration, and about 1200 more in establishments where it has been made a shop rule. Those who resumed work and accepted the condition contained in the declaration were chiefly smiths, stovemakers, brass workers, carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers, and painters. The skilled masons, with few exceptions, refused to present themselves at the respective shops until it was announced that the "document" was withdrawn. It is said that with the exception perhaps of the masons and the rest of the extreme society men, including of course the members of the conference, the nine hours' scheme is now tacitly understood to be impracticable, at least for the present. Almost in every instance on Monday the declaration alone was the ground of scruple, and there was scarcely a case in which the hours of labour made the ground of excuse for refusing to resume work. The dividend declared by the conference on Monday was at the rate of 3*s*. 6*d*. per man for the lock-outs, Messrs. Trollope's men being paid 12*s*. skilled and 8*s*. unskilled artisans. The total amount distributed was 1168*l*. 6*s*. 11*d*., the number of recipients being 6976. A meeting was held at Exeter Hall on Monday night for the purpose of appointing a committee of builders' foremen to distribute the fund subscribed in connection with the anti-strike movement for the relief of non-society men.

RESIGNATION OF SIR CHAPMAN MARSHALL.—It is said to be the determination of Sir Chapman Marshall to resign his gown as Alderman of the Ward of Bridge Within. He was elected alderman in 1832, succeeding Alderman Garrett. He served as Sheriff in 1830, and was Lord Mayor in 1839.

LAUNCH OF THE GALATEA.—Another new steam-frigate of 26 guns, called the Galatea, was launched at Woolwich Dockyard on Wednesday, the ceremony of naming being performed by Lady Stopford. She was laid down in 1857 on the same slip from which the Royal Albert was launched, but she is of far greater length than the latter vessel, and will have engines of 800 horse power. Her armament will consist of two 68-pounder 95 cwt. guns, 10 feet in length, for the upper deck, and 24 84-cwt. guns for the main deck. A large 50-gun frigate to be named the Bristol is to be immediately laid down on the same slip.

ANOTHER REFORM CAMPAIGN.—It is stated that Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bazley, M.P. for Manchester, have arranged with the members of the Lancashire Financial Reform Association to establish branch associations in the principal towns, and to employ lecturers to address the public throughout the country, so as to prepare the way for an organised attack upon the present system of taxation. A grand demonstration will take place in Liverpool before the close of the year for the purpose of discussing the subject, at which Mr. Cobden will be present and take part in the proceedings. It is also understood that the Lancashire Union are disposed to promote a vigorous agitation in favour of Parliamentary Reform, and that a number of lecturers are to be engaged, among whom Mr. George Thompson is named as one of the principal. It is proposed that a great Reform meeting shall be held at the Free Trade Hall on the eve of the next session of Parliament, at which Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, Mr. Gibson, and most of the leading Reformers of the kingdom, will be invited to be present.

THE WESTMINSTER CLOCK.—The quarter chime bells of the great clock now send forth their sonorous peals every quarter of an hour during the day. The bells have as yet an extremely dull sound, which is attributed to the scaffolding around the belfry in the clock tower not having been removed. The first stroke on the great bell, and not the quarter chimes, indicates the hour by Greenwich mean time. The chimes at the first, second, and third quarters begin to strike at those times respectively. Persons hearing the clock at long distances must remember that the sound takes 4½ seconds to travel a mile.

ST. GEORGE'S IN THE EAST.—In spite of the recent injunctions of the Bishop of London, the services in this church on Sunday were marked by actual riots of the most disgraceful character, the authority of the churchwardens and the advice of the Bishop being wholly disregarded. The rector's service was performed by the Rev. A. B. Mackenochie, who wore the ordinary vestments of a Church of England clergyman, but was hooted and threatened as he approached the altar, while, as he retired, he was "mobbed," and his surplice torn away from him. In the evening the same scene was renewed, and at the close of the sermon loud hisses broke forth, and it was with difficulty that the churchwardens cleared the church. At a meeting of the vestry on Thursday it was resolved, with only three dissentients, to refer the dispute with the rector to the bishop's decision, and to invite the rector to do the same, each party engaging to abide by his decision.

THE CASE OF DR. SMETHURST.—It is said that the authorities at the Home Office are in great difficulty as to the course to be taken with this prisoner, and no intimation has been given as to what is likely to be his ultimate fate. It has been supposed that as the fact of his being reprieved necessarily implies a doubt of his guilt, the prisoner will receive a free pardon, but it is a very common practice in cases of doubt for the capital sentence to be commuted to one of penal servitude or transportation for life. Among many instances of this may be cited the cases of Corrigan for the murder of his wife in the Minories, that of Kirwan for the murder of his wife at Dublin by drowning, and that of the woman Rutter, who was convicted at the late assizes of the murder of her husband by cutting his throat. In all these cases the punishment of death was commuted to penal servitude for life; and if a similar course were taken with regard to Dr. Smethurst it would be quite in accordance with precedent. The prisoner still continues to assert in the most earnest manner his entire and absolute innocence of all participation in the death of Miss Bankes, and is strongly impressed with the idea that he will receive a pardon. He has addressed several letters to the Home Secretary, in one of which he is said to state that he cannot prove his innocence unless he is set at liberty, and declares that if he has this opportunity he will prove conclusively that he is entirely innocent of the crime of which he has been convicted.

THE POPLAR POISONING CASE.—At the adjourned inquest on Friday Dr. Letheby described at great length the experiments he had made, and stated that the result had satisfied him that deceased was poisoned not by cantharides but by an irritant vegetable poison like a mixture of croton oil and white hellebore. The other medical men gave evidence confirmatory of this opinion, and the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, George Frederick Royal, who was committed for trial at the next sessions of the Central Criminal Court.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the number of deaths in the metropolis in the week ended on Saturday, Sept. 10, was 1111. The average rate exclusive of the weeks of 1849 and 1854, when cholera was epidemic, was 1102, so that the present return is 9 above the average. During the week the births of 875 boys and 826 girls, in all 1701 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1531.

BATH.—An inquest was held on Friday evening at the Guildhall, on the body of Mr. James Griffin, nurseryman, of this city, and well known in connection with the various horticultural societies of the west of England. The deceased was a successful exhibitor at a flower show held on the previous day at Swindon, and set out from that place on his return to Bath, in company with several friends, by the train which is due here about midnight. On arriving at the Bath station, Mr. Griffin, who sat next the window, opened the door before the train stopped, for the purpose of getting out. In doing so he missed his footing, and fell between the platform and the carriages. Before he could be extricated, one of his legs was so horribly crushed, that on his being removed to the Hospital it was deemed necessary to amputate the limb. The operation was accordingly performed, but he died within two hours. The deceased was 41 years of age, and has left a widow and six children. After hearing the evidence of several witnesses the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

CARLISLE.—A soldier was recently tried at a court-martial in this garrison and sentenced to some months' imprisonment. At the close of the trial he drew a stone from his pocket and threw it with all his strength at the adjutant. Fortunately the stone did not strike him, though it grazed his cheek. The prisoner was thereupon tried by a second court-martial, by which he was sentenced to receive 50 lashes for the assault. The sentence was inflicted, and the man on being released from the triangle swore savagely at the colonel, telling him he himself was the better man of the two, and that he could bear another 50 lashes. He then turned round to the adjutant, and swore he would take his life before he had done with him.

LIVERPOOL.—Another great fire which was visible for miles round occurred in this town on Wednesday night, which caused the destruction of the workshops of Messrs. Kilpin and Montgomery, builders and contractors. The damage is estimated at from 10,000*l.* to 15,000*l.* The property was insured.

PADIHAM.—Since the 17th of March many hundreds of power-loom weavers (young men and women) have been "on strike" in this town, living upon an allowance of 7*s.* a week each out of the wages of the employed in the north of the county. The object of the strike was to compel the manufacturers to pay them according to the Blackburn rate of wages, but after many unavailing attempts to come to terms it has now been proved to the operatives at a conference between them and the masters that there is a very slight difference between the rates complained of and the Blackburn list, and that this difference is really in favour of the masters. The great bulk of the operatives have therefore determined to return to their looms, and the strike may be considered at an end. It is said that the operatives were mainly induced to come to terms by the unexpected discovery that the Blackburn and other manufacturers in the district had been supporting those of Padiham during the strike.

PORTSMOUTH.—A second court-martial, to inquire into the loss of her Majesty's brig Heron, which occurred during a violent tornado on May 9th last, took place on Friday on board the Victory. After hearing a good deal of evidence the court came to the following finding:—

"The court find that the loss of her Majesty's sloop Heron was caused by her foundering at sea during a heavy squall, owing to the senior lieutenant having, contrary to the advice of Lieutenant Blair, who was officer of the watch, caused the ropes to be coiled up shortly before the squall struck the ship, thereby preventing the sail being shortened when required. And the court is further of opinion that the said Lieutenant Blair was not free from blame on the occasion as it was his duty, as officer of the watch, to have called the commander when the senior lieutenant required him to act contrary to his judgment in a case where the safety of the ship was concerned; and the court does therefore adjudge the said Lieutenant Blair to be reprimanded and admonished to be more careful in future."

SHEFFIELD.—On Thursday week a serious accident occurred at the Silkstone Main Colliery, Mosbrough Moor, about six miles from this town, by which four persons lost their lives. In consequence of the overheating of a flue connected with a steam-engine at the bottom of the pit the coal took fire, and so completely filled the drawing shaft with smoke that it was impossible to draw up through that shaft 35 men and boys who were at work in the pit. After some hours' delay a man descended the pumping shaft on a "horse," a triangular piece of wood, attached at the apex to a rope, and at 4 o'clock next morning the whole of the persons in the pit were safely got out by this means, with the exception of four youths, one of whom fell in being drawn up, and killed another who was standing at the bottom, while the two others are supposed to have been killed by a slight explosion that occurred during the night. The extent of the fire is supposed to be very great, and it is expected that the pit will have to be filled with water in order to extinguish it.

YORK.—A letter from Driffield, in the East Riding, says:—"Now that the harvest is over, there seems a mania among farm servants for entering the army, and the recruiting sergeants are continually taking off batches of fine healthy young fellows to the different regiments. One sergeant who has been here for the last nine months has been sending away the finest of the agricultural labourers at the rate of four a week."

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—The 28th meeting of the British Association was opened at Aberdeen on Wednesday evening in the new Music Hall. There was a very large attendance, exceeding, it is said, 2000 persons, and great interest attached to the meeting in consequence of the Prince Consort being the President elect. Professor Owen, on retiring from the chair, congratulated the members on the prosperous condition of the Association, and that it was about to be presided over by his Royal Highness. The Prince Consort, after taking the chair, delivered a very able address, which occupied 40 minutes in delivery, and was loudly applauded throughout. The following is an abstract of his Royal Highness's address:—

"Gentlemen—Your kind invitation to me to undertake the office of your president for the ensuing year could not but startle me on its first announcement. The high position which science occupies—the vast number of distinguished men who labour in the sacred cause, and whose achievements, while spreading innumerable benefits, justly attract the admiration of mankind, contrasted strongly in my mind with the consciousness of my own insignificance in this respect. A simple admirer of science to take the place of the chief spokesman of the scientific men of the day, assembled in furtherance of their important objects—the thing appeared to me impossible; yet, on reflection, I came to the conclusion that, if not as a contributor to or director of your labours, I might still be useful to you, useful to science, by accepting your offer, remembering that this association is not a secret co-fraternity of men jealously guarding the mysteries of their profession, but inviting the uninitiated—the public at large—to join them, having as one of its objects to break down those imaginary and hurtful barriers which exist between men of science and so-called men of practice; I felt that I could, from the peculiar position in which Providence has placed me in this country, appear as the representative of that large public which profits by and admires your exertions, but is unable actively to join in them, that my election was an act of humility on your part, which to reject would have looked like false humility—that is, like pride—on mine. But on reflecting further, I saw, in my acceptance of the office, the means of which necessarily so few are offered to her Majesty, of testifying to you, through the instrumentality of her husband, that your labours are not unappreciated by your Sovereign, and that she wishes her people to know this as well as yourselves. Guided by these reflections, my choice was speedily made, for the path of duty lay straight before me." His Royal Highness then paid a high compliment to Professor Owen, alluding to the wide field for study, more particularly to the geologist, the north of Scotland afforded, remarking on the beneficial and important influences of science, and the consequent good a meeting like the present conferred on human kind. After pointing out in eloquent language, which drew forth frequent applause, the objects and advantages of science, the Prince noticed the gratifying fact that the Association had met with the liberal patronage of the public, and expressed his satisfaction that there should exist bodies of men who brought the wants and claims of science before the public and the Government, who will even hand round the begging-box, and expose themselves to refusals and rebuffs to which all beggars are liable, with the certainty, besides, of being considered great bores. Please to recollect (said his Royal Highness, amid renewed laughter) that this species of bore is a most useful animal, well adapted for the ends for which nature intended him. Having noticed the great genius and labours of the great Humboldt, the anniversary of whose birth, by a singular coincidence, happened on that day, his Royal Highness thus concluded:—"Philosophers are not vain theorists, but essentially men of practice; not conceited pedants, wrapped up in their own mysterious importance, but humble inquirers after truth, proud only of what they may have achieved or won for the general use of man. Neither are they daring and presumptuous unbelievers—a character which ignorance has sometimes offered to them, who would, like the Titans, storm heaven by placing mountain upon mountain, till hurled down from the height attained by the terrible thunders of outraged Jove; but rather the pilgrims to the Holy Land, who toil on in search of the sacred shrine, in search of truth, God's truth, God's laws, as manifested in His works in His creation."

Sir Benjamin Brodie moved, and the Lord Provost of Aberdeen seconded, a vote of thanks to his Royal Highness, which was enthusiastically passed by the large audience.

HIGHLAND GATHERING AT BALMORAL.—On Thursday next, the 22d, the day after the concluding meeting of the British Association, by the gracious and thoughtful kindness of the Queen and the Prince Consort, 200 of the most distinguished of the visitors to the meeting will be entertained at a luncheon, to be served in the fine ballroom of Balmoral Castle. Balmoral is 50 miles from Aberdeen, and 18 miles of the distance can be accomplished by railway.

THE EDINBURGH ANNUITY TAX.—On Wednesday week Mr. Duncan Falconer, the sheriff-officer and his assistants, having received warrants to execute against certain of the citizens for non-payment of annuity-tax, proceeded to put them in force. They first arrested Mr. Fairbairn, of the St. Andrew's Hotel, and committed him to the Calton Gaol. They then proceeded to the shop of Mr. Brown, fruiterer, South Hanover Street, and preferred a claim to about 14*l.* of arrears. He stated that he had conscientious objections to the tax, and was prepared to go to gaol rather than pay. They then made him their prisoner, and proceeding on foot along Princes Street and Waterloo Place, committed him to the custody of the gaoler. Mr. Brown is an elder of the United Presbyterian Church in Lothian Road; he is in very delicate health, and has been under the necessity, on account of a pulmonary affection, to wear heavy mufflers round his throat even when in business. The next visit of the officers was to Mr. Hunter, of Hunter & Glover, confectioners, North St. Andrew Street, whom they found behind his counter, serving his customers. They demanded the amount of the tax. He told them he owed them nothing, and would pay them nothing. Mr. Falconer then claimed him as his prisoner, and ordered him to come away with him. He replied that he would offer no active resistance, but would not willingly move a step, and if they wished to take him to gaol, they must carry him there. Mr. Falconer then ordered two of his assistants to go round the counter and drag him out. This they could not do, and Mr. Falconer and another assistant seized him by the neck, while the others carried him by the feet. In this way he was taken down the steps, and across the pavement to a cab, into which they attempted to force him. He was thrown back on the floor of the cab. Mr. Falconer and an assistant went into it, and endeavoured to drag him to the seat. Mr. Falconer pulled out his manacles, fixed them upon one of his wrists, and endeavoured to force the other hand into them. The passive attitude of Mr. Hunter lying in the bottom of the cab, however, rendered this difficult. While this effort to handcuff their prisoner was proceeding, two of the assistants and a policeman were trying to force his legs into the cab. By this time a large concourse of people had assembled, and, hearing that it was an arrest for Annuity-tax, gave vent to their feelings by cries of execration, and severely handled the officers, tearing their clothes and knocking off their hats. Mr. Falconer then declared that he was hindered from executing his warrant, and withdrew his men, while Mr. Hunter walked quietly into his shop amidst the cheers of the people, the handcuffs dangling from his wrists. Mr. Brown still remains in prison, and has been daily visited by large numbers of sympathisers. Mr. Fairbairn was released after three hours' imprisonment on payment of the tax by his wife. Mr. Hunter is still at large, and no new arrests have been made on the other warrants, the officer and his assistants having refused to execute them without a protecting force of police, which, for the collection of Taxes, is only given in extreme cases. The Anti-Annuity tax Committee have held a meeting, and made arrangements for convening a public meeting of the citizens on an early day for the consideration of these proceedings.

ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT NORTHERN.—On Thursday night the 8th inst. a very serious accident occurred to two trains near the Hitchin station. The Great Northern express, which leaves London at 9.15 P.M., had hardly left the station when it came in collision with an up Midland train, which there crosses the Great Northern line on a level. Fortunately neither train was at full speed, and the engine of the Midland struck the engine of the express, not any part of the train; for had the passenger carriages sustained the shock, the loss of life must have been frightful. As it was the third and fourth carriages of the express were smashed to atoms and the engine disabled. The Midland engine and train received comparatively little injury. Both trains subsequently proceeded on their journeys, but with fresh engines—the Midland leaving Hitchin for London about 12.30, or two hours and a half after the collision; and the down express shortly before 2. The wounded passengers as they were taken from the wreck were laid upon the slope of the adjoining embankment until they could be removed under cover. It was found that about 20 or more of them had sustained injuries more or less severe. Seven, including two ladies and the guard of the express, were so badly wounded that their removal to their respective homes was quite out of the question, and they still remain at Hitchin. The rest of the wounded—all more or less cut and bruised about the face and head—were able either to proceed on their journey or to return to London that night. The passengers left at Hitchin are Mrs. Milner, wife of Dr. Milner, of Lower Belgrave Street, Eaton Square, who has sustained a severe contusion in the side, with fractured ribs; the Rev. Philip Kelland, M.A., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Edinburgh, who has received a compound fracture of the ancle and severe contusions about the chest; Mr. William Anton, a builders' foreman at Messrs. Lucas's, Belvidere Road, who is bruised about the chest, face, and legs; Mr. Podmore, of the firm of Podmore & Hester, wholesale tea merchants, at 148, Fenchurch Street, who has had his hip dislocated; Mr. Richard Tidmarsh, engineer, of Foxley Road, London, who has a severe fracture of the leg, and dislocation of the great toe; and a young Edinburgh lady, who has sustained many serious injuries and contusions. The guard of the express lies at a tavern near the station, cut and bruised about the face, but not in a condition to give cause for apprehension. Mr. Milner, who was travelling in the same compartment with his wife, escaped without a single cut or contusion. The cause of the accident was the neglect of the signalman, who had made the signal to the Midland train to come on at the very moment when the down express, whose path it had to cross before it could reach the up line, was standing at the platform and ready to start. After he had done this the whistle for the down express was blown, indicating that it was leaving the station, and though he had just before signalled the Midland train to cross the line he also gave the driver of the express the signal to come on. The two trains, each of which had to cross the path of the other, were allowed to proceed to a point of common destruction. It is said that the man had reckoned upon one passing the point of junction before the other arrived at it. When he saw that a collision was inevitable, he presented his danger signal to both the advancing trains, but it was then of course too late. The man, who is an old soldier, called Cross, has been taken into custody, pending the result of an inquiry by the Board of Trade.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT WESTERN.—On Wednesday morning a collision occurred near the Slough station, between a heavy goods train from Gloucester which was two hours behind time, and a special passenger train from Didcot which was some minutes before its time. While the former, consisting of 40 heavily laden trucks, was moving slowly into the station, the passenger train, which was not timed to stop there, came along as if nothing in the station impeded its progress. The result was a frightful collision, in which the guard of the goods train was killed on the spot and several carriages were destroyed, but fortunately, the passenger train being empty, no one else was injured. The signalman and the driver of the passenger train mutually throw the blame upon each other. The former maintains that he showed the danger-signal, while the latter insists that he showed the ordinary light indicating that the line was clear. The inquest was opened on Thursday, and adjourned for the examination of further witnesses.

Obituary.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR WILLIAM EYRE, K.C.B., died on the 8th inst. at Bilton Hall, Warwickshire, at the age of 53. He had been in bad health for months past, and was, in consequence of illness, compelled to resign his command in North America, in which he was succeeded last June by Sir Fenwick Williams, of Kars. He entered the army in 1823, and after serving in the 73d Regiment in Canada, of which regiment he was major, he proceeded with that corps to the Cape of Good Hope, and while there distinguished himself in both the Kaffir wars as Lieut.-Colonel. In acknowledgment of his eminent services in the last and previous war he was made a Companion of the Bath, promoted to be Colonel in the Army, and appointed an Aide-de-camp to the Queen. On the outbreak of the Crimean war he was appointed to a brigade of the third division, of which he ultimately became commander, with the local rank of Lieut.-General. He was present at the battle of Alma, commanded the troops in the trenches during the battle of Inkermann, and remained in the Crimea until after the fall of Sebastopol, for which he received a medal and clasps. In 1855 he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath, a Commander of the Legion of Honour, a Knight of the Medjidie of the Second Class, and was among the general officers of the army who received the Sardinian war medal. After his return home in 1857 he was selected by the Commander-in-Chief to command the troops in Canada. He was also one of the field officers in the receipt of rewards for distinguished services. Sir William was second son of the late Vice-Admiral Eyre by the third daughter of Sir George Cooke, Bart., of Wheatley. He married in 1841 Miss Bridgeman Simpson, third daughter of the late Hon. John Bridgeman Simpson.

GENERAL SIR ROBERT H. CUNLIFFE, BART., C.B., died at Acton Park, his seat near Wrexham, on the 10th inst., in his 79th year. He was born in 1785, and married, first, in 1805, the daughter of Mr. A. Forster, and secondly, in 1825, the daughter of Colonel Paton. In 1834 he succeeded his father, Sir Foster, the first baronet. He entered the East India Company's service in the Bengal army in 1798. He gained the rank of general in 1857; and for his military services in India was nominated a Companion of the Bath. In 1828 he was appointed Colonel of the 4th Bengal Native Infantry.

THE HON. JOHN GEORGE CHARLES FOX STRANGWAYS died on the 7th inst., after a very short illness, at Brickworth House, Wilts. He was the youngest son of the second Earl of Ilchester, by his second wife, the third daughter of the Hon. and Rev. William Digby, Dean of Durham. He married in 1844 the third daughter of Mr. Edward Marjoribanks. He was formerly in the Foreign Office, and in Sept., 1836, on the death of the late Lord of Kerry, was returned to Parliament for Calne. For some years he was Gentleman Usher to Queen Adelaide.

SIR J. HAY WILLIAMS, BART., died on the 10th inst. at Bodelwyddan, his seat, near St. Asaph, in his 66th year. He was born in 1794, and married in 1842 Lady Sarah Amherst, only daughter of the late and sister of the present Earl Amherst. He succeeded to the title on the death of his father, the first baronet, in 1832, and assumed the name of "Hay" in 1842. As he has died without issue, the baronetcy devolves on his brother, Mr. Hugh Williams, married in 1845 to Miss Wynn, only daughter of the late Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn.

SIR WILLIAM NORRIS, late Recorder of Penang, died on the 7th inst. at Ashurst Lodge, near Sunningdale, in his 66th year. He was called to the bar of the Middle Temple in 1827, and two years afterwards proceeded to India, where he practised with considerable success. In 1835 he was appointed Chief Justice of Ceylon, having previously been a puisne judge in that colony.

COLONEL WILLIAM HOLMES SUMNER, Colonel of the 1st Royal Surrey Militia, died at Hatchlands, his seat, near Guildford, on the 16th inst. He had been attached to the regiment since August, 1808.

COVENT GARDEN.—Sept. 17.

The finer kinds of fruit have not altered in price since our last report. Pears still consist chiefly of Beurré d'Amanlis, Williams's Bon Chrétien and Louise Bonne of Jersey. Apples are more liberally supplied, but both they and Pears continue to realise high prices. The best table Apples now to be had are Ribston, Court of Wick, and Kerry Pippin. Greengage and Early sorts of Plums are very nearly over. Oranges fetch 3s. 6d. and 4s. per hundred. Good Filberts may be had for 9d. per lb. Cabbages, Beans, Carrots, and Artichokes may be obtained in quantity. Cauliflowers are scarce. Potatoes realise from 6s. to 15s. per cwt. Cucumbers abundant. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Gardenias, Kalosanthes, Lily of the Valley, Violets, Mignonette, China Asters, Heaths, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 12.

The number of Beasts is about the same as on Monday last, but the demand is not so good, consequently prices on the average are lower. Sheep are rather more plentiful. The trade is very heavy at lower rates. Lamb is so little in request that we cease to quote it. Trade is very dull for Calves. From Germany and Holland there are 1551 Beasts, 7350 Sheep, and 182 Calves; from Scotland, 100 Beasts; from Ireland, 480; and 2500 from the northern and midland counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 15.

The supply of Beasts is about the same as on Thursday last. Trade for them is dull. Monday's quotations are generally realised, but a clearance cannot be effected. The number of Sheep is larger; choicest kinds are not, however, very plentiful, and they find purchasers. The Calf trade is about the same as on Monday. Our foreign supply consists of 310 Beasts, 2030 Sheep, and 302 Calves. The number of Milch Cows is 102.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 12.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and fine selected samples were sold at the extreme prices of Monday last, but the bulk remained on hand at the close. There was a fair attendance; nevertheless, foreign Wheat was neglected, and even on the retail sales effected our quotations were obtained with difficulty. For Barley there is a fair inquiry at last week's rates. New Beans and Peas are the turn cheaper. The Oat trade is heavy, and Russian are fully 6d. per qr. lower. There is no alteration in the value of Flour.

FRIDAY, Sept. 16.

The weather during the present week has been stormy and wet, with a lower temperature. The great reduction in the prices of Wheat, the inferior quality and condition of the new crop, the falling off in the supplies, and the state of the weather combined, have created (more particularly in the north) an increased inquiry for fine new English and foreign, and also for old foreign, which in the majority of the provincial markets has caused an improvement of 1s. per qr. upon the two former, and imparted a better feeling to the trade in general. Spring Corn remains without any particular alteration in its value, that of Beans, Peas, and Oats here is still tending downward, the latter owing to the large Russian arrivals. The Flour trade continues inanimate. The arrivals of grain and seed-laden vessels off the coast from Southern Europe are moderate this week. The transactions are considerable, including Taganrog Ghirka Wheat at 42s. to 42s. 6d., and Odessa Ghirka at 40s. 4½d. to 41s. per 492 lbs.; Sandomirka at 41s. 6d. per 480 lbs.; Ibrail Maize at 26s. to 26s. 9d. per 480 lbs., Odessa at 28s., Galatz at 28s. 9d. to 29s., both per 492 lbs., Odessa Barley at 23s., Ibrail (imperfect) at 20s., both per 400 lbs. Taganrog Oats at 17s 6d. per qr. imp. The arrivals of English Wheat and foreign Barley have been to a fair extent, of foreign Wheat small, but of Oats considerable. The attendance at this morning's market was moderate only. The English Wheat fresh up was sold at the extreme rates of Monday last; foreign also met with more attention at fully former prices. Barley brings late rates. For Oats there is a fair sale at a trifle under Monday's quotations, being 3d. to 6d. better than on Wednesday.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL administered with the greatest success in CONSUMPTION, GENERAL DEBILITY, RHEUMATISM, INFANTILE WASTING, AND ALL THE DISORDERS OF DEFECTIVE NUTRITION is the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its curative effects, unquestionably the most economical of all kinds. Its immeasurable therapeutic superiority over every other variety is attested by innumerable spontaneous testimonials from Physicians and Surgeons of European reputation.

OPINION OF EDWIN LANKESTER, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., Late Lecturer on the Practice of Physic at St. George's School, Superintendent of the Food Collection at the Kensington Museum, &c.

"I believe that the purity and genuineness of the Oil are secured in its preparation by the personal attention of a Chemist and intelligent a Physician as Dr. DE JONGH, who has also written the best medical treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I should deem the Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other as regards genuineness and medical efficacy."

Sold ONLY in IMPERIAL half pints, 2*s.* 6*d.*; pints, quarts, 9*s.*, capsuled, and labelled with Dr DE JONGH'S stamp and signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE IS GENUINE, by all chemists in the United Kingdoms by respectable Chemists, CAUTION.—Strenuously resist proposed substitutes.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—INCURABLE REMEDIES FOR BAD LEGS.—Mr. Shaw, butcher, of Old Brentford, was afflicted for a long time with three sores in his leg, which rendered him totally unable to attend his usual vocation. In fact his leg was so bad as to defied all medical skill to effect a cure. He then took a box of HOLLOWAY'S Ointment and Pills, paying every strict attention to the printed instructions given with the medicines. The result was, after persevering with these remedies for a few weeks, that his leg was completely cured, and he now enjoys most excellent health. Let any one similarly afflicted use the same means of cure. In cases of this nature these medicines never fail.

News of the Week.

THE mystery which has so long hung over the fate of Sir JOHN FRANKLIN has at last been solved by the final searching expedition sent out by his devoted wife, whose name has become as much associated with the melancholy story as that of the great navigator himself. Capt. M'CLINTOCK, who left England in 1857 in command of Lady FRANKLIN'S discovery steamer, Fox, has arrived this week with the interesting intelligence that the endeavours of himself and officers to ascertain the fate of the Franklin Expedition have been completely successful. A record signed by Captains CROZIER and FITZJAMES, and dated the 25th April, 1848, has been found in a cairn erected on Point Victory, on the north-west coast of King William's Island, stating that the Erebus and Terror spent their first winter in 1845-6 at Beechey Island, after having ascended Wellington Channel to the 77th degree of N. lat., and returned by the west side of Cornwallis Island. On the 12th Sept., 1846, they were beset in the ice, and so continued throughout the second winter. On the 11th June, 1847, six months before any anxiety was felt in England for his safety, Sir JOHN FRANKLIN died, and thus escaped the privations and sufferings which awaited the rest of his companions. The expedition then moved on till it arrived within five leagues of Point Victory. At this point, during the third winter, and nearly 10 months after Sir JOHN FRANKLIN'S death, Captains CROZIER and FITZJAMES determined to abandon the ships, and to set out, with the 105 survivors, on a land journey to the Great Fish River. Up to that date they had lost nine officers and 15 men by death, and they intended to start for the Great River on the day after the date of the record, viz., the 26th April, 1848. Capt. M'CLINTOCK had previously been informed by the Esquimaux that after the ships were abandoned, one of them was crushed and sunk by the ice, while the other had been driven on shore, where she has ever since remained, affording them an inexhaustible supply of wood and iron. He had also learnt from the natives that in the following winter they had ascertained by the discovery of the dead bodies along the line of route, that many of the "white men" had "dropped" by the way, as they pursued their course towards the Great River. Captain M'CLINTOCK, Captain ALLEN YOUNG, and Lieut. HOBSON subsequently verified this information by a careful examination of the route taken by our unfortunate countrymen, and found numerous bleached skeletons lying on the snow with fragments of clothes and other relics. At a distance of 65 geographical miles from the ships they found a boat containing two skeletons with quantities of clothing, food, and fuel, showing that death had not been caused by want of sustenance. Captain M'CLINTOCK suggests, from the evidence afforded by these remains, that the abandonment of the Erebus and Terror had been deliberately arranged, and that every effort had been made during the third winter to render the travelling equipments complete; but that disease had greatly reduced the strength of all on board, far more perhaps than they themselves were aware of. After examining 800 miles of coast, never before penetrated by such an expedition, Captain M'CLINTOCK and his officers came to the conclusion that the whole party of 105 men who set out on this melancholy journey after Sir JOHN FRANKLIN'S death dropped down one after the other on their march until the last man perished, more than 11 years ago. Captain M'CLINTOCK has brought home many highly interesting relics of our lost countrymen, part of which were obtained from the Esquimaux, and part picked up on the western shore of King William's Island, a spot which will henceforth have the deepest interest in the history of Arctic discovery in connection with Sir JOHN FRANKLIN'S expedition, and with the heroic efforts made for 10 long years by the great nations of the Old World and the New to solve the mystery of its fate.

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Monday week the Earl of Elgin arrived and succeeded Sir G. Grey as Secretary of State in attendance on her Majesty. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Alice, rode out. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went to the Abergeldie Woods, which were driven for deer. The Count de Flandres arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Wednesday the Queen accompanied by the Princess Alice drove to Morven and ascended the hill on ponies. The Prince Consort left Balmoral for Banchory House, near Aberdeen. The Prince of Wales went out deer-stalking. The Count de Flandres went out grouse shooting. On Thursday the Queen, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and the Princesses Alice and Helena, drove to Altnagussach, and then rode to Lochnagar. Prince Arthur drove to the Linn of Dee, and the Count de Flandres went out deer-stalking. In the evening the Prince Consort returned from Aberdeen. On Friday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Alice, the Prince of Wales, and the Count de Flandres drove out. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. The Earl of Elgin left the Castle for London to attend the Cabinet Council. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Louisa, drove to Altnagussach. On Monday the Queen, Prince Consort, and the Princess Alice drove out. The Prince of Wales went out shooting. The Count de Flandres went out deer-stalking. In the evening her Majesty gave a ball.

PRIVY COUNCIL.—The Queen was to hold a Privy Council yesterday at Balmoral.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday afternoon at the official residence of the first Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street.

PRINCE ALFRED arrived at Malta on the 4th inst., from Marseilles, in her Majesty's screw vessel Banshee, and was received with a Royal salute on rejoining the Euryalus. His Royal Highness again left Malta on the 10th in the Euryalus for the Pirœus of Athens and other ports of the Archipelago, whence she will extend her cruise as far as Constantinople, returning to Malta about Christmas, as his Royal Highness is to be in England in February.

THE DEANERY OF ST. ASAPH has been conferred on the Rev. Richard Maurice Bonnor, M.A., of Christ Church, Oxford, vicar of Ruabon.

THE EXPEDITION TO CHINA.—Rear-Admiral Jones, C.B., who distinguished himself in the Penelope on the coast of Africa, and afterwards in the Sampson before Odessa and Sebastopol, has been appointed second in command on the East India and China station. It is said to be the intention of Government to despatch a fleet of 30 gun-boats to the Chinese waters, besides a squadron of frigates and other vessels; and orders have been given to prepare immediately for foreign service the screw steam-ships James Watt, 91; the Cæsar, 91; and the Agamemnon, 91. It is said that these line-of-battle ships are to convey troops to Alexandria to be sent on to China by the overland route. It is reported that these troops will consist of 1000 Royal Marines, strong detachments from the Rifle Brigade, two Light Infantry Regiments, and an efficient draught of men from the Military Train. At Woolwich Arsenal the men have been working over time for some days preparing and packing 3,000,000 rounds of rifle ammunition to be forwarded by the overland route.

RETURN OF CAPT. M'CLINTOCK'S ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—Captain M'Clintock landed on Wednesday at Portsmouth from a pilot-boat, which had brought him ashore from the Fox screw discovery vessel, arrived off the Isle of Wight from the Arctic Seas. Captain M'Clintock immediately proceeded by train to London, taking with him two cases containing relics of the expedition of Sir John Franklin, and a long narrative of the proceedings of the Fox from the time of her departure from Davis's Straits on the 25th April, 1858. The following is a summary of this narrative:—

"At Point Victory, on the north-west coast of King William's Island, a record was found, dated the 25th of April, 1848, and signed by Captains Crozier and Fitzjames, stating that her Majesty's ships Erebus and Terror were abandoned on the 22d of April, 1848, in the ice, five leagues to the N.N.W., and that the survivors—in all amounting to 105 souls, under the command of Captain Crozier—were proceeding to the Great Fish River. Sir John Franklin had died on the 11th of June, 1847, nearly 10 months before. The Fox being unable to penetrate beyond Bellot Straits, wintered in Brentford Bay, and Captain M'Clintock, Captain Young, and Lieutenant Hobson completed the inquiry by means of sledge journeys during the spring. The ground of their search was 800 miles of coast line, part of which formed the estuary of the Great Fish River, and which intervened between the two classes of searches. Many deeply interesting relics of our lost countrymen were picked up on the western shore of King William's Island, and others were obtained from the Esquimaux, by whom they were informed that subsequent to their abandonment one ship was crushed and sunk by the ice, and the other forced on shore, where she has ever since been, affording them an almost inexhaustible mine of wealth. They also learnt from an intelligent old Esquimaux woman that it was in the fall of the year that the ship was forced ashore; and that 'many of the white men dropped by the way as they went towards the Great River; but this was only known to them in the winter following, when their bodies were discovered.' This information was verified by Capt. M'Clintock's subsequent discovery of the bleached skeletons lying on the snow. One of these skeletons still had fragments of clothing lying round it. A pocket-book containing a few worn letters was also found and was brought back by the party; and there is some prospect that the letters may be deciphered. 'Judging from the remains of his dress,' the narrative adds, 'this unfortunate young man was a steward or officer's servant, and his position exactly verified the Esquimaux's assertion that they dropped as they walked along.' Among the other discoveries was that of a large boat, apparently designed for the ascent of the Great Fish River, and containing a large quantity of clothing, and two skeletons. 'One of these lay in the after part of the boat, under a pile of clothing; the other, which was much more disturbed, probably by animals, was found in the bow. Five pocket watches, a quantity of silver spoons and forks, and a few religious books were also found, but no journals, pocket-books, or even names upon any article of clothing. Two double barrelled guns stood upright against the boat's side precisely as they had been placed eleven years before. One barrel in each was loaded and cocked; there was ammunition in abundance, also 30lbs. or 40lbs. of chocolate, some tea and tobacco. Fuel was not wanting; a drift tree lay within 100 yards of the boat.' Near the cairn where the record of Captains Crozier and Fitzjames was found, quantities of clothing, and stores of all kinds, were picked up, showing that when the expedition resolved, on the 22nd April, 1848, on the desperate expedient of abandoning the ships, they abandoned also everything that they did not absolutely require for their long journey to the Great Fish River, in which they all seem to have dropped down one by one under cold and fatigue. In addition to these discoveries the expedition has determined the insularity of Prince of Wales's Land, and has discovered the coast line intervening between the extreme points reached by Lieutenant Osborne and Browne as well as that between Bellot Strait and the furthest point reached by Sir James Ross at Four River Bay in 1849, thus uniting the explorings of the former searching Expeditions to the North and West with those of Sir J. Ross, Messrs. Dease, Simpson, and Rae to the South."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—It was reported in Paris on Tuesday, on the strength of private despatches from Biarritz, that the interview between the Emperor and King Leopold has resulted in an arrangement for the throne of Tuscany to be given to the Count of Flanders, the second son of the King of the Belgians, while Parma and Modena united are to be bestowed on his son-in-law the Austrian Archduke Maximilian. Another report says that the Count of Flanders is to have the three Duchies, and the Archduke Maximilian Venetia, with a separate constitution. No official information has yet been received to throw any light on the credibility of these rumours. The King was received with extraordinary honours on his arrival at Biarritz. He had scarcely entered the town when a coupé drawn by two horses left the Villa Eugénie and drove to the Maison Ardoin. The Emperor was alone in the carriage. His Majesty was received at the foot of the staircase by the Prince de Chimay, and King Leopold stood at the top. When the Emperor reached the top of the staircase the King made a very low bow, when the former stepped forward, and, taking the King by the hand, shook it heartily. The two Sovereigns then entered one of the saloons, where they remained in close conversation alone for an hour and a half. They afterwards entered the carriage of the Emperor, and proceeded to the villa, where the King was received by the Empress. It was expected that his Majesty would not leave Biarritz until the departure of the Imperial Court, which will take place about the end of the month. The report that Lord Cowley left Paris on Saturday for Biarritz appears to be unfounded, but Count Walewski, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, proceeded there on Monday; and Count Cavour and the Duke of Malakoff are expected to meet him. Prince Richard Metternich arrived in Paris on Sunday from Vienna, and after having a conference with Count Walewski proceeded to Biarritz, where Count Reiset, who has returned from his mission to Italy, has also arrived. Prince Poniatowski left Florence on the 21st for Biarritz. The Minister of the Interior has issued a circular to the Prefects throughout France, stating that it is not the intention of the Government to modify the laws on the press, and requesting them to continue to control the latitude given to the provincial newspapers. This circular has been followed by the following article in the Moniteur:—

"Several newspapers have alluded to a decree which it is supposed would appear to modify the laws of the press. This news is without any foundation. In France the press has a right to discuss all the acts of the Government, and by so doing to enlighten the public mind. Certain papers in becoming without knowledge the organs of hostile parties claim a certain amount of freedom, which would have no other object than facilitating their attacks against the constitution and the fundamental laws of social order. The Government of the Emperor will not deviate from the established system, which, in allowing a field sufficiently large for discussion, controversy, and analysis, prevents on the other hand the disastrous effects of falsehood, calumny, and error."

The Patrie of Thursday states that it is the intention of the Government to suppress the 4th Battalion of the 102 Regiments of the Line, the formation of which has been decided on during the war. The journal of Compiègne state that preparations are making in the Palace of that town for the reception of the Emperor and Empress, and that invitations for the grand hunting parties which their Majesties propose to give during their stay there have already been issued. The camp of Helfaut is to be raised, as well as that of Châlons. Part of the cavalry have already left the latter camp. Messrs. Blanqui and Boichot have arrived at Marseilles, on their intention of availing themselves of the general amnesty. The recent fire at Cambray has done considerable damage to the cathedral, but the works of art which it contained have escaped. The Archbishop's palace, where Fénélon wrote his "Télémaque," and its works, is totally destroyed. The announcement of the Anglo-French expedition against China has been well received throughout France. With the single exception of the Legitimatist organ, the Paris papers express their satisfaction at the announcement, and several of them add a hope that the union of the two flags against a common enemy will strengthen the alliance between the countries, and dissipate recent rumours of a rupture. The Constitutionnel of Sunday publishes an article in large type, treating the position of England in reference to the Italian question, and expressing a hope that the joint expedition to China may lead to a better understanding between England and France in the settlement of Italy. The following is a summary of this article:—

"'Before the war it was said that there was no Italian question; now everything is changed. The reproach is made that we do not risk all in order that the question may be entirely solved. But the general state of affairs did not admit of such a solution.' The article then alludes to the advantages the peace of Villafranca has obtained for Italy, and says much of the demonstrations which have taken place in Central Italy; but endeavours to prove that the Duchies cannot become mere provincial towns of Sardinia. 'The people in the Duchies will regret their princes and their local independence.' The article continues by saying 'that the increase of the Piedmontese territory will excite the jealousy of Naples, and will prevent the realisation of an Italian confederation. These considerations had weight with the Emperor at Villafranca, and ought to impress the true friends of Italy which England is now one.' The article expresses a hope that the councils of England will be joined to those of France United on the banks of the Peiho to chastise a common foe, may the two great Western Powers unite their diplomatic efforts to overcome the last difficulties of the Italian crisis, and to make, if necessary, such modifications to the conditions of peace as may be compatible with the interests and the honour of the parties therein engaged. Thanks to this union the peninsula will be free from the Alps to the Adriatic."

HOLLAND.—The King of Holland opened the Legislative Session of the Chambers on the 19th inst. In the Royal speech, after stating that his Majesty entertains with the most friendly relations with all countries, is exclusively occupied with questions of internal improvement. Among the projects announced, the most important are the construction of a line of railways throughout the country and of a new canal from Amsterdam to the sea. The execution of these great works would render it necessary to observe prudence in employing the considerable excess over the expenses of the State. This would not admit of any reduction of taxes. The sinking fund would continue in operation. The project of law for the emancipation of the slaves in the Dutch West Indian Colonies not having been adopted last session, a modified project would be presented to the Chambers.

BELGIUM.—Letters from Brussels state that the Count of Flanders on his return from Scotland will pay a visit to the Court of Holland—the first visit paid by any of the Belgian Royal family to Holland since the revolution of 1830. It is said that the object of the visit is to arrange the conditions of an interview between the two Courts in October next in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, on the inauguration of the railway which is to unite that province to Belgium.

PRUSSIA.—The following is the substance of an answer made by Count Schwerin, on behalf of the Prince Regent, to an address which has been presented to the Prussian Government by the principal inhabitants of Stettin, concerning the question of the German Confederation:—

"The late events and experiences had created a conviction in Germany, in spite of all the different views, that the independence and power of Germany, as regards her exterior relations, and the development in the interior of their material and intellectual powers, render a strong and energetic unity and the reform of the Federal Constitution, to obtain this end necessary. The Government of Prussia acknowledges the justice of this public opinion. But the Government will not allow itself to be led away by the manifestations which that national feeling causes, nor will its own conviction of that which might at first appear to it as best cause it to deviate from the way which is pointed out by its consideration and conscientious esteem of the rights of others, and by its regard for that which is present possible and attainable. The same esteem for right and law which characterises the state of affairs of Prussia in the interior must also rule her relations with Germany and her German Confederates. Germany will render to herself greater service at the present time by endeavouring to further the common interests of Germany in such a way that practical results will ensue by the increase of the armed forces of Germany, and by strengthening the certain feeling of which signs are now established throughout the whole federal country, than by premature proposals for changes in the Federal Constitution. The Prussian Government being determined to devote its energies for the furtherance of these objects, considers itself entitled to claim confidence that she will, when called upon, find ways in which the interests of Germany and Prussia will be compatible with the commands of duty and conscience."

SWITZERLAND.—On the 19th inst., after the arrival of a French courier, the Plenipotentiaries of France and Austria held a conference which lasted three hours. On the following day M. Desambrois, the Sardinian Plenipotentiary, had a consultation with the French Ambassador, after which a courier was immediately despatched to Turin. On the same day a courier arrived from Vienna with instructions to draw up the instrument for the treaty of peace, and the documents for the cession of Lombardy to Sardinia. No allusion is made to the Duchies. It was hoped that the treaty of peace would be signed in a few days.

BAVARIA.—Baron Von Beust, the Saxon Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Baron von Hugel, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Wurtemberg, arrived at Munich on the 20th, to hold conferences with the Bavarian Minister for Foreign Affairs on the question of the Reform of the Diet. It is said that all the Ministers have come to an agreement on the subject

AUSTRIA.—Prince Metternich is said to have received instructions to inform the Emperor Napoleon that Austria will not object to a Congress "on certain conditions." Lord John Russell is now the bugbear of the Austrians, and quite as unpopular as Lord Palmerston was some 8 or 10 years ago.—A great fire broke out a few days ago in the ancient cathedral at Salzburg, but the walls did not give way, and consequently the cupola and two towers are still standing. The treasures and relics were saved.

ITALY.—The Vienna Gazette contains an Imperial decree raising the state of siege in Venice, but providing that some slight regulations shall continue provisionally in force for certain cases. The Government of Tuscany has notified to the Plenipotentiaries of the Grand Duke to evacuate the Palace within three days, and in case of non-compliance the property of the Grand Duke is to be sequestered. The following noblemen and gentlemen have been appointed members of the deputation from the National Assembly of the Romagna to the King of Sardinia: Count Bentivoglio, Count Gazzadini, Marquis Tanari, Count Salvoni, M. Laderchi, M. Scarabelli, Vice-President, and M. Marescotti, Secretary of the National Assembly. The Assembly of Parma last week unanimously voted for the contract of a loan of 5,000,000f., and appointed a deputation to deliver the address from the Assembly to the Emperor Napoleon. The Assembly was then prorogued, with the power to be re-convoked by a decree of the Dictator and President of the Assembly, or at the request of 20 members. The council of the different districts of Turin have given their approval to the erection of monuments to the King of Sardinia and the Emperor of the French. The Sardinian Government has addressed a circular to the great Powers, denying the report of the cession of Savoy to France, and declaring such report to be entirely void of foundation. The following is a summary of the answer given by the King of Sardinia to the deputation from Modena and Parma:—

After expressing his thanks to the people of Modena and Parma for the unanimity of their votes recorded for the annexation of their provinces to Piedmont, by which they had confirmed the wishes expressed by them 11 years ago to the King his father, his Majesty said: "I agree with the desires you have the mission to communicate to me: they are fresh manifestations of the national will, to save the country from the disastrous consequences of a foreign rule, and to erect a barrier which will insure to our countrymen the possession of Italy for the Italians. The deputation will understand in what manner I must proceed towards the accomplishment of the wishes of the Assemblies. Armed with the rights which I have acquired, I will support your cause before the great Powers, and especially before the French Emperor, who, while leading the victorious legions of France, was fighting for the independance of Italy. Europe has recognised the right of other nations to provide for their security by constituting a Government capable of defending their liberties and their independence. She will be neither less just nor less generous towards the Italian provinces. The votes which your Assemblies have recorded, and the numerous volunteers who have fought under the flag of Piedmont during the days of the late struggle, have proved that firmness is a tried virtue with the people of Modena and Parma. Therefore I need not say to you persevere; I will only congratulate you upon the order and the moderation of which you have given such brilliant examples, in order to prove to Europe that the Italians know how to govern themselves, and that they are worthy to be citizens of a free nation."

RUSSIA.—The anniversary of the coronation of the Emperor of Russia was celebrated at St. Petersburg and Warsaw on the 7th inst. with great festivity. His Majesty has arrived at Tsarsko-Selo from his journey to Moscow and Twer. Grand preparations were making at St. Petersburg for the fête of the majority of the Hereditary Grand Duke on the 20th. Deputations were to arrive from all parts of the empire; and the kingdom of Poland was to be represented by General Gortschakoff and a number of the Polish nobility.

COAST OF AFRICA.—Accounts from Lagos state that on the 18th of July Lieut. Hope, of her Majesty's gunboat Brune, with Mr. Kilbrow, second master, James Mack, gunner's mate, and 10 Kroomen, were off the Bar of Lagos taking soundings, when their boat got into the surf, was capsized, and every soul perished except one Krooman, who was picked up four days afterwards 70 miles distant, clinging to the boat and nearly dead from want of food and water.

TURKEY.—A telegraphic despatch from Constantinople states that a conspiracy to assassinate the Sultan has been discovered. Two hundred persons, chiefly Circassians and Kurds, have been arrested; among them Diafer Dem, Pasha of Albania, who was apparently the chief conspirator. A special tribunal has been created to try them. It is believed that their plot had no ramifications; and that no other persons than those now under arrest are implicated. The Montenegrin boundary commission has met at Grakovo.

SYRIA.—Fresh affrays have taken place between the Christians and Druses in the Lebanon. In consequence of a judicial investigation, the Prussian Consul-General at Smyrna, M. Spiegelthal, has been suspended, and the business of the Consulate transferred to the Dutch Consul.

MOROCCO.—Accounts from the frontiers of Morocco state that the native tribes had renewed their attacks on the French outposts, and had pillaged and set fire to some of the French houses. General Esterhazy made a brilliant onslaught, and repulsed the enemy. The new Emperor of Morocco was not implicated in these attacks, but had not the power to check them. It is said that there has been an action between the new Emperor, Sidi Mahomed, and one of the pretenders to the crown, in which the former gained the victory. As regards the Spanish campaign against the Moors, it is thought probable that the demonstrations already made will suffice to procure concessions and guarantees for the future, and that it will not be found necessary to carry out the extensive expedition projected. It is reported that England has offered her mediation.

INDIA.—The Calcutta mail has arrived with news to the 27th August. A bill had been introduced into the Legislative Council to tax all professions and trades in India, cultivators of land to be exempt. The Special Disarming Act passed during the mutiny is to become permanent. The House of Delhi had been deprived of all titular distinctions and privileges for ever. Lord Clyde retires from the command of the Indian army at the close of this year, and will be succeeded by Sir Hugh Rose. The disturbance at Hyderabad in the ranks of the 5th Madras Cavalry, which is chiefly composed of Mahometans, was caused, like those that took place in the North-West Provinces, by the greased cartridges which were lately served out to them by mistake. Placards were put up in the public streets which showed that a movement was on foot for drawing the sword in defence of their religion, and killing all the Christians of the place. A letter from Rohilcund mentions that Balao Rao, brother to the Nana, Hurdut Sing, Talookdar of Bhowne, near Baraitch, and the Nawab of Nujeebabad have died from the effects of the climate near Dhoker in the Nepaul territories. The Nana is suffering from fever. The Begum still holds out, and, it is said, will give some trouble should the rebels succeed in getting out from their present abode into Tirhoot and the Santhal Purgunnahs. A case of Suttee occurred on the 19th June near Hansi. The village has been fined 500 rupees, the Choonars who carried the wood and the lumberdars have been sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment, and the thannadar and police have been dismissed by order of the Lieutenant-Governor.

CHINA.—A vague rumour has been current since the arrival of the last mail, that the Emperor of China intends to disavow the outrage on the Peiho, and to offer every satisfaction that can be required of him. It is said that he has offered the head of the Peiho Mandarin in atonement, coupled with promises of an immediate reception of the Ambassadors at Pekin. Admiral Hope's despatch to the Admiralty containing the official account of the repulse on the 25th July was published on Saturday. The following abstract contains some details not mentioned in the letters received last week:—

On arriving at the mouth of the Peiho the Admiral proceeded to reconnitre the existing state of the defences of the river. These appeared to consist principally of the reconstruction, in earth, and in an improved form, of the works destroyed last year, strengthened by additional piles and abattis, as well as an increased number of booms of a very much more formidable nature. Very few guns were seen, but a considerable number of embrasures were masked with matting, evidently with a view of concealing others. The Admiral sent an officer on shore to communicate with the authorities, but he was met by a guard, apparently of country people, who prevented him from landing, and informed him that there were no officials nearer than Tientsin. On his acquainting them with the Admiral's wish that the obstructions at the mouth of the river should be removed, in order to enable the Ministers to proceed to Tientsin, they promised that a commencement should be made for that purpose within the next 48 hours. The despatch then says that, notwithstanding this promise, nothing was done; and after receiving evasive replies to further communications, the Admiral placed the matter in the Admiral's hands. The details which follow confirm the accuracy of the account published in our last Number, and add nothing of importance to it, except that the inner boom which barred the passage of the river was ascertained by Capt. Willes to consist of large baulks, well cross-lashed together, forming a mass of timber not less than 120 feet wide, and about 3 feet in depth.

COCHIN CHINA.—The French admiral commanding in Cochin China has concluded a treaty with the Annamese, and will probably start with his fleet to China.

UNITED STATES.—Accounts from New York of the 10th inst. state that the advices from Vancouver's Island reporting the occupation of the island of San Juan had created great interest. The papers discuss the question in very moderate terms. The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says:—

"General Harney sent troops to San Juan to protect the white settlers from the savages, who were committing many atrocious murders. Nothing inimical to the British Government was intended by such a movement. The jealousy of Governor Douglas was needlessly excited. The soldiers of the British [illegible] ment. The [illegible] boundary treaty was negotiated, [illegible] [illegible] of Mexico was the [illegible] boundary, and [illegible] to it and to our just limits. No doubt need be entertained that the title to San Juan will be amicably adjusted, as the President must be perfectly aware of our rights, and will not be [illegible] difficulty will doubtless [illegible] between the Government of Great Britain and the United States, as the treaty settling the [illegible] provision for a settlement in such a case as has arisen. The State Department has had [illegible] matter under consideration, and General Harney will receive instructions to act with great caution until the Government have compared views upon the subject."

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—From the accounts received direct from the colony it appears that early in July General Harney landed with about 50 American soldiers, commenced erecting barracks, and issued a proclamation claiming the island as United States' territory. He rejected the British proposition for a joint occupancy until the matter could be referred to the respective Governments, and refused to allow the British Sappers and Miners to land. The [illegible] placed under the command of Captain Pender. Governor Douglas then issued a proclamation protesting against the proceedings of General Harney and declared the island to be British property. He also sent a message to the Vancouver's Legislative Assembly, in which it was declared that the British forces would be landed on the island, and in which he announced his belief that the unwarrantable and [illegible] contrary to the usages of civilised nations, had originated in error and been undertaken without the authority of the United States' Government, and in support of his opinion quoted a letter of Mr. Marcy's, in 1855. He further stated that her Majesty's ships Tribune and Plumper had been ordered to land a detachment of Royal Engineers and Marines for the protection of British subjects, and that the officer in command had been ordered to be conciliatory, but firm in maintaining British rights. At San Juan were three British and four American men-of-war. A number of Americans and English, on hearing of the dispute, started for San Juan. A report that a British steamer had opened fire upon the Americans was not credited.

Public Addresses.

EARL STANHOPE presided last week at a meeting of the Conservatives of West Kent at Mote Park, Maidstone, and spoke as follows on public affairs:—

"For the last few years he had felt it his duty to abstain from taking a share in any party celebrations, which he thought to be the proper course for him to pursue, after the circumstances under which he had lost his seat in the House of Commons in the general election of 1852. When two years after losing his seat there, he [illegible] House of Lords, he did not seek to [illegible] any political party. As a free peer he was entitled to consider the matters as they came before him without any reference to party considerations, and to decide upon them as his conscience might determine. But that course, however satisfactory it might be in the ordinary current of affairs, was not satisfactory when a great national question was agitating the country. In the spring of the present year, when in the House of Commons an adverse vote to the [illegible] of Lord Derby, and when there was in consequence an appeal to the country, several persons had referred to his judgment and counsel as to the course which they ought to pursue under the circumstances. Looking to all the circumstances of the country, it appeared to him that the vote of the House of Commons adverse to the Government of Lord [illegible] was not justly founded, and that it would be very desirable that it should be reversed by the vote of the [illegible] appealed to. In West Kent the result of that appeal [illegible] signal triumph. In other parts of the kingdom, the result was not the same, and on the meeting of Parliament Lord Derby's Government being defeated on a division by a small majority, it immediately resigned, and was succeeded by the Administration of Lord Palmerston. The [illegible] of the new Government were not yet before the country, but in the formation of that Government there were one or two circumstances of a most unfavourable and unprecedented character. In the first place, having been recently in possession of some property which he was [illegible], he had been there, in conversing with persons of all classes, to very great pain and just resentment at the entire exclusion of Irishmen from any share in the new appointments. In all the Governments above the Colonial offices of that country, according to their political connection, had been called on to take their share in the administration of public affairs. In the late Government there was an Irish nobleman in the office of Secretary for Ireland, another Irish nobleman at the head of the Board of Trade, and an Irish lawyer of the greatest eloquence and ability—Sir H. Cairns, Solicitor-General, not for Ireland, but for England. But in the present Government there was not a single Irishman. (A Voice—'Palmerston.') In this respect at least the Conservatives were far more Liberal than those who claimed the name. There was, moreover, a question pending in Ireland one of the most momentous questions which could engage the attention of a Government—the question of national education. The Roman Catholic hierarchy and a portion of the hierarchy of the Established Church had declared themselves hostile to the present system. Whatever decision the Government might come to—whether to maintain it, to abrogate it, or to modify it—their decision could not command the same confidence in Ireland as if there were in their ranks some man born and brought up in the country, and intimately acquainted with the wishes of the people. Again, when the Government was formed there were three gentlemen (Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Vernon Smith, and Sir B. Hall) who had formerly held offices, but who were not invited to resume them. In naming those gentlemen he desired to speak of them with all personal respect, for with all three he had lived for a long time on terms of friendly acquaintance. It was not thought fit to propose to them to resume the offices they had formerly held, but the plan of the Government was to offer them seats in the House of Lords by way of compensation. This certainly was a most unusual course, and was, in fact, postponing the public advantage to the convenience of party. What would be said in the House of Commons if the electors of a constituency were asked to send a man to that assembly because he was not thought fit or was not asked to take the office of justice of the peace or deputy-lieutenant, for instance? It seemed to be a remnant of that system which was affected by the Whig party until very recent years—governing the country by means of the great Whig houses; for it went on this maxim, that any one who had once held an office had a prescriptive right either to that same office or to some substitute for it. He should be sorry if it were for a moment supposed that the House of Lords had any jealousy of any fresh admissions to their ranks. The very reverse was the case, so far as his observation and feelings went, and if he wished for an instance of the cordiality with which additions were received he would point to that of the noble and learned lord near him, who, having achieved the highest forensic reputation as Mr. Pemberton Leigh, now, to the great advantage of the public, lent his assistance to the despatch of the judicial business of the House of Lords as Lord Kingsdown. The House of Lords was most anxious to receive among them any men who came there, having received the peerage as a reward for public services; but they objected to receive those who came before them, not for services rendered, but because they were not allowed or not required to render services. In this respect the prerogative of the Queen had not been fairly dealt with by the responsible Ministers of the Crown, and the importance of regulating the admission to one branch of the Legislature had not been considered with the fairness of justice which it required. In these two instances there had been in the formation of the Government some unpromising indications, but nevertheless a predetermined and indiscriminating opposition was not the attitude which ought to be assumed by Conservatives. If dangerous measures were introduced they ought to put forth their strength to oppose them, but if the measures were satisfactory Conservative feeling would best be shown in welcoming Conservative measures from whatever quarter they might come. The Conservative principle did not pledge its supporters to all the details of measures, but merely to the general policy of maintaining the ancient institutions of the country. In every measure brought before them, true Conservative policy would prompt them to consider only whether it were calculated to maintain those institutions. It did not exclude measures of repair,—the very reverse. In material matters repairs, and large repairs, too, were often found to be necessary for preservation. Changes might be made in political matters—nay, considerable changes—provided they were made on the principle of supporting and strengthening the institutions which our forefathers transmitted to us. There was a great difference between those improvements which tended to give new vigour to the fabric, and those changes which the revolutionists of the day recommended, seeking to subvert the fabric altogether. The chief maxim in public affairs should be the safety of our public institutions; and in adhering to that maxim the danger of yielding to revolutionary schemes and the danger of leaving unreformed old and proved abuses would be equally avoided."

MR. HENLEY, M.P., at a meeting at Thame last week, spoke as follows on foreign politics and the Reform question:—

"We have had some uneasy feelings in reference to the course of conduct likely to be pursued by one of our near neighbours on the Continent. Of course, any feelings of uneasiness with regard to so powerful a Sovereign must naturally be the subject of great anxiety to all of us, for I do not suppose that there is a single man living in this country who would not strongly deprecate a war between England and any other Continental power, and more particularly a war with France. I believe that it is impossible to calculate the amount of mischief and misery which such a war would entail. A vast amount of valuable blood and treasure would necessarily be expended; all the evils and horrors of war would come upon us, and probably after two or three years' hard fighting and scratching, we should leave off just where we began, the only result being the infliction of an immense amount of suffering, the sacrifice of thousands of lives, and the engendering of an ill-feeling between France and England which it would take a long time to remove, and which for years might prevent the two countries from becoming as good friends as they are now. There is another subject upon which a good deal has been said already, and upon which no doubt a good deal will be said hereafter. I allude to the supposed necessity for making some change in the present system of the representation of the country in Parliament. Now with respect to this question, my own opinion is that the main body of the people in this country are very well contented to leave things as they are at present. At all events, if they are to be altered at all, what the people at large naturally desire to see is that any alteration should be of such a nature as to lead to a reasonable hope that it would produce a really substantial amendment of the condition of all classes of the population. Above all, due care ought to be taken that in any projected alteration of the existing state of things no mischief should arise in consequence of rash and reckless innovations. I believe that the feeling I have expressed upon this point is not only the feeling of the great majority of the well-instructed and well-informed classes of the people, but the feelings of the majority of the people at large, and it is a feeling in which I candidly confess that I perfectly concur. When I was a young man I can assure you that I was never very fond of putting my foot forward unless I was perfectly well aware of the nature of the ground upon which I was about to place it; and now that I have grown older, and do not find it so easy perhaps as it used to be to stand upon one leg, I am still less desirous of lifting my foot and shifting my position unless I know very well in what direction I am about to advance. At the same time, although I avow these sentiments, I say also that where a real reform is to be effected I will never be backward in advocating it. Either in reference to the conduct of our own county business, or while taking part in the transaction of the public business of the country, I shall never shrink, so long as I occupy the honourable position in which you have placed me, from giving my best attention to the consideration of the true merits of any proposed change, and if any person can show me that there is a reasonable prospect of such a change doing good to the great masses of the population, not only shall I be ready to adopt it, but to give it my strongest advocacy. But change is not always reform. I never have been, and if I am to give you a candid expression of my opinion on this matter, I do not think I ever shall be ready and willing to adopt a proposition for a change in the existing order of things simply because it is a change. I do not say that the present system is perfect, for undoubtedly some evils may exist in it: but what I say is this—that it is far better to endure an evil the nature and extent of which is known than to jump into another of which we know nothing."

COLONEL NORTH, M.P., at a meeting at Banbury, made the following remarks on Mr. Bright's recent speech at Huddersfield:—

"The greater portion of the speech in question was purely political; but there were some passages in it in reference to the management and discipline of the army which ought not to be allowed to pass by without notice. If at any other time the remarks of Mr. Bright would admit of palliation they were most unfair and improper at a moment when from day to day it was impossible to say whether every arm in England might not be called upon to stand forward in the defence of the country. With regard to Mr. Bright himself he would simply repeat an observation which he heard Mr. Roebuck make in the House of Commons,—namely, that although Mr. Bright when upon his own dunghill at Birmingham roared like a lion, when in the House of Commons he was as mild and gentle as a sucking dove. Mr. Bright, in his speech at Huddersfield, said that Parliament had no control over the 12,000,000*l.* which were expended by the Horse Guards, and that it was the universal opinion, confirmed by every fact that came to his knowledge, that the Horse Guards management of that 12,000,000*l.* and of the vast forces under its direction was a management where interest and jobbery reigned supreme. Now no man knew better than Mr. Bright that the Commander-in-Chief, the Adjutant-General, and the Quartermaster-General who constituted the Horse Guards had no power over the 12,000,000*l.* which he accused them of expending. The sole person who had authority over the money was the Secretary of State for War. It so happened that the last Secretary for War was a soldier, but generally speaking he was a man who knew nothing of a soldier's duties, and could not tell whether a soldier wore his pouch over the right shoulder or the left. With regard to the control of the army, the direction of the forces devolved upon the Duke of Cambridge, and he believed that there was not a man in the country who had more at heart the interest of the service, or who was more thoroughly acquainted with the duties of a soldier, from those of the commander-in-chief down to those of a lance-corporal, and that there was not a man in England except Mr. Bright who would presume to say that the management of his Royal Highness was a management 'where interest and jobbery reigned supreme.' As to the case of the boy whose enlistment had been so minutely described by Mr. Bright, he (Col. North) had made some inquiry respecting it, from which he found that the boy went to a sergeant of the 3d Regiment and offered to enlist. No conversation took place, but he received the shilling, was taken before the surgeon, who passed him to the officer superintending the recruiting district, and he ultimately joined the regiment. The day after the enlistment the father and mother of the lad abused the sergeant for enlisting him, but never asserted for a moment that he was a boy only 14 years of age. The testimony of the military surgeon who inspected him was that his height was 5 feet 4½ inches, his weight 120 lbs., and that he measured 32 inches round the chest; so that, at all events, he must have been a most precocious boy of 14. The Commander-in-Chief could have had no interest in detaining the recruit, except as the guardian of the public interests. With regard to the term 'unmitigated scoundrels,' he could only say that if Mr. Bright referred to the non-commissioned officers of the army they were no more unmitigated scoundrels than he was an unmitigated scoundrel himself. Their respectability as a class, their devotion to their sovereign, and their gallantry upon all occasions, had secured for them the respect and esteem of the whole country. No regiment could exist without its non-commissioned officers, and instead of being 'unmitigated scoundrels' they formed one of the most efficient branches of the service. Adverting to Mr. Bright's remarks on the recent flogging case at Woolwich, he said that the general who commanded at Woolwich was Sir Richard Dacres, a most humane man, and certainly one who could not be accused of unnecessary harshness. The recruit enlisted on the 5th of March, 1859, and absented himself from the regiment on the 23d for three days. He was tried for the offence, and being a young recruit, was sentenced to a moderate punishment; but on March 31 he deserted again, and was not brought back for some months. He was again tried and sentenced to receive 50 lashes and to be imprisoned for 84 days, but from feelings of humanity Sir R. Dacres remitted the imprisonment. The man on being taken down from the halberds after receiving his punishment, to show his contempt of the authorities, began to crow like a cock, and the moment he came out of the hospital he deserted for a third time. It was for that third offence that he had been recently flogged, and every one of the military surgeons who had examined him declared that the statement respecting the boils on his back was false. The punishment of flogging for desertion in the army had only been lately sanctioned by Parliament in the Mutiny Act, and it was absolutely necessary, because during last year alone there were no less than 11,000 desertions, and it must be borne in mind that every soldier cost the country for his kit and his bounty alone 6*l.* 18*s.*, independently of which a large expense was incurred in drill. With regard to the punishment of flogging he had no hesitation in saying that it was a degrading punishment, but it was intended to be a degrading one. No doubt it was a severe punishment, and he himself had seen both officers and men faint while it was being inflicted; and if Mr. Bright or any other man would provide an effectual substitute he had no doubt the whole army would be glad to receive it. As to the opinions of Mr. Bright with regard to the officers of the army, the officers of the army cared very little for anything he might say."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—The adjourned inquest at Weymouth was resumed on Saturday, when Mr. Galloway of the Board of Trade, Mr. Scott Russell, and several engineers connected with the vessel and the machinery, were examined at great length. A great portion of the evidence bore upon the question whether the makers of the engines or the engineers of the vessel had charge of them at the time of the accident—a question of interest to the company as well as the contractors, inasmuch as it involves the question of who is to sustain the loss. The engineers of the vessel stated that they had orders not to take charge till the ship arrived at Portland, while Mr. Scott Russell and his assistants asserted that their responsibility ceased when the ship left the river, and that they never gave any order relating to the working of the engines, or had them under their control. Mr. Dickson, the foreman of Mr. Russell, admitted, however that he had fixed the cock in the tube, and supposed that it was by his directions that it was left so. Another adjournment then took place to Monday, when the foreman of the jury said that the inquiry was drifting from an inquest into a lawsuit, and therefore he hoped that the coroner would place no evidence before the court which did not entirely and exclusively concern the cause of the accident. It was entirely beside the question as to what was the contract between the directors of the company and Mr. Scott Russell. The Coroner said that he did not consider the only question before the jury was what was the cause of the accident. It was also their duty to discover if possible who was the cause of it, and therefore all evidence which tended to show who was in charge of the engines was certainly to the point. Mr. Jackson, M.P., deputy chairman of the company, was then examined, and distinctly stated that Mr. Russell's contract was not completed, and that it was always understood that the contractors who constructed the engines would be in charge of them during the trial trip. Mr. Arnott, chief engineer of the paddle engines, and Mr. M'Farlane, chief engineer of the auxiliaries, deposed that the cocks in both the funnels were open when the vessel left Portsmouth, but any one could open the door which led to them. Capt. Harrison, the commander of the vessel, stated that Mr. Russell was in charge of the paddle engines, as that Mr. Brunel had informed him that he would not accept the engines unless they worked faster on the trial trip than they had done in the river. Both screw and paddle-engines were at that moment the property of the contractors, and had not been accepted by the company. After the vessel left the Nore, he had in conjunction with the pilot, asked Mr. Russell to have the paddles faster, as the screw was overrunning them, but Mr. Russell did not do so, and did not refer him to any one else as being in charge of the paddles. The coroner then proceeded to sum up to the following effect:—

The questions for the consideration of the jury were, first, as to the cause of death; secondly, to what that cause was attributable; and, thirdly, who was to blame? They had it in evidence that both the funnel casings were alike air-tight against the escape of steam, and it seemed marvellous now was that the second did not also explode, when it was more than probable that the immense vessel, with all its passengers, would have been buried in the sea. The evidence which had been set before them and on which they had to decide was unfortunately, of the most contradictory character as to the person or persons really responsible for the charge of the paddle engines. It had been positively sworn to by Dickson and M'Farlane that they had both examined the cocks on Tuesday before sailing, and had found and left them open. That this was so he could hardly believe it possible that any human being could be such a monster as to close them wilfully, and knowing the dreadful consequences which would be sure to ensue from such an act. He must leave it entirely to the consideration of the jury to settle the disputed point whether Mr. Scott Russell's assistants, Mr. Dickson and Mr. Arnott, or Mr. M'Lennan, the engineer of the vessel, were responsible for the proper management of the machinery. It certainly appeared most astonishing to him that the company should have started their vessel on her trip without coming to some definite terms as to who was really in charge of the engines. Mr Scott Russell has declared most emphatically that his contract was completed on the 6th of August, before the vessel sailed, that he had nothing whatever to do with the crew, and this evidence was borne out by the testimony of those who had formerly been in his employ. On the other hand, they had the strongest evidence that his assistant Mr. Dickson did interfere with the working of the engines, and also that Mr. Scott Russell gave directions for their management from the bridge. The whole cause of the accident was evidently due to neglect on the part of some one, and he thought that undoubtedly there was sufficient evidence before them to subject to justify their sending the matter before another tribunal for further investigation. The law of the case was clear, that if any person in the discharge of his proper and lawful duties did them in such a manner as would endanger the lives of others, that, in the eye of the law, would justify a charge of manslaughter. Mr. Scott Russell had given it in evidence that he did not know that the cock was there at all, and so far, certainly, there was not enough to justify a charge of manslaughter against that gentleman. But Mr. Dickson did know it, and not only said so, but went still further, and admitted that he left it there without a thought. There was not sufficient, he repeated, in the evidence to ground any charge against Mr. Scott Russell himself, but there was, he thought, quite sufficient to justify the jury in coming to the conclusion that Mr. Dickson had acted carelessly and thoughtlessly in not attending to the condition of the cocks when he knew they were there. Mr. Galloway and all the other witnesses had proved that there was no use whatever in having the stand cocks in such a place, and that they were, on the contrary, a constant source of danger. Mr. Arnott, it appeared, also knew of the cocks, and he was bound to examine them from day to day, and he therefore, the coroner thought, was almost fully as culpable as Mr. Dickson. It was really a great source of regret that they could not have the evidence of Mr. Brunel—who could, if he were living, at once have thrown a light upon the question of who was in charge of the engines. The jury had now to solve the difficulty for themselves, and upon the most contradictory evidence. The company, he thought, were undoubtedly not free from blame in this matter, in not using the foresight they should have done, in ascertaining beyond all doubt who was to be held responsible for the proper management of their machinery. The question for the jury, however, was, who put the cock in the pipe, and who, being in charge of the engines, was answerable for seeing that it was open. In conclusion, he expressed the high sense he entertained of the value of the assistance which had been given in the course of the proceedings by Captain Robertson, R.N., the Surveyor-General of the Board of Trade.

The jury then retired, and after an absence of more than two hours returned into court with the following special verdict:—

"We find that the deceased came to their deaths from injuries received from steam, hot air, and water, in consequence of the bursting of the jacket attached to the foremost funnel of the Great Eastern steamer; and that the said bursting was occasioned by the closing of a tap connected with the syphon attached to the said jacket, in conjunction with the shutting off the feed from the water-casing to the boilers; but there is no evidence before the jury to show by what person or persons the said tap was shut off, and the jury further express their opinion that taps are highly dangerous when placed in such positions, and that sufficient caution was not used by the engineers. We, however, return a verdict of Accidental Death."

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE.—The executive committee of the Master Builders had another meeting on Tuesday, but they sat, as usual, with closed doors, and nothing is known of their proceedings beyond the fact that the returns presented to them from 30 master builders who strictly adhere to the declaration gave 4242 as the aggregate number of men in their employ. It is said that in addition to this number at least 800 men have gone to work with other members of the association who are carrying out the declaration. On the other hand it appears from the number of recipients of the dividend at the Paviours' Arms on Monday, that there were then nearly 7000 men refusing to work under the conditions of the declaration. On Tuesday night a meeting of delegates from most of the metropolitan trade societies sympathising with the men on strike, was held at Shaftesbury Hall, Aldersgate Street, at which the sum of 292*l.* odd was paid down in aid of the strike. The whole amount contributed to their support from working men in the metropolis and the country during the lock-out, is nearly 3000*l.*, exclusive of the far greater sum in the aggregate which they have received from their own trade societies. Since however the masters have opened their shops, several cases of intimidation have taken place, and the magistrates have been obliged to inflict fines and intimate to the men on strike that they will take every necessary measure to enforce the law. Among other acts of intimidation, a letter purporting to come from the Trades Conference, at the Paviours' Arms, has been sent out giving notice that no lock-outs should resume work without the sanction of the Conference, and publicans who have refused to give contributions in aid of the men on strike have been told that unless they contributed they would be "spotted;" in other words, that measures would be taken to effect their ruin.

HARROW SCHOOL.—The Rev. Dr. Vaughan has addressed a circular to the parents of boys now at Harrow announcing his intention to resign the Head Mastership at the end of the present term, which will complete his 15th year of office.

THE NEW REFORM MOVEMENT.—Mr. Bright, M.P., had a lengthened interview on Saturday with the Council of the Liverpool Financial Reform Association, respecting the agitation which they are about to commence for the abolition of the Customs' duties on 439 articles producing a revenue of only 750,000*l.* They argue that the duties producing so small a portion of the revenue are not worth the trouble and cost of collection, while they tend to impede the operations of commerce. They intend to make special efforts for the total repeal of the duties on tea, coffee, and sugar, on the ground that they are absolute necessaries for the poor, and that their total abolition is only second in importance to the question of the corn laws. The cheaper those three articles are obtainable, the greater, they argue, will be the sobriety of the nation. If the Chancellor of the Exchequer cannot do without the revenue produced by those duties, it is suggested that a tax on property would meet the difficulty, so that the rich may contribute instead of the poor. They intend opening their campaign by a grand demonstration, to take place early in November at Liverpool. Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright have promised to attend and take part in the proceedings. The agitation, as already stated, is to be carried on vigorously during the winter months by public meetings throughout the country. The war-cry of the campaign is to be "An untaxed breakfast and tea table for the working classes;" the argument being that the time is come when there should be untaxed tea and coffee as well as untaxed bread.

THE SOUTHERN MAIN DRAINAGE.—Preparations are making for the construction of the outfall sewer reservoir, pumping engines, &c., at Crossness, opposite Dagenham Reach. The works will commence at North Pole Lane or Norman's Road, in the Greenwich Road, and will extend eastward under and along Greenwich Road, London Street, Romney and Trafalgar Roads, Greenwich and Woolwich Lower Roads, and Albion Street under the town of Woolwich, thence passing under and along the Plumstead Road, through the Arsenal at Woolwich, to Griffin Manorway, where they will cross the Plumstead and Erith marshes, and proceed to their termination on the bank of the river below Crossness, at a point adjacent to the Artillery practice grounds opposite Dagenham Reach on the north bank of the river. The reservoir and pumping station with the necessary engines and machinery will be constructed and erected on land in the occupation of Mr. Thomas Flint. The ground required will be 17a. 2r. 33p., which the Metropolitan Board of Works under the Act intend to purchase of Sir Richard Tufton, the owner. Two air shafts will be sunk in connection with the line of sewerage—one in Sun Street, and the other in Powis Street, Woolwich.

LONDON MECHANICS INSTITUTE.—Among the late contributors to the fund to relieve the trustees and purchase the lease of the buildings of this Institution are the names of the Duke of Cleveland, the Marquis of Breadalbane, and Lord Cranworth. Lady Murray, widow of the late Lord Murray (Lord of Session), whose example was noticed at the time, has sent 50*l.*; Miss Burdett Coutts has contributed 100*l.*; and the Corporation of London has voted 100 guineas for the purchase of the lease.

NEW BARRACKS FOR RECRUITS.—Extensive barracks calculated to accommodate several hundred men have just been built as a private speculation in Gardner's Lane, Westminster. They are intended for the numerous recruits continually enlisted in the metropolis, as well as for those arriving from the provinces to join the head-quarters of their respective regiments, the speculator undertaking to supply a bed and the other necessary requirements for the sum of 4*d.* each man, as allowed by Government. The establishment of this rendezvous has received the approval of the authorities, as it will considerably reduce the number of billets on innkeepers, and lessen the opportunities for desertion that occur between intermediate and final approval.

NEW WESTMINSTER BRIDGE.—The removal of the facings of the piers of the old bridge on the lower or eastern side is now in progress preparatory to the demolition of the entire structure. Within the last few weeks all the arches of the upper section of the bridge, with the exception of that next the Middlesex shore, have been turned, and a great portion of the permanent way has been laid down. It is now expected that the first half of the new bridge will be ready to open for public traffic early next spring, when the old bridge will be at once removed and the construction of the other portion of the new bridge proceeded with.

REVISION OF THE PRAYER BOOK.—Lord Ebury has addressed the following letter to the churchwardens of the metropolis:—

"Gentlemen,—You may perhaps be aware that it is my intention next year to renew a motion in the House of Peers, which I made last year, but did not then press to a division, for the purpose of inducing that House to address the Queen, praying her Majesty to appoint a Royal Commission to revise the Book of Common Prayer, with the object of seeing whether it can be made more profitable than it now is for the religious edification and the instruction of the people. The Bishop of London has stated that, in his belief, the greatest difficulty in the way of any, even the slightest alteration in our services, will be the opposition that will be made to any such proposition by the laity. I am unable to say whether this opinion is well founded or not, but it is of the greatest consequence to me that I should know it before I again submit this motion to the House. I shall therefore esteem it a great favour if you, who must be considered as the representatives of the laity in the most important portion of the most important diocess in England, will inform me at your early convenience whether, within your knowledge, they may be considered unfavourable to such a measure. I take the liberty of sending herewith some documents, showing various propositions and expressions of opinion concerning liturgical revision, which you may like to be acquainted with; but my principal—indeed, only present—object is to obtain, if I can, something like an estimate of lay feeling in the metropolis in reference to the repugnance to any alteration which they are supposed to entertain. I have, &c.,

"EBURY."

ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.—On Sunday last before the commencement of morning service an announcement was issued by the churchwardens, and distributed among the congregation, stating that the rector, on the application of the churchwardens, had agreed to accept the bishop's mediation, and requested the parishioners not to interrupt the services in any way during the progress of the arbitration. The morning service was performed by the curate of the parish, who wore the ordinary vestments. The afternoon and evening services were noisy as usual, but not to the same extent as on previous Sundays. The Bishop of London has ordered the church to be closed, except for the celebration of marriages, &c., until the result of his mediation is announced.

EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR AT STEPNEY.—On Saturday an inquest was opened at Mile End to discover the causes which led to the death of a male child aged three weeks, whose body has been exhumed by order of the coroner, acting under instructions from the Secretary of State. It appears that early in August last the Bishop of London received two letters signed by "A Parishioner," which alleged that the Rev. J. Bonwell, Rector of St. Philip's Church, Stepney, had kept a young lady in an apartment in the school house adjoining the church, which young lady was there delivered of a male child on the 11th of August last. It was also stated that the mother and child had suddenly left the house, giving rise to suspicions of foul play as regarded the infant. The Bishop on receipt of these letters placed the matter before the authorities in Scotland Yard, who immediately commissioned Inspector Whicher to investigate the case. From the inquiries which he made Inspector Whicher ascertained that the rector was a married man residing in Thornhill Square, where his wife has a boarding school or college for young ladies, and that he has for some time temporarily occupied or used the master's apartments of the boys' school in consequence of the latter having been closed. When at Newport, Monmouthshire, some months ago, doing duty for Archdeacon Williams, he was introduced to Miss Yorath, the sister of a respectable medical practitioner in that town, to whom he represented himself to be a widower. She subsequently left her home under the plea of taking a situation as a governess, and lived with the rector at Southend; they were afterwards traced to London, and had been seen to enter the school-house at Stepney on the night of the 11th ult. She was there delivered of the deceased child by Dr. Godfrey, of Finsbury Square, whose assistant procured her a nurse. On the 15th of the same month the mother and child removed to the Sussex Hotel, Duke Street, Southwark, where the rector engaged apartments for her. On the 31 inst. the child died, and the same day the Rev. Mr. Bonwell called on Mr. Ayres, an undertaker, presented him with a certificate of the child's death, and requested him to bury the child as quickly as possible, paying him 18*s.* for his trouble. The child was buried, not in a separate coffin, but was surreptitiously placed in the coffin of an adult, named Elizabeth Haycock, whose funeral Mr. Ayres performed on the 4th inst. at the Tower Hamlets cemetery. On these facts being communicated to the coroner the body of Elizabeth Haycock was exhumed, and the body of the deceased child was found lying with it in the same coffin. After the examination of the secretary of the cemetery and one or two witnesses the inquest was adjourned until next week, in order to collect the necessary witnesses and to await the result of an analysis of the intestines and stomach of the child, which have been forwarded to Dr. Letheby for that purpose.

FIRE IN THE CITY.—On Saturday morning, shortly before 8 o'clock, an extensive fire broke out in Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row, and was not extinguished till the premises of Mr. Champness, coffee-shop keeper, Mr. H. G. Hutchinson, artificial flower maker, Messrs. Reed & Pardon, printers, Mr. George Virtue, publisher, Messrs. Walton & Maberly, booksellers, Messrs. Remnant & Edmonds, bookbinders, and of many others, were considerably damaged by fire and water. The loss will fall on the General, Globe, Sun, and other offices.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's report states that the number of deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, Sept. 17, was 1092. Excluding the deaths by cholera in the corresponding weeks of 1849 and 1854, this does not differ very materially from the average rate near the middle of September in the last 10 years. During the week the births of 802 boys and 805 girls, in all 1607 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1506.

BANGOR.—The religious "revival" is making great progress in Carnarvonshire. Immense religious meetings have been held by the Calvinistic Methodists, one of which commenced at 6 o'clock in the morning, a second at 8, another at 10, one at 2, one at 5, and another at 7. At the meetings which were held in the middle of the day it was estimated that there were about 20,000 present—7000 coming from the isle of Anglesea alone! The vast multitude began to arrive at Bangor as early as 5 o'clock in the morning, having walked by that time a great number of miles, and most of them laden with chairs, stools, and other conveniences for sitting. The meetings throughout were of the most orderly character. The revival is also making rapid progress in the mountainous districts of Waenfawr, Llanrug, Llanberis, and Llanddeiniolon, as also in the Nantlle, Cilgwyn, &c. At Aberdare from 1000 to 1200 members have been added to the Independent denomination alone within the last six months, and at the association meeting in June 10,000 persons were present.

GLOUCESTER.—The 136th musical festival of the three choirs took place in this city last week with great success, the pecuniary results of the meeting exceeding 1032*l.* The festival occupied four days. On the first it opened with full cathedral service, and a sermon by the Rev. Canon Harvey. On the second Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was performed. On the third Beethoven's "Engedi (Mount of Olives)," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and Spohr's "Last Judgment," were given; and on the fourth Handel's "Messiah" closed the oratorios at the cathedral. There were evening concerts at the Shire Hall on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. A ball after Tuesday's concert, and a full dress ball on Friday night brought the festival to a close.

JERSEY.—The South-Western Company's steamer Express was lost on Tuesday morning on her passage from this island to Southampton. In consequence of the illness of the captain the chief mate, Mr. Mabb, took the command, and instead of following the usual course round the Corbière steered the vessel through an inner channel never before attempted and struck on the rocks called the Grunes Houillières. She filled so rapidly that it was necessary to run her ashore as the only means of saving her. Mr. Bursell, from Warwickshire, who had his wife and daughter on board, and two other passengers from Jersey were lost, but the remainder were saved, with the mail for England and the cargo; the latter however in a very damaged state. The mail for Guernsey was lost. The vessel was worth about 7000*l.*, and if totally lost the sum will have to come from the company's insurance fund as they insure their own vessels. The chief mate, Mabb, has been arrested by order of the Queen's Procureur.

LEEDS.—At the last examination of Normington for the murder of Mr. Broughton he made a voluntary statement embodying the main points of the confession which he made last week to the chief constable. In answer to the charge of robbery, he denied that he had robbed Mr. Broughton of his watch, and said that he did not know the other man had robbed him until he did it. The prisoner signed his voluntary statement, and was then committed for trial at the next assizes, charged with the wilful murder and the robbery.

LEWES.—A fatal accident occurred on Wednesday afternoon at the Great Sheep Fair in this town, by which four persons have lost their lives. Messrs. Cheale & Sons, of Southover, were exhibiting a four-horse engine, manufactured by Hensman, of Woburn, and was preparing to work a chaff-cutting machine, when the boiler suddenly exploded. The engine rose from the ground amidst a cloud of steam and smoke, ashes and water, and dashed a distance of above 30 yards in the direction of the sheep pens, killed the son of Mr. Hilder, of Horsted Keynes, and a colt which he was exhibiting for sale, and finally alighted in a corner of a pen of sheep, two of which were killed and others injured. Alarmed by the noise, a crowd of persons from all quarters of the fair rushed to the spot, when John Gold, the engineer, was found lying near the engine quite dead; two labourers, called Landport and Upton, were also killed, and others were seriously injured. One man was removed to the Brighton Hospital, where he is said to have since died. The inquest was opened on Thursday and adjourned.

NEWBURY.—The British Archæological Association has just held their 16th annual Congress in this town under the presidency of the Earl of Carnarvon. Numerous papers were read on subjects of local interest, and excursions were made to Reading, Highclere, Welford, Silchester, Wash Common, and other places of historical and antiquarian interest in the neighbourhood. Among the papers read were one by Mr. Henry Godwin disproving the tradition that Donnington Castle ever belonged to Chaucer the poet; and another by Mr. Pettigrew on the death of Amy Robsart at Cumnor in 1560, the object of which was to show that she was not poisoned by order of Dudley, but that her death was the result of accident.

NOTTINGHAM.—A disgraceful piece of vandalism was perpetrated in the Arboretum on Friday night. A statue has recently been erected in the grounds to Mr. Feargus O'Connor, the Chartist leader. On Friday night some persons entered the enclosure and defaced the statue by daubing the face and scroll and the lower limbs with an adhesive black substance. The patches had evidently been hastily applied, and a large earthenware coffee-pot containing the mixture which had been used was found lying on the ground near the pedestal. An attempt was immediately made to remedy the injury by scrubbing it with turpentine and other chemicals, and with considerable difficulty the stains have been removed, and the statue does not appear to have been materially injured. A reward of 50*l.* has been offered by the O'Connor Committee, 20*l.* by the proprietor of the Nottingham Journal, and 5*l.* by the Town Council, for the discovery of the perpetrator of the outrage. The statue in question was inaugurated a short time since, in the presence of a vast concourse of the working classes, Mr. Ernest Jones taking the principal part in the proceedings, and delivering an address describing the services of Mr. O'Connor through a series of years to the working classes. The figure, which is mounted upon a pedestal, is of Derbyshire stone, and measures upwards of 7 feet. It is in the costume of a barrister, and has a brief in the right hand. The monument bears the following inscription:—"Feargus O'Connor, Esq., M.P. This statue was erected by his admirers, 1859."

SHEERNESS.—On Sunday night the stack-yard of the Abbey Farm close to the ancient church of Minster was discovered to be on fire. The flames ran from stack to stack, stables, and barns almost instantaneously, owing to the yard being covered with straw. Horses, cows, pigs, fowls, &c., were all destroyed before help or water could be procured. The commanding officers of the garrison of Sheerness immediately turned out the Forfar and Kincardine and Norfolk Militia Artillery with their engines. The men proceeded at double quick time to the farm, and to the prompt measures taken may be attributed the saving of the Abbey House and the ancient parish church of Minster.

STOURBRIDGE.—George Hackett, late steward to the Earl of Stamford and Warrington at Enville Hall, and James Parish, jun., farmer, his brother-in-law, were charged before the magistrates on Tuesday with committing an extraordinary series of frauds upon Lord Stamford. Parish did not appear, and a warrant has been issued for his apprehension. The solicitor for the prosecution stated that in 1851 the two defendants were appointed assessors and collectors of assessed and income-tax for the parish of Enville, the defendant Hackett being at the same time in the employ of Lord Stamford as steward. Between 1851 and 1859 his lordship had been charged on income and assessed taxes 1355*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* over and above the amount due, the sum paid to the Crown being only the amount actually due, so that this large excess must have been appropriated by the collectors to their own use. The money had been handed to Parish, and the cheques had been signed by Hackett. These frauds were discovered by the new steward on the discharge of Hackett, and the Board of Inland Revenue determined to prosecute. The magistrates, after deliberating 20 minutes, determined to commit Hackett for trial at the next assizes. They consented, however, to accept bail, himself in 500*l.*, and two sureties in 250*l.*

WEYMOUTH.—A three-gun battery, to sweep the entrance of Weymouth harbour, was completed last week; and the Royal Engineers have commenced erecting a 50-gun battery to sweep the entire coast between Weymouth and Portland. This battery when completed will be mounted with the long range Armstrong guns.

THE REVIVAL MOVEMENT.—The Northern Whig exposes a daring case of imposture in connection with this movement in Belfast. The chief actor in the deception is a mill girl named Campbell, who bids fair to rival Johanna Southcote in blasphemy, and the famed Barney Cavanagh in hypocrisy. According to the story current this girl "was revived," or "struck," about six weeks since, when she became blind and dumb. It was then announced that she had seen a heavenly vision, after which the name of the Redeemer was miraculously imprinted upon her breast and arm. Thousands of people visited her, and the excitement was evidently on the increase, when the Rev. Mr. Hall and the Rev. Mr. Breakey, Presbyterian ministers, investigated the case and ascertained that the marks were produced by the common blue bag. Five other cases have since been investigated at Lisburn, with the same results. In connection with these impostures the local papers notice the alarming increase of lunacy consequent upon the prevailing religious excitement. During the last three months the number of persons committed to the Belfast gaol as "dangerous lunatics" was 16, being 10 above the average of last year. Of this number no less than 12 were labouring under religious delusions of a recent date; and it is said that since the commencement of the revival movement there have been lodged in the Belfast Asylum no fewer than 22 cases of insanity from Larne and that neighbourhood alone.

NARROW ESCAPE OF LORD LIMERICK.—A few days since Lord Limerick narrowly escaped severe injury from an explosion of gas. Some alterations to the gas-fittings were in progress in his house near Limerick, and by some carelessness the lower portion of the dwelling, including the servants' hall, became filled with gas. A person holding a lighted candle at this time entered the room, when an explosion took place which shook the entire edifice, reducing the whole of the furniture in the servants' kitchen and adjoining room to pieces, and causing considerable damage in other portions of the building. Several of the servants received slight burns and were removed to the hospital, but fortunately no life was lost. The library, which is directly over the room where the explosion originated, and which Lord Limerick himself had only left a few minutes before, was also damaged.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—It has been resolved to hold the next meeting at Oxford under the presidency of Lord Wrottesley, and to give a preference to the claims of Manchester for the succeeding year.

THE EDINBURGH ANNUITY TAX.—Mr. Brown, the remaining martyr of the annuity tax, was released from prison last week by means of a subscription raised by the Lothian Road United Presbyterian Church, of which he is a member. It is said that his health, which was very delicate before his incarceration, has become so impaired by the excitement and confinement as to necessitate his removal to the Bridge of Allan.

THE "LADLE" IN CRATHIE CHURCH.—The northern journals relate the following incident, which is said to have occurred in the church of Crathie on Sunday last at the conclusion of the service:—"On the announcement from the pulpit of a collection then to be made by the assembled congregation in behalf of the Jewish Mission, the elders proceeded in the usual manner to uplift the contributions for that object, armed with the ladles, or wooden boxes, to which are attached handles of 7 or 8 feet long. These, being diligently pushed along in front of the occupants of each pew, were soon filled and carried off, leaving one collector in the section of the gallery in which was situated the Royal pew, occupied by her Majesty and suite. The ladle was in due course passed along the Royal pew, and, the official striving to reach its farther end and leaning on the door, the sneck, suddenly yielding to his weight, [illegible] way, and capsized him head-foremost among the party, couping the boxful of bawbees into the lap of some of the ladies in attendance. This incident was observed and heard by the majority of the congregation who had difficulty in restraining their merriment at the circumstance and the confusion of face manifested by the luckless office-bearer, the feeling being evidently participated in by the august lady herself who witnessed the occurrence."

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—Bigamy.—William Dawson Marshall, 31, a meagre insignificant looking person with a moustache on the upper lip, was indicted for feloniously marrying Jane Hayes, his wife being still alive. It was proved that in July, 1858, the prisoner was married at Paddington Church to Sophia Frost Dawson, and upon the 28th of last at St. George's, Hanover Square, to Jane Hayes. It appeared from the evidence that Mrs. Hayes, the second wife, was a widow, and that she first met the prisoner at St. James's Hall, at one of Barnum's entertainments, where he represented himself as the Hon. Captain William Sloper Harrison, a captain in the army and the son of Lord Denbigh, 'shipowner;" made fierce love to her, said he would kill her or himself unless she consented to have him, and offered with his hand a carriage, an estate at Croydon, and 2000*l.* The lady believing his representations gave her consent, and they were married at that aristocratic church, St. George's, Hanover Square, on the 28th of June. After the two months had passed over, there was no sign of the carriage, nor the slightest appearance of the 2000*l.* or the estate at Croydon, or any of the presents lavishly promised before the commencement of the honeymoon. On the contrary, the hon. captain commenced a course distasteful to his wife, of going out fashionably dressed in clothes purchased at her expense, stopping out all nights together, and coming home in garments materially different in texture and appearance to those he wore when he left home, and, in addition to all, making use of threats of a disagreeable character. It appeared also that the first wife married the prisoner without consulting her friends, and after spending a great deal of her money, he soon deserted her in a most heartless manner. He represented himself to be a captain in the army, who had seen great service, and possessed six medals received for distinguished services rendered his country, and was possessed of considerable property, but unfortunately lost much of it in speculation. The result of the police however into the history of the prisoner showed that his real name was Sloper, and not Marshall or Harrison, and that he was the illegitimate child of a female who subsequently married a man named Marshall, who was in the bottles, and was engaged in bottling ale and beer for the people. After hearing the evidence the prisoner's counsel he could not resist a verdict of guilty, but urged in mitigation of the sentence that the prosecutrix had not suffered any serious wrong. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. The prisoner, in a crying tone, said he had been drawn into the marriage; that the prosecutrix took him to her house and would not let him go, and drew him into the marriage. The prosecutrix said there was no truth in what the prisoner had stated. The police constable said the prisoner at the time of both marriages lived with a woman. The Commissioner said the case was a very bad one. He did not believe the imputation upon Mrs. Hayes, and should sentence the prisoner to ten years' penal servitude.

Railways.

THE ANDOVER AND REDBRIDGE.—On Tuesday Lord Palmerston cut the first sod of this new line at Romsey in the presence of a numerous assemblage of the landowners of the district and others interested in the undertaking. The line—which is intended ultimately to effect a communication between Southampton and the coalfields of South Wales and the manufacturing districts of the North, by means of the Great Western system—is formed by the conversion of the old Andover canal into a railway; for the canal having been purchased, and the water drained off, it is along its line, for the most part, that the rails will be laid. Commencing near the head of the Southampton-water at Redbridge, which is about three miles from Southampton, and running up the valley of the Test it proceeds in a direction nearly due north, through Romsey, King's Sombourn, Stockbridge, and the Chatfords, to Andover, where, for the present, it terminates. It is proposed hereafter to effect the ultimate connection of Southampton with the Great Western line by short extensions from each of the present termini; that from Andover, of about 14 miles in length, to join the proposed Berks and Hants extension near Pewsey, and that from Redbridge, of about three miles, to Southampton. The proceedings were opened by a short speech from the chairman of the company, describing the purposes of the line, and concluding with a request to Lord Palmerston to cut the first sod. His lordship accordingly took spade in hand, and, with a dexterity which gained him great commendation, cast three or four shovelsfull of earth into a handsome barrow of mahogany provided for the occasion, then amid loud cheers wheeled it along a plank some dozen yards in length, emptied it, and walked back between the shafts with all the air of a practised "navvy." A salute of 14 guns announced this practical commencement of the undertaking. Lord Palmerston then said:—

"I congratulate you all on the commencement of an undertaking which will not only be beneficial to this district, but also to other parts of the United Kingdom. You all know that a scheme for connecting Southampton with Liverpool was set on foot so long ago as 1846. It failed then, and remained dormant for some time, but in 1857 it was again revived, failed again, but the energy and determination of those who advocated it were not damped by repeated failures, and we have now the satisfaction of being actually at the commencement of the practical part of the work, and I sincerely trust that they will meet with no impediment in its completion. I have no doubt that a much more extensive future [illegible] us, and that we shall see this line forming an important link in the communication between Southampton and [illegible] tricts of the country. It is needless to point out the [illegible] advantages of Southampton for the purposes of [illegible] between England and other parts of the globe. It [illegible] riverations of mankind, I believe, the safest port that can be found in the world. The whole of the Southampton river may be said to be one great dock, free from rocks or any of the dangers which beset other ports, and needing no artificial means of protection. It is situate midway between the two extremities of the south coast of England. It is in a position favourable for maritime communication with the Indies on the one hand and with the other part of the world with which the Atlantic communicates on the other. It possesses a rapid communication with London, and now you propose by this line to connect it with the great manufacturing districts, and with the coal mines of South Wales."

In a subsequent speech acknowledging the toast of his health, his lordship made the following remarks on the railway system:—

"Of all the improvements in modern times the introduction of railways is perhaps the one which has done most for the prosperity of this country, and I may say of all countries in which they have been established. If we look at the wonderful augmentation which has taken place in this country within the last 20 years it must strike us that it has sprung in a great measure from the multiplication of the means of communication. In business we all know time is worth money, and if it be true with regard to money that a penny saved is a penny got, the days and weeks saved by the introduction of railway accommodation must be worth to the manufacturing and commercial interests vast annual sums of money. It therefore gives me the greatest pleasure—whether in my individual and local character or as a member of the Government—to assist at meetings the object of which is to try the introduction of lines of railway communication, such as this. One of the most remarkable features of the political history of England is the manner in which private enterprise accomplishes results which in other countries require the aid and assistance of Government. We admire the remains of the works of the Romans, and I venture to assert that no works remain to us monumental of the greatness and capacity of that nation which can for a moment compare with the works erected by private enterprise in different parts of this country for commercial purposes. Long may that spirit of enterprise animate the people of this country, and long may it not only maintain the eminence it possessed by this country, but also lay the foundation for the rapid increase of that wealth and the augmentation of our national prosperity. I cannot say, speaking from general impression, what may be the amount of capital now invested in railway enterprise. We all know that the capital represented by the national debt—though it has been very lightly touched not long ago by one who is well able to judge of the proportion between the resources and the wants of the country—would have been deemed two centuries ago as a fabulous sum to be equalled only by the stories in the Arabian Nights, but I believe I should not be far wrong if I were to say that the amount of private capital invested in the different railways cannot be much short of half the amount of the national debt—a singular and remarkable proof of the progressively increasing resources of the country and of the spirit of enterprise by which individuals have been animated to undertake works which conduce not only to their own immediate interests but to the foundation really of great national advantage. There is another observation which I think must strike every one—one rather of a deeper nature, but one not less founded in truth. We are told by those who instruct us in moral and religious teaching that the calamities and misfortunes which sometimes befall either nations or men are intended for our permanent advantage, and if duly used and duly reflected on ought to be felt to be only administrations of that moral government by which Providence regulates the affairs of mankind. But there is also a like truth in regard to the laws which regulate the material globe. A careful attention to those laws and a correct application of them tend as much to the permanent improvement of mankind as a submission to the moral influences contributes to welfare in a different manner. And it has been on the civilisation of the age in which we live. That expansive and explosive force which in its unregulated operation lays waste districts by the overflowing of a volcano, or spreads desolation over cities and towns by an earthquake when governed and regulated by the scientific appliances of man has been converted into your obedient slave, transports you from place to place by land throughout the whole continent of Europe, and applied to your navigation carries you safely and rapidly from one end of the globe to the other. So it is also with the thunderbolt, that natural element which inspires terror into the ignorant—which, when acting simply by the casual application of the laws of nature, is productive of death and destruction, yet guided and mastered by the science of the present time becomes your servant, carries your ideas instantaneously from point to point, establishes rapid conversation and communication between all the different parts of the globe, and now we hope in a very short time—before many months indeed have elapsed—that we shall communicate as rapidly between London and Calcutta as we have hitherto communicated between one end of the smallest village and the other. We ought then to be proud of the age in which we live—we ought to be proud to think that the human intellect has arrived at that amount of scientific attainment that we are able to understand those great laws which regulate the material world, and that, by the proper application of that which in its original operation may appear to be simply an element of destruction, we have managed to convert into purposes most useful in the daily life of man and powers which Providence has created, not for purposes of destruction, but in order that the mind of man, by the progressive development of science, might adapt them to the uses of civilised life."

THE COLLISION ON THE GREAT WESTERN.—The coroner's inquest on the guard killed by the late fatal collision at the Slough station has ended in a verdict of "Homicide by misadventure," to which the jury added the following remarks:—"That, in consequence of the conflicting evidence respecting the signal lights, we are unable to record any other verdict; and we think the guard to blame for starting the train three minutes before time without the authority of a proper person at Reading."

Obituary.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR JAMES STEPHEN, K.C.B., Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge, and formerly Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, died at Coblentz on the 14th inst., in his 73rd year. He was the son of James Stephen, Esq., M.P., Master in Chancery, well known for his writings and exertions in the cause of colonial slavery, and was born about the year 1787. He was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1812. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1811, and in 1813 became counsel of the Colonial department, an office which he held for 11 years. He then retired from the bar, and became counsel to the Colonial Department and Board of Trade. He held these offices jointly for 10 years, after which he became Assistant Under-Secretary for the Colonies, and was subsequently promoted to the permanent Under-Secretaryship. He remained in the Colonial Office for 14 years, and on his retirement in 1847 he received the honour of knighthood. He was an extensive contributor to the "Edinburgh Review" on subjects relating to the history of the Church and the development of religious opinions. A collection of these articles was published in two volumes in 1849 under the title of "Essays in Ecclesiastical Biography." In the same year he was appointed, by succeed Professor Smyth, [illegible] Modern History in the University of [illegible]. In 1853 he published "France," and in [illegible] Political Economy [illegible]

[illegible] Bishop of Algoa, and held it for [illegible] years. He succeeded the late Archdeacon Wilberforce in 1845. He became a Vice-Admiral in 1856.

COLONEL WILDMAN, K.H., formerly of the 7th Hussars, died at his residence, Newstead Abbey, near Nottingham, on the 20th inst. He saw a good deal of service in the Peninsular war, and was present with his regiment at the battle of Waterloo. He purchased Newstead Abbey from the Byron family, and thereby became the means of restoring to the public of that thickly-populated district.

PROFESSOR NICHOL, LL.D., Professor of Astronomy in Glasgow University, died on Monday at Glenburnie House, Redhill, [illegible] He first gained public notice on the 27th of May, in the City Hall, Glasgow, when he acted as chairman for M. Kossuth. He was born in 1804, and was the son of a bookseller in Montrose. His first [illegible] was on the [illegible] of that town, when he was only 16 years of age. He afterwards studied for the Church, and was duly licensed as a preacher. Literature and science, however, soon diverted him into a [illegible] He [illegible] Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. In 1838 he published "The Planet Neptune," "The Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies," &c., and by his lectures on the same [illegible] he was the first to make the public familiar with what is called the Nebular Hypothesis.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 19.

The number of Beasts is quite moderate, but the average quality only is fair, and compared with last week's prices are lower. Several lots are unsold. The supply of Sheep is about the same as last week. The trade on the average is not quite so good. Trade is rather better for Calves. From Germany and Holland [illegible] are [illegible] Sheep, and [illegible] Calves from Spain, 120 Beasts from the northern and midland [illegible], and 110 Milch Cows from the home counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 22.

The supply of Beasts is about the same as on [illegible] a large proportion is of inferior quality. The [illegible] dull, and purchasers at Monday's quotations [illegible] are difficult of sale. The number of Sheep is small, as [illegible] is the demand. Prices remain unaltered, [illegible] a clearance cannot be effected. Trade is quiet for good Calves. From Germany and Holland [illegible] are [illegible] Sheep, and [illegible] Calves from Spain, 120 Beasts, from the northern and midland [illegible], and 110 Milch Cows from the home counties.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 19.

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was moderate, and met with a slow sale, fine qualities at an improvement of 1s. per qr., [illegible] at the currency of last Monday was reluctantly complied with. Barley of all descriptions brings last week's prices. New Beans are 1s. cheaper. Peas unaltered in value. For Oats there is a fair sale at a decline of 6d. per qr. upon the value of this day week.

FRIDAY, Sept. 23.

The weather since the 16th has been very boisterous, with heavy S.W. gales, accompanied by much rain. The activity observable in the Wheat trade last week has subsided, and transactions throughout the kingdom have again become limited; an advance of 1s. per qr. in prices, particularly for new, has however been generally established. No great alteration has occurred in the value of spring corn, but in several markets it has been necessary to accept somewhat lower rates for Beans, Peas, and Oats. We observe no alteration in the Flour trade, but rather more money has been obtained in Liverpool, Glasgow, Newcastle, Birmingham, and Manchester. By the latest accounts from Dantzic and Konigsberg purchasers of Wheat had been active at an advance of 3s. per qr. from the lowest quotations. A similar rise has also occurred in Belgium, for which country there have been buyers in Hamburgh at improved rates. The arrivals off the coast from Southern Europe are again liberal this week. The sales include Taganrog Ghirka Wheat at 42s. 3d. to 42s. 6d., and Odessa Ghirka at 41s. per 492 lbs.; Ibrail Maize at 26s. 9d. to 27s. 3d., Salonica at 26s., both per 480 lbs.; Galatz at 28s. 6d. to 29s., Odessa at 28s. 9d., both per 492 lbs.; Odessa Barley at 22s. 1½d., Ibrail at 22s. 7½d.; Odessa Linseed at 46s. per qr. c. f. and i., Taganrog at 45s. 6d. per qr. The arrivals of foreign Oats continue to be large, and of all other grain good. There was a thin attendance at this morning's market, and the little English Wheat on sale was taken at Monday's quotations; in foreign scarcely any transactions occurred, and prices remain the same. Barley, Beans, and Peas are unaltered in value. For Russian Oats there is a fair demand at rather over Monday's prices, but Swedish and Danish are a slow sale and a little cheaper.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Sept. 20.—The arrivals since this day se'nnight are on a very small scale of both Wheat and Flour, fair of Indian Corn, and tolerably large of Russian Oats. From Ireland and coastwise the receipts are light. The exports both foreign and to Ireland are light, coastwise an increased quantity of corn is going forward. Prices continue to show an upward tendency, and since Friday a further slight improvement has been established on both Wheat and Flour. Indian Corn has been eagerly bought up, and all descriptions must be noted fully 6d. per qr. dearer. We had a moderate attendance of the trade at this morning's market, and the advance of 2d. per cental established in Wheat on Friday was firmly maintained, but the demand was not so strong as on that day. Flour had a good sale at 6d. per barrel and sack improvement. Indian Corn attracted a fair share of attention at the advance of 6d. per qr. noted above. New Oats and Oatmeal were again both rather lower. In Egyptian Beans, Peas, and Barley there is no quotable alteration to notice. The market closed steady but without animation.

FRIDAY, Sept. 23.—The grain market dull; Wheat in moderate demand at Tuesday's quotations. Flour more freely pressed. Indian Corn and Beans steady at full rates, but without much business. Oats and Oatmeal a shade easier.

COOL AND REFRESHING BALM.—Among the many luxuries of the present age, none can be entertained possessing the manifold virtues of OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA. If applied to the roots and body of the hair, it imparts the most delightful coolness, with a most agreeable fragrance of perfume. It also at this period of the season prevents the hair from falling off, or if already turning grey, will stop its further progress, and restore it again. Those who really desire to have beautiful hair, either with wave or curl, should use it daily. It is also celebrated for strengthening the hair, freeing it from scurf, and producing new hair, whiskers, and moustaches. Established upwards of 30 years. No imitative wash can equal it. Price 3*s*. 6*d*., 6*s*., and 11*s*. only.—C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 22, Wellington Street North, Strand, W.C.

FINE HEAD OF HAIR.

THE BEARD, WHISKERS, AND MOUSTACHIOS.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL is universally in high repute as the most successful article ever known for the growth, restoration, and improving and beautifying the human hair, proved beyond question by its unprecedented results for more than half a century past, and when every other specific has failed. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey, strengthens weak hair, cleanses it from scurf and dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. Its invaluable properties have obtained the patronage of Royalty and the aristocracy throughout Europe; while its introduction into the nursery of Royalty, and the high esteem in which it is universally held, with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits. Price 3*s*. 6*d*. and 7*s*.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10*s*. 6*d*., and double that size, 21*s*.—CAUTION: on the wrapper of each bottle are the words, ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, &c., in white letters, and their signature, "A. ROWLAND & SONS," in red ink. Sold at 20, Hatton Garden, London, E.C.; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

DR. DE JONGH'S

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL administered with the greatest success in cases of CONSUMPTION, GENERAL DEBILITY, RHEUMATISM, INFANTILE WASTING, AND ALL THE DISORDERS OF CHILDREN ARISING FROM DEFECTIVE NUTRITION, is the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its superior curative effects, unquestionably the most economical of all kinds. Its immeasurable therapeutic superiority over every other variety is attested by innumerable spontaneous testimonials from Physicians and Surgeons of European reputation.

OPINION OF EDWIN LANKESTER, Esq., M.D., F.R.S. Late Lecturer on the Practice of Physic at St. George's Medical School, Superintendent of the Food Collection at the South Kensington Museum, &c.

"I believe that the purity and genuineness of this Oil is secured in its preparation by the personal attention of so good a Chemist and intelligent a Physician as Dr. DE JONGH, who has also written the best medical treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I should deem the Cod Liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medical efficacy."

Sold ONLY in IMPERIAL half pints, 2*s*. 6*d*.; pints, 4*s*. 9*d*.; quarts, 9*s*., capsuled, and labelled with Dr. DE JONGH'S stamp and signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE IS GENUINE, in the principal towns by respectable Chemists,

IN LONDON BY HIS SOLE AGENTS,

ANSAR, HARFORD, AND CO., 77, Strand, W.C.

CAUTION.—Strenuously resist proposed substitutions.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—LIVER COMPLAINTS.—The virtues of these incomparable Pills are fully appreciated in every part of the civilised world. As they act on the general system through the circulation there are few diseases which they cannot cure, but they are especially efficacious in all the disorders of the Liver. For these they are an unfailing remedy. They possess unrivalled potency for good, while they cannot do harm. A child might physic itself with these Pills and without the slightest danger, except from weakness, as would make the most wholesome aliment in the world an evil. By reducing the superfluous bile, regulating its secretion, and giving tone to the stomach, they effect a perfect and permanent cure.

GUTTA PERCHA TUBING FOR WATERING GARDENS

THE GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the following Testimonial from Mr. J. FAIRAH, G[illegible] to HOWELL MIDDLETON JALLAND, Esq., of Holderness House, near Hull.

"I have had 400 feet of your Gutta Percha Tubing, in lengths of 100 feet each, with union joint, in use for the last 12 months for watering these gardens, and I find it to answer better than anything I have ever yet tried. The pressure of the water is very considerable, but this has not the slightest effect on the tubing. I consider this tubing to be a most valuable invention for Gardeners, inasmuch as it enables us to water our gardens in about one half the time, and with one half the labour required."

Manufactured by the Gutta Percha Company, Patentees, 18, Wharf Road, City Road, London, E.C., and sold by their Wholesale Dealers in town and country.

the EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH to found a kingdom in Central Italy for Prince NAPOLEON. It states that such reports do not stand in need of refutation, and that to deprive them of all their value, it is only necessary, without speaking of the engagements entered into at Villafranca, to call to mind the acts and declarations of the EMPEROR NAPOLEON before and since that period. Meanwhile it is reported from Central Italy that Tuscany, Modena, Parma, and the Romagna will shortly hold a convocation of their national assemblies in Florence for the purpose of electing a Regent to conduct the government of the four united States until the annexation to Sardinia be formally sanctioned by European diplomacy.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL on Wednesday delivered a speech at Aberdeen, in which he explained his views on the Italian question for the first time since his accession to office as Foreign Secretary. His lordship said that though HER MAJESTY'S Government could claim no credit for having enabled the Italians to assert their freedom, yet they were bound to say, and had said that against any interference of foreign force to prevent the Italians having their own Government, and conducting their affairs as they liked, they most loudly and solemnly protested. He declared emphatically that England should never under his auspices enter into a Congress unless the rights of the people of Italy to govern themselves without foreign interference were recognised; but at the same time he expressed his firm belief that neither France nor Austria, however she may dislike the continuance of the present state of affairs in Modena and Tuscany, will attempt to coerce the Italians in regard to their choice of a form of Government. "I feel convinced," said the noble lord, "by the language, not of one of those Powers, but of both those Powers, that whatever their opinions may be as to what has taken place, neither Power has any intention to interfere by force with the decision of those peoples. I think it a matter of great importance that it should be so, because that system—which is rather disguised than expressed by the phrase, the balance of power—means that the different States shall be independent, that they shall manage their own concerns, and that no one State should have the preponderance in Europe, or dictate what should be the constitution, or what should be the internal government of the rest."

The Revenue returns for the year and quarter ended the 30th September were made up last evening. The account for the year is said to show a net increase of about 530,000*l.* over the corresponding period of 1857-8, notwithstanding the diminished receipts of more than 2,000,000*l.* from Income Tax. The account for the quarter shows an increase on the principal sources of revenue of nearly 800,000*l.*; though the net result, in consequence of the diminution of the Income Tax, is a decrease of about 30,000*l.* The increase in the Customs is nearly 160,000*l.*; that in the Excise is upwards of 450,000*l.*; that in the Stamps more than 100,000*l.*; and that in the Post Office, 35,000*l.* There is also a slight increase in the Taxes, caused by the growth of the House Tax. On the other hand there is a decrease of about 580,000*l.* in the Income Tax, caused by the decline in the rate of duty.

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Tuesday week the Queen drove out, accompanied by the Princess Alice. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. The Prince of Wales and the Count de Flandres went out shooting. On Wednesday the Queen drove to the Girnoe, accompanied by the Princess Alice, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Arthur. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. The Count de Flandres went out deer-stalking. On Thursday the Queen gave a déjeûner to about 200 members of the General Committee of the British Association. In the afternoon Highland games were performed in the presence of the Queen, who personally presented the prizes to the successful competitors after each game. The Duke of Richmond, General Sabine, Professor Phillips, and Mr. Thompson, of Banchory House, near Aberdeen, arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Friday morning the Queen held a Privy Council. Her Majesty, accompanied by the Princesses Alice and Helena, afterwards drove to Mar Lodge, and honoured the Countess of Fife with a visit. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. The Prince of Wales and the Count de Flandres went out grouse-shooting. The Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Elgin, Professor Phillips, General Sabine, and Mr. Thompson left the Castle. The Count de Flandres took leave of her Majesty and proceeded on a tour in the Highlands. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by the Princesses Alice and Helena, drove to the falls of the Garrbatt. The Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince Arthur, drove to the Abergeldie Woods, which were driven for deer. The Prince of Wales went out deer-stalking. On Sunday the Queen, Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Alice attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie; Dr. Campbell, of King's College, Aberdeen, officiated. On Monday the Queen left the Castle for Altnagussack. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking, and joined her Majesty at Altnagussack in the evening. The Prince of Wales and the Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa made an expedition to the Lynn of the Vat. On Tuesday the Prince of Wales joined the Queen and Prince Consort at Altnagussack.

THE QUEEN'S RETURN JOURNEY.—The Court is expected to leave Balmoral on Thursday, the 13th inst., for Holyrood Palace, where the Queen will pass the night. On the following day her Majesty will honour with her presence the inauguration of the new Glasgow waterworks, which are to supply that city from Loch Katrine. Her Majesty will return to Edinburgh the same evening, and on the following morning will proceed to Penrhyn Castle, Carnarvonshire, on a visit to the Hon. Colonel Douglas Pennant, M.P. On Sunday, the 16th, the Queen will attend Divine service at Bangor Cathedral. On Monday, the 17th, her Majesty will visit the Great Eastern at Holyhead, and will arrive at Windsor Castle in the evening.

THE EX-ROYAL FAMILY OF FRANCE.—The Queen Marie Amélie, the Prince de Joinville, the Count d'Eu, and the Duke d'Alençon have passed through town this week, from the Lake district on their way to Bournemouth. The Count de Paris and the Duc d'Aumale have been on a visit to the Duke of Northumberland, at Alnwick Castle, and Lord Ravensworth, at Eslington Park, and have now rejoined the Duchess d'Aumale and the Prince de Condé at Coniston. The Duke de Nemours has arrived at Turin to thank the King of Sardinia for the attention paid to the Duke de Chartres while making the Italian campaign as sub-lieutenant in a regiment of Sardinian cavalry.

THE GRAND DUCHESS MARIE OF RUSSIA and her daughter arrived at Wilton House near Salisbury on Tuesday from Torquay on a visit to the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert and Mrs. Herbert. The Duke of Cambridge and a large party of nobility were invited to meet her Imperial Highness. On Wednesday the Grand Duchess Marie and daughter, accompanied by the Duke of Cambridge, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert, and most of the visitors, drove over to Broadlands, near Romsey, and took luncheon with Lord and Lady Palmerston.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Monday.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of Wednesday contained the following article:—

"Several foreign papers assert that the solution of the affairs of Italy will be obstructed by the desire which the Emperor has to create in Italy a kingdom for a Prince of his House. These rumours need not be refuted; in order to deprive them of every foundation it suffices, without mentioning the engagements made at Villafranca, to remind the public of the acts and words of the Emperor both before and after that epoch."

The Moniteur of Tuesday contained the following in reference to the press:—

"Under the pretence that the press is not free, several journals direct their attacks against the decree of February, 1852, which go beyond the extreme limits of discussion. Respect for the law is inseparable from the legal exercise of liberty. Against writers who have forgotten this the Government could have made use of the weapons at its command. It did not wish to do so the day after the measure spontaneously granted, which released the periodical press from the consequences of warnings received. The Government, faithful to its principles of moderation, will, nevertheless, not fail in performing the duty which is imposed upon it of making the law respected. It therefore informs the papers frankly that it has decided no longer to tolerate those polemical excesses, which can only be considered as party manœuvres."

It is said that the return of the Emperor from Biarritz has been deferred to the 8th inst. With reference to the late visit of the King of the Belgians to Biarritz, the Patrie states that the Archduke Maximilian is to be appointed Governor of Venetia, and that a Congress for the settlement of Italian affairs is to be held at Brussels, under the presidency of the King of the Belgians. For some time past Prince Napoleon has desired to purchase an estate out of France, and it was said that offers had been made for a property belonging to Lord Normanby. The French journals now state that the Prince has purchased for 720,000fr. a fine estate called the Bergerie, on the banks of the Lake of Geneva. The French frigate Sané, of 450-horse power, launched at Cherbourg in 1847, was lost on the 22d ult. on the Raz de Seins, on her way from Toulon to Brest, but all hands were saved. It is said that 20 ships of the line are now building, or ordered to be built, in the dockyards, 10 of which are to be of the largest size. The Magenta, of which the keel has been laid down at Brest, and which will be the largest ship in the French navy, is one of the former class, and will have a companion ship, to be called the Solferino. The hulls of four of these vessels are to be completed, and the rest are to be launched in 18 months from this time. All these ships are to be steel-plated, and provided with [illegible]. —A few days since as the nurse of M. Hua, one of the judges of the Imperial Court of Paris, was walking with his infant in the gardens of the Tuileries, a well dressed woman accosted the nurse and, saying she was the child's aunt, told her to go home on a trifling errand while she held the baby till her return. As soon as the nurse was out of sight the woman decamped with the child, and all the efforts of the Paris police to trace her were ineffectual. A reward of 10,000 francs was offered by the judge for the restoration of the child, and on Saturday last it was found deserted in the streets of Orleans, the police of which subsequently apprehended the woman who stole it. She said that she is only 17 years of age, and that her object in stealing the child was to make a young gentleman of honourable family with whom she had become intimate in Paris believe that she had become a mother since her return to Orleans, in the hope that the announcement would induce him to marry her. To carry out this fraud she had to procure an infant in order that the young man should visit Orleans, and so went to Paris to steal one. The girl and her mother have made a complete confession, and the Court of Assizes will soon furnish us with the dénouement of this dramatic affair.

SPAIN AND MOROCCO.—The Moors have retired from Ceuta, where everything is now very tranquil. The new Government of Morocco has demanded a delay in order to give the Emperor time to examine into the complaints made by Spain. The Duke de Montpensier has offered the Queen to take service in Africa.

HANOVER.—The King of Hanover and the royal family, who were to have returned to Norderney on the 16th ult., did not arrive until the next morning in consequence of the steamboat on which they had embarked having remained for 12 hours stuck fast on a sandbank in the Ems. The King, in his reply to the magistrates of Embden, alluded to this bank and said that he could not give any attention to the important works of that river unless on condition that the town of Embden would not oppose his government adhering to the declaration of Eisenach in favour of a new German Constitution.

SWITZERLAND.—The Marquis de Nerli, Ambassador of the Grand Duke of Tuscany at Paris, dined on Sunday with the Baron de Bourqueney, and left afterwards for Paris. It is said that he was the bearer of a despatch from the Grand Duke (who is now residing at Lindau) for the French Government. On Tuesday the French and Austrian Plenipotentiaries had a conference. On Wednesday there were separate conferences between the French and Sardinian, and afterwards between the French and Austrian Plenipotentiaries. Prince Napoleon arrived at Zurich on Wednesday.

FRANKFORT.—The director of police has refused to sanction the publication of the statutes of a National Society which has been established in this city for the purpose of promoting the reform of the diet on the basis of the resolutions adopted at Eisenach. Hanover. Upon this the society appealed to the Senate, which has rejected the appeal. The recent declaration of the Duke of Saxe Coburg in favour of reform has called forth strong protests from Austria, Hanover, and Bavaria. The Austrian circular particularly designates the Duke's sentiments as "revolutionary."

HESSE DARMSTADT.—The official journal of Wednesday last contains a decree for the renewal of the ordinance of 1850, which prohibits all subjects of Hesse Darmstadt from becoming members of any political society, established either in the interior or abroad.

AUSTRIA.—The Vienna Gazette of Monday contains an Imperial letter addressed to the Minister of Finance ordering the appointment of a commission, with consultative legislative powers, to organise extensive reforms in the system of direct taxation. The President and Secretary of the commission are Count Hartig and Baron Kalchberg, and the other members consist chiefly of the ratepayers in the different provinces. The present on the interest of the National Loan falling due in the months of October, November, and December, has been fixed at 15 per cent.

MALTA.—The Elba has taken on board the cable to be laid down from Alexandria to Rhodes and thence to Scio, in lieu of the Candia route. The cable between Sicily and Malta was successfully laid on the 23d ult.

RUSSIA.—St. Petersburg was the scene of great festivities on the 8th ult., on which day the Grand Duke, now Cezarewitch Nicolas Alexandrowitch, attained his majority, and took the oaths of allegiance to the Emperor and the country, and also vowed to preserve the true right of succession, and signed a record of the solemn pledges he had given. He then kissed the cross held by the Metropolitan Bishop, and was warmly embraced by the Emperor and Empress. At the conclusion of this ceremony a "Te Deum" was performed, and was followed by a salute of 301 guns and the ringing of bells in all the churches. The second oath, or the oath to the flag, was taken by the Cezarewitch in St. George's Hall. In the evening St. Petersburg was brilliantly illuminated. The Grand Duke Constantine has arrived at Cronstadt in his [illegible] ship the Grand Admiral. The Gazette of the Senate publishes an Imperial ukase, ordering:—

"1. The concentration of all institutions of credit under the Ministry of Finance. 2. The issue of 5 per cent. bank-notes in exchange for those at present in circulation, the drawing to take place every year, commencing with the year 1861, and to last for 37 years. 3. That all moneys deposited with the Bank are to return 2 per cent. interest, instead of 3 per cent. as heretofore. 4. The term of service in the army to be 15 years, and in the navy 14 years."

Italy.—The King of Sardinia arrived at Crema on the 19th, and set out on the same day for Lodi, after receiving the homage of the municipality and most distinguished inhabitants of the town, the national guard and a regiment of French troops lining the streets. At Lodi his Majesty took up his residence in the Palazzo Ghisalberti, and, after the usual ceremonies of reception, gave a banquet to the authorities. The town was illuminated in the evening, and his Majesty was everywhere enthusiastically cheered. The deputation from the National Assembly of the Romagna had an interview with the King on Saturday at Monza, when his Majesty replied to their address in a speech of which the following is a summary:—

"I am grateful for the wishes of the people of the Romagna of which you are the interpreter before me. As a Catholic Sovereign I shall myself always retain a profound and unalterable respect, for the superior Hierarch of the Church. As an Italian Prince I am reminded that Europe having in view the state of the Romagnese people, who demanded prompt and efficient measures of reform, has accepted formal obligations towards your country. I receive your wishes, and, strong by the rights conferred upon me, I will support your cause before the Great Powers. You may rely on their sense of justice. You may rely upon the generous love of our country of the French Emperor, who will accomplish the great work of reparation he has so powerfully begun, and who, assured of the gratitude of Italy, and seeing the moderation which has characterised your resolution during the late moments of incertitude, will recognise that in the Romagna the mere hope of a national Government suffices to put an end to civil disorders. When your numerous volunteers arrived, during the days of the national struggle, to enrol themselves under my flag, you knew that Piedmont would not go to war for herself alone, but for our common country. To-day the unanimity of your wishes, and the order which you observe at home, is very gratifying to my heart, and nothing better could insure your future destiny. Europe will recognise that it is her common duty and also to her common interest to finish the era of disorder, and thereby satisfy the legitimate desires of the people."

An official communication, in reference to Central Italy, is said to have been forwarded by Sardinia to the Great Powers. Accounts from Bologna state that a collision between the Papal and Modenese troops on the one hand, and the National Italian army of Central Italy on the other is daily expected. It is reported at Florence that the four States of Central Italy will shortly hold a convocation of their several national assemblies in Florence for the purpose of electing a Regent, to conduct the Central Government of the four united States till the King of Sardinia be allowed by European diplomacy to take possession of what the popular suffrage has made his own. It is thought that the choice of the Assembly will fall upon Baron Ricasoli. A dispatch from Rome states that on Monday last the Sacred College met and appointed 17 bishops. In the annual allocution of the Pope his Holiness alluded to the National Assembly of Bologna, and referred to the censure expressed by that assembly against the Papal Government. In conclusion his Holiness expressed a hope that the Romagnese would return to their allegiance to the Holy See. The Government of Parma continues to publish the letters left behind her by the Duchess of Parma subsequent to her declaration of neutrality. In some of these letters addressed to the Emperor of Austria the Duchess acquaints him with all the movements of the Sardinian army, and the most advantageous plan of attack, and urges him to act energetically before the French are in Italy, and to come to the succour of the Italian Dukes, "his allies, and the only supporters of the Austrian dominion in the Peninsula." "The safety of Austria," adds the Duchess, "is in the promptitude of its operations. If it waits, it is lost in Italy, together with its allies." In the letters to the Legitimist chiefs in Paris, the person of the Emperor Napoleon did not escape, the Duchess giving him the titles of "ogre," and "the greatest Tartuffe of modern times." Accounts from Naples state that neither Mr. Elliot nor Baron Brennier has the least influence with the Neapolitan Government. Gen. Filangieri has given up all idea of reforms, as the King has decided to govern like his father. The reported outbreak of disturbances is unfounded, but some agitation exists at Naples, and the Government has taken precautionary measures.

Turkey.—Advices from Constantinople to the 24th ult. state that a commission has been appointed for investigating the late conspiracy, and that two generals, several colonels, and other officers and priests, have been arrested; but few details of the affair are published, as the journals have been forbidden to make comments on the matter until the judicial examinations have been concluded. Private letters state that the conspiracy was to have broken out on the 17th, but on the previous Thursday it was denounced by Sergeant Ariza. Vigorous measures have been taken by the Government. The garrison of Constantinople has been considerably increased, and the three months' arrear of pay due to the troops has been paid. Two frigates have been moored before the Seraglio, and the squadron had arrived the day the mail left. Among the principal leaders of the conspiracy were two generals of division, Djaffir, Pasha of Albania, and Hossein, Governor of the Dardanelles, several colonels and Ulemas. Djaffir Pasha drowned himself in the Bosphorus as he was conveyed to prison. No Christians were compromised in the plot. The plan of the conspiracy was cleverly organised. The Europeans and the foreign Ambassadors were to be protected by the generals of the rebels. Amicable relations had been established between Turkey and Persia. Dervisch Pasha and Riza Bey had been appointed Ambassadors to St. Petersburg and Teheran. The statutes of the new Bank have been sanctioned by the Government. The concession for the railroad to Varna and Rustchuk has been granted to the Turkish Consul at Antwerp. The concession of the Bank has been granted to Messrs. Gladstone and Rodocanachi.

Circassia.—The accounts from Constantinople state that Schamyl was betrayed and delivered up a prisoner to the Russians for a bribe of 6,000,000 roubles. The Circassians continue the war against Russia.

Candia.—Matters in Candia are assuming a serious aspect, and the Turkish Government has despatched numerous troops to make a vigorous movement.

Syria.—By the intervention of the Consul peace has been concluded between the Druses and the Maronites. The Druses are to rebuild the houses of the Christians which they had burnt. Two cases of plague have occurred at Beyrout, and have caused strict sanitary measures of precaution to be taken. The telegraph cable between Chios and Smyrna is broken.

Tunis.—The Bey of Tunis died on the 22d ult. In consequence of the energetic measures taken by Rhaznodar, tranquillity has been maintained. During the interregnum, which lasted 36 hours, the presumptive heir, Sidi Sadok, was recognised as the successor; he was installed as Bey on the 24th ult., and took the oaths to observe the constitution and laws granted to the country by his predecessor.

Morocco.—It is stated positively that the Emperor of Morocco is ready to grant the demands of Spain, and that he will send troops against the tribes of the Riff. In confirmation of this, it is said that he refused to receive the envoy of the Sheik who rules over those tribes.—Intelligence has been received at Gibraltar from Tangiers, announcing that all the European Consuls' gardens in the vicinity of that city were destroyed by fire on the night of the 13th. The garden of the British Chargé d'Affaires, which was considered one of the largest and most beautiful in the country (adjoining that of the Spanish Consul's), had on its site a summer residence, out-offices, &c. It is supposed that this act of incendiarism was committed by the mountaineers out of revenge for having been prevented from pillaging the city a few days before.

China.—Further accounts from Hong Kong confirm the report that Captain Vansittart has died of his wounds. Admiral Hope has been suffering severely from his wounds, and, it is said, will have to invalid. His surgeon when probing the partially-closed wound in his hip has discovered and taken out a link and a half of the Plover's smoke stack stay, which had been driven in by the shot. The agony which he must have undergone from such an infliction can only be conceived, but his gallantry and endurance are spoken of by all in the highest terms. Colonel Lemon and the rest of the wounded officers are doing well except Mr. Powlett, midshipman, whose wound was considered unfavourable. Eight of the wounded seamen and marines have died of their wounds. The riot at Shanghai, in which some foreigners lost their lives and others were severely injured, originated in the proceedings of certain persons connected with the French ship Gertrude, lying at Woosung, and bound for Havannah with coolies, to procure whom kidnapping was resorted to. The Chinese became exasperated, and made an indiscriminate attack on a number of sailors. Mr. Lay, of the Chinese Custom house, while attempting to remonstrate and explain matters, was stabbed in several places, and his recovery is doubtful. Unfortunately, the injured persons are mostly unconnected with the cause of the outbreak. The authorities have taken the matter in hand and his Excellency M. de Bourbonlon has ordered the vessel to be brought into port for the purpose of strict investigation. The French papers have received accounts from Shanghai stating that Mr. Ward, the United States' Minister, has arrived at Pekin. He was conveyed up the river in a large box, so constructed as to contain everything necessary for his comfort, while it effectually prevented him from seeing the country. This box was placed on a raft and towed up to the gate of Pekin. It was then placed on a large truck drawn by oxen, and deposited in the courtyard of a large house, which was to be the residence of the American envoy, but from which he was not to be allowed to go out. At the last dates he was awaiting an interview with the Emperor, after which he was to be reconducted to the frontier in the same way in which he came. The China papers publish the following Chinese official account of the affair of the Peiho, transmitted to the Emperor by the Mongolian Prince Sung-ko-lin-sin, a Prince of the Empire, who commanded in person:—

"Sung-ko-lin-sin, Imperial Commissioner, Prince of Potolakutai, of the Korchin tribe, reverently presents a memorial. He hastens to report in detail how the barbarian ships, disobeying reasonable injunctions, burst into the inner waters and commenced firing upon our soldiers; who, being enraged, attacked and destroyed their vessels in a sanguinary engagement, which lasted all day from 2 in the afternoon till 10 at night, the barbarian troops having pressed right on to the very foot of the wall, where they obstinately fought without retiring. Looking upward, he prays for the sacred glance thereon. He cannot bear to speak minutely of the insolent bearing of the rebellious barbarians during several days; [suffice it to say that] when your slave Hang-fuh* had hastened to Peitang, and written to their Envoy upon the subject of proceeding to a personal conference, they paid no attention to him, but reiterated their demands for the complete removal of all obstructions [illegible] fire once opened, induced [illegible] silence, and quietly to abide his time, thus encouraging the barbarians in their pride, and feeding the fury of our soldiers. Just as the action was about to commence, an officer with a communication from the Tartar General was sent once more to warn them. The barbarians would not permit the letter to be handed in, and their vessels advancing like a swarm of bees, light up to the assault [illegible] upon the southern bank, [illegible] twice; but, [illegible] fire upon our batteries. [illegible] fury had been for a long time [illegible] the [illegible] of every description, and most [illegible] upon all sides, and at evening the firing had not ceased. More than 30 boats now came [illegible] the bank of the Southern Fort, and the barbarians, having landed in a body, [illegible] the ground, [illegible] and [illegible] were then brought up to oppose them, and the [illegible] volleys. The barbarians did not venture to cross the mound, but threw themselves down among the [illegible], and fired [illegible] from their shelter. Such murderous [illegible] were [illegible] calculated to make one's hair stand up [illegible], with rage [illegible] and to vindicate the honour of the State, and fulfil at the same time the expectations of the Government, your slaves were compelled to bring forward their troops to oppose them with their utmost strength. Your slave Hang-fuh, who had been stationed on the New Forts, put himself at the head of the [illegible] infantry, as soon as he heard the cannonade, and proceeded to Taku, bringing up his men as a reserve to [illegible] from the rear. At the same time Wan Yu, the Commissioner of Finance, arrived also from Peking. Your slaves [illegible] were [illegible] by this movement in overawing [illegible] of the [illegible] troops with the rebellious barbarians, who [illegible] immovable in confusion, awaiting [illegible] (per day). Prostrate he entreats the [illegible] Majesty's sacred glance and instructions. A respectful memorial. Forwarded from Taku on the 26th of June."

* Governor-General of the province of Chi-li.

"Supplementary Memorial, Reporting the Particulars as they have been ascertained, of our Victory.—At dawn [illegible] your slaves reported the [illegible] of a sanguinary and protracted engagement with [illegible] barbarians, who, in their unruly spirit, would not listen to the dictates of reason. When their troops advanced up to the southern ditch and provoked us to [illegible] great numbers of them fell under the volleys of our gingall and matchlock men; but upwards of a thousand concealed themselves among the rushes, and endeavoured to push forward along the ground. As we could not tell how far these were off, our soldiers kept them back by projecting fireballs through bamboo tubes; and, as these blazed up, our guns and cannon being laid, by firing into them at point-blank range, till their skill and strength alike exhausted, they dared no longer to continue the engagement, but [illegible] back to their ships. It was [illegible] before our men began to return to their ranks. The barbarian dead lay piled in heaps [illegible] 100 and some tens of bodies, exclusive of those carried off on board their ships, also 11 foreign guns and sets of accoutrements, and a great number of other barbarian articles. Three boats, too, were stranded, hiding himself in one of which was a barbarian soldier, who was captured alive by our troops. Another was brought off a prisoner from the mud. These men, stated, when examined, that one was an Englishman and the other an American, and that during the action they were joined with the reserve in the boats from the fleet. They say that the attacking party numbered some 1500 or 1600 men, and that a great many of them had been killed; that the English chief Admiral Hope, was in the foremost steamer, which was dismasted by our fire; that he was wounded in the right leg, and lay down upon a couch unable to move; also that hostilities were commenced entirely on the motion of this chief. Your slave Hang-fuh appointed an officer to guard the prisoners, holding that [in the possession of them] there might, at some future time, be a means of enabling us to [illegible] a manifestation of conciliatory intentions. It appears that of the 13 barbarian steamers which were engaged on the 25th inst., eight were those that were sunk where they lay by our fire, and those that were dismasted and disabled, only one got back outside the bar. The rest all suffered so severely that they could not move."

Cochin China.—It is reported that the French troops are suffering very severely from illness, and that Admiral Genouilly intends to evacuate Turon. Up to the beginning of last August no treaty had been signed between France and Cochin China.

Japan.—Affairs in Japan have assumed an unsatisfactory position. On the 11th July the Treaty was duly ratified, but since then the Japanese Government have attempted to evade it by seeking to confine foreigners to a small island about 10 miles from Yeddo, and to establish the same sort of surveillance over them as they formerly exercised at the Dutch settlement of Decima. They have further sought to establish a new coin as the only one to be used in commercial dealings with foreigners, but at the same time forbidding its currency among the natives, so that all payments in the new coin would have to be exchanged at the Government treasury for the old itzabon; and the relative values fixed by the Government produced a depreciation of 66 per cent. on foreign coins, which, according to treaty, are to be received at their intrinsic value as metal. Mr. Alcock, the British Consul-General, has issued a protest, and has stopped the trade for the present. It is to be hoped that the calm, but firm attitude he has assumed, will have the desired effect.

* This alludes to a partially successful night attempt made by Captain Willes to blow up one of the forts. The statement that the boat was not fired on is false, as is also the memorialist's subsequent assertion that the gunboats were the first to open fire upon the 25th of June.

† The Sin Ho appears to be an artificial cut connecting the Peht'ang Ho with the Tien-tsing River, commonly called by us the Peiho.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The colonial papers are full of expressions of regret at the departure of the ex-Governor, Sir George Grey, who landed at Plymouth from the Celt on Monday morning. On his departure from Cape Town the horses were taken from his carriage at Government House, and it was drawn by the inhabitants under triumphal arches to the place of embarkation. Salutes were fired, and, when on board, his Excellency received addresses from all the public bodies. The Celt brings a petition to her Majesty, signed by 2000 colonists, praying for his restoration as Governor. Satisfactory letters have been received from Dr. Livingstone. He and his party are in good health, and their efforts have been successful.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—It is reported that General Harney, commander of the United States' forces in Oregon, took the step of placing a military post on the island of San Juan on his own responsibility, and without instructions from the Federal Government at Washington. He has declared to the British authorities that he did so because American citizens had been arrested on the island, but that he did not mean his occupation to be permanent, though it was his intention to hold the island until he heard from his Government at Washington. General Scott has been sent by the United States Government to the Pacific on account of this dispute.

AUSTRALIA.—Telegraphic advices in anticipation of the coming Australian mail report the total loss, near Capé Northumberland, on the 6th of August, of the screw steamer Ardmillan (supposed to be Admilla), from Adelaide, whereby 87 lives were lost, only 25 persons being saved.

Public Addresses.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL was presented with the freedom of the city of Aberdeen on Wednesday, and in acknowledging the honour spoke as follows on the Reform question and the policy of the Government in regard to Italy:—

"With regard to Reform, the true principle which should guide us in an amendment of the law of the representation of the people should be the choosing of the fittest individuals in the community for the privilege of the suffrage—that this principle could be applied without endangering the stability of our time-honoured institutions. Some men indulged in the idea of a reorganisation of our political system, but he could not pretend to have either the capacity or the strength to undertake such a task. His lordship then proceeded to review the past history of Italy, from the time of the first Napoleon down to the present state of affairs. The Emperor of the French, having conquered Lombardy in the present year, made a wise and magnanimous declaration that he did not go to conquer Lombardy for himself, but that the Italians should be the free citizens of a great country. The Italians, not only in Lombardy, but in Tuscany, Modena, and Parma, have acted upon this declaration, and they have made temporary and provisional Governments for themselves, declaring that they wish hereafter to be the free citizens of a great country. And they have done this with such perfect order that no man can say that the Austrians or any other neighbours are called upon to interfere. Well then, gentlemen, though we can claim no credit for having enabled those people to assert their freedom—although we have been bystanders, and I think for very good and sufficient reasons have taken no part in the hostilities of this spring; yet, I think we are bound to say, we do say, and we have said that, against any interference of foreign force, to prevent these people having their own government, and conducting their affairs as they like, we do most loudly and solemnly protest. And, therefore, be the terms of the treaty now negotiated what they may—if, hereafter, consequent upon that treaty, there shall be a Congress of the Powers of Europe—if it shall be the wish of those Powers which have taken part in those hostilities that in the final settlement of Italy the other Powers of Europe should take part in these consultations, we will assist only on one condition, namely, that no foreign force be used in order to compel fulfilment of the conditions of peace, and that there be no interference with the right of the people of Italy to manage their own concerns, because if such should be the object or the result of such a Congress, England will stand apart and take no concern in it. But I feel convinced, and such is the language, not of one of those Powers, but of both those Powers, that whatever their opinions may be as to what has taken place—and the Austrian Government cannot be expected to approve of the resolution in Modena and Tuscany—yet I believe neither Power has any intention to interfere by force with the decision of those peoples. I think it a matter of great importance that it should be so, because that system—which is rather disguised than expressed by the phrase, the balance of power—that system means that the different States shall be independent; that they shall manage their own concerns; and that no one State should have the preponderance in Europe, or dictate what should be the constitution, or what should be the internal government of the rest. And happy as we are in this country in independence long acquired, it is not only our interest, but I think it must be our wish, to see that every State in Europe, whether they prefer a system which we think not compatible with liberty, or whether they prefer a just and temperate system of representative monarchy, or whether they prefer any other form of government, provided they do not interfere with their neighbours—I think that the independence of the several States of Europe is an object which Great Britain ought to feel a sympathy and interest in. Be assured that, so far as I am concerned, while I have the honour to hold the seals of the Foreign Office, it shall be for no mean purpose, for no selfish interest, that I shall endeavour to use the name and influence and authority of Great Britain. This country holds high a beacon which may save the rest of the world. It is not for us to arrogate and dictate with respect to what they shall do, but it is our duty when we do speak to speak in the language of a free people, as the loyal and obedient subjects of a monarch who reigns in the affections of her people."

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, at the meeting of the Wayland Society at Walton, made the following remarks on the Volunteer movement:—

"He would not use the hackneyed expression that the Army and Navy of England would always do their duty, because during the last few days an instance had been afforded of its performance. Never had greater heroism been displayed than in the expedition up the Peiho. He could not, however, but regret that such a decided prejudice prevailed, particularly in the agricultural class, against service in the army and navy. If a villager turned out a poacher, his friends no doubt regretted it; but if he 'went for a soldier' the family distress was enormous. It was not generally known, he believed, that the naval and military services were not now what they used to be. The period of enlistment in the army was now only for 10 years, and during that decade a man's time was much better spent than it would be either at home or in his village. He had opportunities for learning a great deal, and a grateful country was only too anxious to do everything for his benefit. With regard to the volunteer rifle corps, he might perhaps, as an inhabitant of the county, be allowed to say a few words. He had the honour to command the corps called the Victoria Rifles, and he thought they had committed an error in making themselves too numerous. They had also a fine uniform, and the consequence was that they were always desirous to show it off and to become officers. A volunteer corps should not, under any circumstances, comprise more than 100 men; but that number acting as a company, and in subordination to the regular troops, might be of the greatest utility."

LORD W. GRAHAM, M.P., at Ledbury, made the following remarks on the National Defences and the war in China:—

"The feeling on the subject of our national defences had been so strong that a commission had been appointed, from which he hoped much advantage would result. The present Government had also continued the preparations commenced with so much zeal and judgment by Sir John Pakington. He was not apprehensive of an invasion. He believed the Emperor of the French was well disposed towards this country, and would maintain a strict alliance and peace with us if the French army would let him. But it seemed as though we should require these fresh armaments not so much for self-defence as to vindicate the honour of our arms in the distant East. Whatever might have been thought of the policy or expediency of the first war with China, nobody could hesitate to say that we were now justified in demanding ample reparation for the treacherous attack upon our Ambassador and ships. Retribution must be exacted for the blood that had been shed and the lives that had been lost, and the Chinese must be taught that treaties when once signed must be observed, and that the English flag must be respected. Unless we did this we should have to abandon all our trade and commerce with that productive empire, and give up all our hopes of introducing Christianity and civilisation into that part of the world."

LORD ROBERT CECIL, M.P., at a public dinner given by the Mayor of Stamford made the following remarks on the state of parties:—

"Since he was sent to Parliament to uphold a certain Ministry party warfare had fallen a good deal into abeyance, and he must confess that he was not very sorry for it. He valued party feeling as a means of carrying on the Government of a country, and he fully recognised the benefit it had conferred upon the State, but he was bound to say that during the few latter years we had seen the worst side of its working. for in a period of nine years no less than seven had been wasted in Ministerial crises, which were neither valuable nor useful for purposes of legislation. Occurring in the middle of a session, as they always did, they invariably arrested all public business, turned out Ministers who had become acquainted with matters in hand, and gave to foreign Governments the impression that our own Government was so weak and so unstable that they might count upon its yielding on any point on which it might be pressed. Therefore he thought that constant changes of Government were detrimental to the public service. Though, as a party man, he of course had his own wishes as to who should or should not be in office, he still said that until the Opposition were able to place their own party in real power, with a sufficient majority to enable them to maintain their position for a considerable time, he did not himself wish for a change of Government. He did not think that Governments on sufferance, however good might be their intentions, when they had to frame every measure by calculations in which every vote must be balanced, and every caprice taken into account, could fill their situation in a manner satisfactory to their own sense of honour and to those who supported them. But it was not domestic politics which occupied the minds of the majority of the people of this country. People's eyes were bent abroad. The troublous times which threatened us from the continent rivetted all attention. We heard a great deal about the state of Italy, and there were many conflicting opinions as to what the best settlement of that very knotty question should be. For his own part he candidly confessed that he wished we were less interested in Italy. He viewed with alarm and apprehension the keen interest which our Government seemed to take in this Italian question, believing that they would not be able to effect any good. We should rather take effective measures to secure against any chance of invasion the prosperity of our own country and the peace of our own shores. Just consider the desolation which an invading army would spread abroad. Think of the cities it would level—of the contributions it would raise for its support—of the hundreds of thousands it would deprive of the means of earning their daily bread—of the capital it would dissipate—of the confidence it would shake, and then say whether for the question of a mere 3d. or 4d. in the pound it was worth while to run a risk so frightful as this. He then criticised Mr Bright's Huddersfield speech, and remarked that a few years ago the same hon. gentleman had declared that all our wars had been undertaken for the purpose of affording outdoor relief to the aristocracy. Every student in history would be able to refute so ridiculous a charge. Every one knew that in all our great wars the English people pressed on their statesmen by their own unconquerable ardour. They might sometimes have been enthusiastic—sometimes over hasty, but he thought the records of history would show that what had impelled them to the enormous expenditure they had incurred, and to the gallant resistance by which they had been distinguished, had been their determination that they would sacrifice their last farthing, and would give up their last man, rather than suffer a foreign enemy to pollute their shores, rather than suffer any one to injure an empire to which they were proud to belong, or to diminish the value of the institutions which they loved so well."

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE, M.P., at Stamford, spoke as follows on the uses of an Opposition:—

"At the present time it was of great importance that the Conservative party should, if possible, support the government. It was very true that it might become their duty to take strong measures to oppose government upon matters which might be of great and vital importance; but looking to the general interests of the country, to the state of affairs in the East, and to our financial condition, which was such that there must be very important financial measures introduced,—looking to that great question of the defence of the country, and to the necessity for adopting measures for placing ourselves upon an independent footing, which would render us free from those degrading panics to which we were from time to time subject, and would at the same time command the respect of foreign nations,—looking to all these questions, it was particularly important that the party to which he belonged should adopt a line of conduct which was at once firm and not factious; which should show that they had a policy of their own and were prepared to enforce it; but that as long as they saw those measures adopted which they might consider to be for the good of the country, they would abstain from all factious proceedings. That was peculiarly important, because the Conservatives numbered nearly one-half of the House of Commons, and because it was in their power—there would be no difficulty whatever, by taking advantage of casual opportunities—to embarrass and defeat the Government. But that ought not to be the object of an Opposition which did not command an absolute and clear majority. What the Opposition should do was, to take care that the government went straight, to take care that those feelings which there were in the present, as in other governments, should have free play, so that when urged on by their more extreme supporters to measures of which they did not as a body approve, they should be able to turn round and say, 'We will not do these things.' If that was the spirit which animated the Opposition, he believed all would go well."

THE HON. RICHARD CAVENDISH, at a meeting at Buckingham, spoke as follows on the war in China:—

"We had now commenced a new war with China, which he hoped would be the last, but to render our hostilities effectual we must insist upon the money demanded being paid down. That must be done before agreeing to any terms of peace. Having been among the Asiatics he could speak of them from his own personal knowledge, and would not trust to their promises to pay. England was too much inclined to put faith in promises. Perhaps it might sometimes be advisable to evince some degree of faith in promises, because it showed that we were not so anxious to increase our possessions as some persons supposed. But the present war in China had been forced upon us, and it was our duty to avenge the deaths of those who had been slaughtered by the Chinese; and, above all, as he had said before, to see our demands fully discharged by the payment of the money down."

MR. HENLEY, M.P., at a meeting at Wallington spoke as follows on the China question:—

"About a week ago he attended a meeting at Thame, and congratulated it on the peace and tranquillity which prevailed; but regretted to say that since that meeting a very unfortunate affair had taken place in the East, an affair which had rarely happened to this country, for one-half our vessels engaged in the action were sunk or disabled, and one third of our force killed or wounded, and all that disaster occurred while our Ambassador was on his way to complete a treaty that had been entered into, but which was violated in such a way that we received a repulse, with all the mortification attached to it. He thought it a most unfortunate circumstance for this country that within the last few years three great fights had taken place between this country and the Chinese. When they saw the great improvement which the Chinese had made on the second occasion, when they fought something like a fight, and how much they were improved on the last occasion, when they gave us a severe dressing, it must be a matter of great anxiety to find a foe that we have to encounter so far advanced in the system of warfare and of self-defence. There was however one matter of congratulation, namely, that this country would not go into this war single-handed, but would have a powerful ally. They had already experienced in a great war the loyalty and fidelity of the two Governments of France and England, and the extremely good management of the officers had prevented any of those jealousies which history had pointed out as having occurred with allies. He was one of those who thought that when a country was at war it was a good thing to have allies, but that it was the safest to fight the battle for ourselves, and for our allies to fight the battle for themselves. He trusted that in going into this quarrel they should get out of it as good friends as when they went into it, and that they might attain their ends without any jealousy; because great as the present evil was, if there were any jealousy between France and England, that would be a far greater evil."

SIR J. W. RAMSDEN, M.P., at the Craven Exhibition, made the following remarks on the Army and Navy:—

"The toast of the Army and Navy would at all times be received with enthusiasm in any assembly of Englishmen, but especially would it be so at the present moment, for unfortunately events had occurred which had illustrated in rather a painful manner the truth of the old saying, that preparation for war was the surest guarantee of peace. Therefore it was not because England was a warlike nation, or because she desired to quarrel with her neighbours, but because she was a peace loving nation, that it was necessary for the armaments of the country, both by land and sea, to be in a state of the greatest possible efficiency. They could not, and he trusted they would never attempt to, imitate the great land forces of foreign Powers; but they had always been accustomed to rely, as the first bulwark of our safety, on the preponderating efficiency of the navy, and he trusted that, while they gave due weight to considerations of economy, and endeavoured to enforce them in every department of the State, they would never allow a short-sighted desire of saving to blind them to the necessity under which this country lay to maintain its maritime pre-eminence. That desire had been, he rejoiced to say, emphatically shown throughout the country during the present year. No Government whatever could continue for a moment to hold power except they maintained the defences of the country in an efficient condition, so that they could resist any aggression from whatever source it might come. He trusted that while the Government would always see the necessity for the country being prepared for war, there would be no need for making use of those preparations. He asked the assembly to respond to the toast for what the army and navy had done in times past, as well as for the services which he believed they were prepared to render if any unfortunate emergency should arise. He trusted that no such necessity would occur, but they could not be blind to the fact that if they for a moment forgot to maintain the efficiency of the army and navy they would be liable to become a prey to disaster, for which they would have no one to blame but themselves. Their maxim should be to combine efficiency with economy, but efficiency should be their first consideration and economy the second; and he trusted that they would always treat the army and navy with the honour which their distinguished antecedents so justly entitled them to."

SIR JOHN COLERIDGE at the recent distribution of certificates to the successful candidates at the Oxford Local Examinations at Exeter spoke as follows on Middle Class Education:—

"No one who has considered the history, not merely of this country but of Christendom in general, for centuries back, can fail to perceive that there has been for centuries a gradual advancement towards the approximation of the different classes of society, and to increasing power with regard to government of what are called the lower orders. I am not, of course, going to express a political opinion here: I do not say whether it is better or whether it is worse at present. But it seems to me to be so orderly, to have proceeded so regularly, to have gone on so widely—I may say so universally—through Christendom, that I cannot but think that we may trace in it the finger of Him who governs the world; and if that be so, I ought to alter the language I used, and I ought to say that it must be for good. It must be for good if we rightly use and direct the dispensations of the Almighty, as far as we are concerned. The destinies of nations are in His hands, but, as you well know, He acts ordinarily by secondary means; He acts by human agents, and it is in our power to make that a blessing, as He intended it, or a curse, which He did not intend, according as we use that which he puts in our hands. The river will flow on. If you attempt to stop it, it will overwhelm you in ruin. If you neglect its course, you may lose the benefits it would otherwise confer. But if you direct its course wisely it will be a source of fertility to the land through which it flows. Something like that is what this country ought to do, and what I think it is now doing in respect of education. If the lower orders are to be raised in political power in this country, to make that a blessing you must cultivate the lower orders for discharging the duties to be thrown upon them. Therefore it is that I think the University of Oxford conferred the largest benefit that it had in its power to confer upon this country at large when, passing simply from the education of the higher orders, and those who were destined for the Church, it spread out its hands in a frank and liberal spirit to all classes of society, and offered to connect everybody with itself, in a certain measure, who would only fit himself for it by proper application. It is obvious, and everybody must see, that the more the classes of society lower than those who may be able to take the benefit directly of university education avail themselves of this privilege, the more will they fit themselves for all those acts of power and administration of government to which in the course of things they may probably be called."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Election of Lord Mayor.—At a Common Hall held on Thursday in Guildhall, Alderman Carter was almost unanimously elected Lord Mayor for the year ensuing, only five or six hands being held up for Alderman Cubitt, and the same for Sir H. Muggeridge, the two next aldermen in succession to the chair. It had been rumoured for some time past that an effort was to be made, by means of the 'long-shore men, to set aside Alderman Carter for the purpose of securing to Alderman Cubitt the honours expected to be conferred on the Lord Mayor who will be in office at the coming of age of the Prince of Wales. Alderman Cubitt however personally disavowed all participation in this scheme, and if it had been attempted it was Alderman Carter's intention to have appealed to the livery at large by demanding a poll. In returning thanks for his election, the Lord Mayor elect assured the Liverymen that it is his intention and desire to sustain inviolate the rights, privileges, and immunities of the Livery Companies of the city of London.

The New Sheriffs.—On Wednesday Alderman Phillips and Alderman Gabriel, the sheriffs elect for the year 1859-60, were duly sworn into office at Guildhall before the Lord Mayor, and was subsequently invested with their gowns and chains of office. The usual presentation to the Barons of the Exchequer in Westminster Hall did not take place on this occasian, an Act of Parliament having passed during the last session to relieve the judges from the necessity of receiving the sheriffs, and transferring to the Queen's Remembrancer the duty of announcing her Majesty's approval of their election, which was done in due course yesterday by a warrant under the Great Seal. In consequence of the abolition of the ancient ceremony in Westminster Hall, the breakfast which preceded and the dinner which followed it were also omitted from the usual Michaelmas programme of municipal hospitality.

The Case of Dr. Smethurst.—The Home Secretary has not yet come to a decision on the question whether there shall be a commutation of the sentence of Dr. Smethurst. The delay which has been occasioned arises from the fact that circumstances have transpired which lead to a suspicion that there are other cases of a serious character against him, which the police have received instructions to investigate.

The Great Eastern.—A report that the visit of the Great Eastern to America is to be delayed for 12 months, during which she is to be exhibited at the various seaports of the United Kingdom, is positively contradicted at the office of the company. On Wednesday week 30 of the crew were charged before the magistrates at Weymouth with mutinous conduct in having wilfully disobeyed orders to wash the decks on the previous Sunday. The charge was fully proved, and the ringleader, Johnson, was sentenced to a month's imprisonment with hard labour, and the forfeiture of two days' pay. Another man called Brodie, who had figured conspicuously in the matter, was sentenced to be imprisoned, with hard labour, for three weeks, and to forfeit two days' pay; and the remainder to be imprisoned, with hard labour, for a fortnight, with a similar forfeiture of wages. They were afterwards removed in custody to the County Gaol at Dorchester. Since the recent accident the directors have placed the fittings and all matters connected with the sea-going equipment of the ship entirely in the hands of the Marine Department of the Board of Trade; and some important alterations, suggested by the Board, will be made before the vessel again goes to sea. In the meanwhile it is said that the ship will shortly leave her present moorings, and go round under easy steam to Southampton Water, both for the convenience of receiving materials for her repairs from London and in order to gratify the thousands of excursionists who are anxious to visit the ship from all the chief towns along the south coast before her departure for Holyhead, where she is to be inspected by the Queen on the 17th inst. The three men, Tait, Yoxon, and Sparkes, who were badly injured by the explosion, are now progressing favourably at the Weymouth Infirmary, and no doubt is entained of their ultimate recovery.

The Builders' Strike.—At the weekly meeting of the executive committee of master builders on Tuesday, Mr. Myers, the extensive builder in the York Road, brought before the meeting a proposal from the operative masons, offering to abandon the 9 hours movement and work 10 hours a day as usual, provided the masters agree to withdraw the declaration. After a long and animated discussion, it was resolved that the Committee of the Central Association of Master Builders consider the difficulties in the way of withdrawing the declaration, which has been taken by nearly 8000 men, as insuperable, but that they are willing to see a deputation of masons, whose withdrawal from the Conference they regard as a first step in assertion of the freedom of labour. In pursuance of this resolution a deputation of masons had an interview with the Masters' Committee on Wednesday. The interview lasted 7 hours and was then adjourned to Thursday, when it terminated without any satisfactory result, the masters refusing to withdraw the declaration and requiring the masons to amend such portions of their trade rules and customs within the metropolitan postal district as shall be declared by the President of the Board of Trade, or any retired Judge of her Majesty's Courts of Westminster, to be contrary to the spirit of the law of the land. With this demand the deputation refused to comply, and their refusal was subsequently confirmed at a general meeting of their body, at which it was also resolved to make a levy of 6*d*. a day on the London masons now in work during the strike, and until the declaration is withdrawn, such levy to be binding upon all masons, whether society or non-society men. A proposal made by the Conference was also brought under the notice of the Masters' Committee on Tuesday by Mr. Jay, offering on the part of the building operatives to resume work on the withdrawal of the declaration on the part of the employers, leaving the question pending between them and the workmen prior to the 6th of August to be settled by a committee of six members of the Central Association and six members of the United Trades' Conference. This offer was met by a resolution stating that the Conference being an irresponsible body, and their proceedings having been entirely illegal, the Committee could not recognise them as a proper medium of communication between the Association and their workmen. It follows from all this that the breach between the employers and the employed has become wider and deeper than before; that the Committee of Masters remain firm in their adherence to the declaration, and refuse to acknowledge the right of the Conference to interfere in settling the dispute.

St. George's-in-the-East.—The Bishop of London's precaution in ordering this church to be closed until the result of his mediation is announced prevented any renewal of the riotous scenes in the parish church on Sunday, but the popular feeling broke out in another direction, and was exhibited with more violence than ever at the Mission Church in Calvert Street, and St. Saviour's Church in Wellclose Square, two small churches under the control of the Rev. Bryan King and his curates, who carry their doctrines and practices to as great an extent in them as in St. George's. At the Mission Church in the evening, in spite of the measures taken to admit no one except by ticket, the mob broke in and put out the gas during the service, and would have done serious mischief if a body of police had not been introduced through the vestry. At St. Saviour's the mob attacked the curate and compelled him to save himself by escaping by a back way to the Mission House, which his pursuers surrounded and vented their indignation in howlings and yells, particularly condemning Papists and Puseyites. An attack upon the Mission House was proposed, and it would, no doubt, have been carried out had it not been for the judicious conduct of the police officer in charge, who ordered his men at once to clear the place. This was immediately done, but not without a general battle between the police, who had drawn their staves, and the mob, who showed every disposition to rebel. Two persons, Mr. Rosier, and Mr. Petersen, a Swede, have since been charged, under an Act of William and Mary, with disturbing the congregation. The case of the former has been postponed to Wednesday next, and the latter has been committed for trial at the sessions on two indictments, bail being accepted in each case. In the course of Sunday evening the Rev. Hugh Allen, the afternoon lecturer at St. George's, preached a highly inflammatory sermon in condemnation of Puseyite practices, at his own church, St. Jude's, Whitechapel. The whole parish is in a state of the highest excitement, which has been increased by a letter from the Bishop stating that he has not yet received from the rector such an unreserved intimation of his readiness to refer the various questions in dispute to his lordship as will enable him to act as mediator.

The late Flogging Case at Woolwich.—A military court of inquiry, composed of various officers of the Royal Artillery, has been held at Woolwich to investigate the circumstances connected with the recent flogging of a gunner while his back was partially covered with boils. It is understood that after hearing evidence and carefully considering the case, the court decided that the medical officer was blameable for allowing the punishment to be inflicted, and that he be reprimanded accordingly. It appears that when a court-martial passes sentence of flogging, the medical officer is bound to certify that the prisoner is physically in a condition to receive the punishment, or such punishment cannot legally be administered. The man whose case has excited so much public attention has not yet fully recovered from the effects of the flogging, which is a sufficient proof that the facts detailed at the time were not overstated.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's report states that the weekly deaths have now declined to the point from which they rose at the end of June. The total number in London in the week that ended Saturday, Sept. 24, was 1058. If the deaths from cholera in the corresponding weeks of 1849 and 1854 are excluded from the calculation, the return of last week is below the average of the third week of September for the 10 years 1849-58. During the week the births of 886 boys and 866 girls, in all 1752 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1572.

Provincial.

Birmingham.—On Tuesday morning a fatal explosion took place on the premises of Messrs. Phillips & Pursall, percussion cap makers, of Whittall Street, one of the most closely built districts of this town. Between 70 and 80 persons, the great majority of whom were women, were at work on the premises at the time, a large number of them being extra hands who had been engaged to execute a large order for the Turkish Government to be completed within a given time. The explosion took place in the "priming shop" on the first floor, and was instantaneously followed by a second. The report was heard for a long distance, all the houses in the neighbourhood were shaken, and the building fell in, leaving nothing standing but the front wall immediately facing the public street. The timber within the walls then became a mass of flame, so violent and so intense that in an incredibly short time the beams were burnt to a charred mass. Of the people within the building about 50 escaped with life, but 16 or 17 of this number were so severely burnt that it was necessary to take them to the General Hospital. One woman died immediately; several others were between life and death. Up to Tuesday night 18 dead bodies had been dug out of the ruins, some of them burnt to a blackened mass, others crushed beneath the burning material, or stifled by suffocation. This is the third explosion of the kind which has occurred in Birmingham within three months.

Bristol.—A steam tug called the Fairy exploded last week in Kingroad as she was lying alongside a barque which she was about to tow down the river. The tug immediately sunk, and the engineer and fireman went down with her. A boy was blown on board the barque and very seriously injured, and the mate, who was picked up on a piece of the wreck, has since died in the Infirmary. The jury at the inquest returned an open verdict, that deceased were killed by the explosion.

Gloucester.—Messrs. Vaughan, Fitzgerald, and Welford, the commissioners appointed to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices at the last and previous elections for this city opened their court at the Shire Hall on Monday, and have sat daily during the week. Mr. Coleridge is officiating as secretary to the commission, and all the electioneering notables on both sides have been present at the sittings.

Jersey.—The South-Western Company's steamer Despatch, which left Southampton at midnight on Wednesday, broke her intermediate shaft off the Casket, and put into Alderney, from whence the mails and passengers were sent to their destination by a small steamer.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—This town has become the scene of a religious "revival" which bids fair to rival anything of the kind which has yet occurred either in America or the North of Ireland. About three weeks ago a medical gentleman and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, who are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the city of New York, arrived in Newcastle by invitation of the Rev. Robert Young, the Wesleyan minister, and commenced a series of public services in the Brunswick Place Wesleyan Chapel, one of the largest places of worship in the town. It was merely announced from the pulpit on the preceding Sunday that Mrs. Palmer would give an address in the chapel on the next Wednesday evening, and a very numerous though select audience assembled. After devotional exercises Dr. Palmer read a portion of Scripture, and gave a brief introductory address, after which Mrs. Palmer took her place within the communion rails, and spoke nearly an hour in a very animated and impressive manner, her topics being the great truths of revelation, enforced as the rule of human conduct in all the relations of life. So powerful was the effect of her address, that when at the close an invitation was given to those who were "convinced of sin" to come to "the altar" to be prayed for, the communion rail was surrounded with kneeling penitents, most of whom were evidently the subject of powerful emotion. It was thereupon resolved to continue the services every evening, and as the interest excited seemed only to deepen by the constant repetition, midday and afternoon meetings are now held. On the next Sunday after the usual service in the chapel a prayer-meeting was held, when a gentleman, a member of the Wesleyan body, who had been connected with a large brewery in the neighbourhood, and is the owner of several public-houses in Newcastle, declared that his mind had been so impressed by what he had heard that he resolved that his connection with the liquor traffic should from that moment cease. The effect of this declaration thus publicly made was electrical, and the matter has become quite a town's talk. The movement itself is now spreading to other denominations. The Rev. Rowland East, the incumbent of St. Andrew's Church, has since commenced a series of "revival" sermons in that church. The subject chosen was the final judgment of the world. The rev. gentleman in announcing the series refers to the "awakening" which had already commenced in the town, and without ignoring what had taken place elsewhere, expressed his conviction that the Apostolic Church of England ought to participate in the earnestness which is now manifested on the subject of religion.

SHEERNESS.—An extraordinary slip of land has recently taken place at Warden Point, on the north-east end of the Isle of Sheppy, which has placed the ancient church of that parish in great danger, as the east end of the church is only 41 feet from the edge of the cliff. Persons residing near the church state that for three or four days previous to the slip a noise was heard at very short intervals like distant thunder. Several portions of the land have dropped down with rows of large trees, hurdle-fences, and hedges perfectly upright; other trees are partially inclined towards the sea, and others are quite reversed, but not a single tree is buried by the soil. A landslip of less magnitude took place about two years since, which together with the present one acted upon a space of more than 10 acres of arable and pasture land, in consequence of which the Coast-guard station being considered unsafe has recently been taken down. The land for some considerable distance south-east of the church is still opening in large chasms, varying from 3 inches to 3 feet, and in depth from 3 to 30 feet. Great numbers of visitors have been attracted to the spot, and the curiosity does not seem at all to diminish.

STAFFORD.—On Friday night the Earl of Shrewsbury, accompanied by Colonel Taylor, M.P., and Captain De Winton, of the Life Guards, after attending a review of the Staffordshire Yeomanry Cavalry, at Lichfield, left in an open phaeton on their return to Ingestre Hall. The night was very dark and the Earl of Shrewsbury, who was driving, accidentally drove the horses against a bank a few miles from Lichfield, by which the whole party were capsized. His lordship escaped without serious injury, though he was much shaken, and Colonel Taylor sustained some contusions about his face. Captain De Winton and the groom were unhurt.

SWANSEA.—The new south docks which have recently been constructed to afford facilities to the increasing trade of this port were opened with great ceremony on Friday in the presence of the lord lieutenant and high sheriff of the county, the members of Parliament for the borough, the harbour trustees, and an immense concourse of spectators, including all the local societies and lodges. These new docks comprise what is known as a "trumpet mouth" entrance of great size, a half-tide basin, an immense lock with iron bridge, and an inner dock of sufficient area to accommodate some hundreds of the largest-sized ships. The cost of the docks when completed will be about 200,000*l*.

YARMOUTH.—A few days since a shark got entangled in the nets of a boat about 18 miles off this port. He was following the shoals of herrings, and having got into the net he plunged at a tremendous rate, and did much damage to five nets. He was ultimately killed after a stubborn fight, by several smart blows over his snout with a hatchet, but not before he had seized one of the crew by the arm, and somewhat injured him. The shark was brought on shore and exhibited to the public. He measured five feet and a half in length, and weighed about 80lbs.

Ireland.

THE CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.—A meeting of the four Archbishops and two suffragans from each of the provinces, was held in Dublin on Tuesday to consider the condition of the Catholic University, and to devise means which will, in the language of the Freeman, "improve its efficiency and render it fully worthy of its exalted object." As the university is generally known to have proved a failure, it is understood that this meeting is more of a political than of an administrative character, and that the object of the prelates is to issue a new document against the "godless" colleges.

LORD DERBY AND HIS TENANTRY.—All doubt concerning Lord Derby's intentions in reference to the tenantry on his estate is now at an end. On Wednesday the 19th ult. notices to quit were served on every person on the estate with the exception of four, viz., the widow and brother of Mr. Crowe, and two Scotchmen. Even the parish priest, the Rev. Patrick Hickey, was included among those served with the notice. The Freeman's Journal, in adverting to this circumstance, says that this eviction is to be resented from the Giant's Causeway to Cape Clear. The whole priesthood of Ireland, it says, are involved in this outrage upon the priest of Doon; and every priest in Ireland, be he parish priest or curate, "must regard it as an offence to his cloth and to the sacred office he holds." The county of Limerick is to take the initiative, and every county in Ireland, it is promised, will, each in its turn, have its indignation meeting to resent "the outrage upon the people." Since the notices to quit were issued two brothers, named O'Brien, who were under notice of eviction by the late Mr. Crowe at the period of his assassination, in July last, have been arrested and committed to the county gaol.

THE MURDER OF MR. ELY.—On Saturday two subconstables of Carrickfergus arrested at Kilroot a man whose appearance resembles that of Delany, the murderer of Mr. Ely, near Borris-in-Ossory, on the 5th of November last, who has so long escaped the vigilance of the authorities. The man has been recently in the Donegal militia, and states that his name is Stafford, but he has been sent to Belfast for further inquiry.

THE GALWAY PACKET STATION.—Sir Cusack Roney has written a letter to the Dublin papers, asserting that "it is the intention of the present Government to endeavour to set aside the contract with the Lever company for the conveyance of the American mails through Ireland, and the effort is to be made next session of Parliament, by means of the reappointment of the committee on packet contracts, of which Mr. Cobden was chairman." The Freeman's Journal expresses entire disbelief of this statement; and the Globe observes "that the committee on packet contracts will be reappointed is most likely; but that 'the means' of annulling a Government contract should be the reappointment of an independent committee, whose report no one can anticipate, is too ridiculous to need contradiction."

THE MARCHIONESS OF LONDONDERRY AND HER TENANTRY.—The annual entertainment given by the Marchioness of Londonderry to her tenantry took place last week in the handsome village of Carnlough, near Belfast. After dinner the Marchioness addressed the tenantry at some length, and expressed her satisfaction at the improvements everywhere visible. She said that she had always carefully avoided interfering or entering into religious argument, and respecting every one's conscientious belief in their own creed; but without at all presuming to offer opinions, it was impossible not to observe that one result of the much-talked of revivals had been the closing of the public-houses and the establishment of greater sobriety and temperance, which must have a beneficial effect on a population where the reverse was the besetting sin. Lord Adolphus Vane Tempest, in replying on behalf of the army to the toast of "The Army," gave the following account of his retirement from the service:—

"It might not be known to some of them that he no longer remained in the active service of that profession which for 17 years he consistently followed. He would not detain them with the reasons which induced him to pursue such a course; but he would content himself by saying this much—that he found the position of being an officer in her Majesty's Guards, instead of being one of advantage, or of comparative superiority, as it used to be, to the other branches of the army, was one that, by succumbing to the attacks of people who wrote against that service, was put in an inferiority, as he considered, to the other branches of the profession, and inferior to what he expected when he entered it. He found, in short, it would take seven more years' full service before obtaining a colonelcy, whilst others by having gone into other branches of the service were attaining the objects of an officer's ambition. This was one of his chief causes, and the other was, that his other affairs prevented him from performing and interfered with his military duties. He had, however, the satisfaction of knowing that he retained his name in the army list of his former rank, and his affection and regard must be the same for that profession which he followed for 17 years."

BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—The Aberdeen meeting was brought to a close on Thursday week, when it was officially announced that it had been the largest meeting of the Association ever held, and that the unexampled number of 2400 persons were present at the delivery of the Prince Consort's inaugural address. The total amount received from members and associates was 2763*l*.; and grants to the amount of 930*l*. were made for the furtherance of scientific objects. Before the meeting broke up it was resolved, in accordance with a communication from the Prince Consort, to assist in founding at Berlin a testimonial commemorative of the great scientific services and attainments of Baron Humboldt, to be called "the Humboldt Foundation for Physical Science and Travels."

VISIT OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION TO BALMORAL.—On Thursday week the presidents of sections, members of committee, and distinguished visitors of the Association paid a visit to Balmoral, on the invitation of the Queen. The party, to the number of 50 or 60, left Aberdeen by special train at 6 o'clock in the morning, and travelled by omnibuses and coaches from the Banchory station of the Deeside Railway to the Castle grounds. At half-past 1 o'clock the visitors arrived in the avenue of Balmoral, where preparations had been made to entertain them with an exhibition of Highland games. At 2 o'clock the Earl of Fife, Mr. Farquharson, of Invercauld, and Sir Charles Farquharson arrived with the whole of their clans and pipers, and up in the grounds on the west of the Castle. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Royal family, then walked out upon the terrace, and the games commenced, consisting chiefly of the usual course of tossing the caber, throwing the hammer, racing, and dancing. The Queen recognised Professor Owen, who, with Sir R. Murchison and Mr. John Phillips, had also the honour of dining with her Majesty in the evening; but beyond this no notice was taken of the visitors. The Queen distributed prizes to the successful competitors, and at half-past 4 the Court left the grounds. The visitors now proceeded to the ball room, where an elegant luncheon was served, and where every comfort they could desire had been provided for them. At half-past 5 they left Balmoral and arrived at Aberdeen at a quarter-past 10 on Friday morning, having thus performed a journey of 100 miles.

THE PRINCE CONSORT'S VISIT TO ABERDEEN.—The Queen has forwarded to Mrs. Thompson, the wife of Mr. Thompson, convener of the county of Aberdeen, a handsome bracelet, ornamented with precious stones, in recognition of the hospitable manner in which the Prince Consort was entertained during his recent sojourn at Banchory House while presiding at the congress of the British Association.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.—The Town Council of Edinburgh has elected Sir David Brewster Principal of the University of that city. No other candidate was proposed. This appointment creates a vacancy in the Principalship of St. Andrew's. Professor Nichol, the well-known author of many learned and popular works, is a candidate for the vacant seat.

PEDESTRIAN FEAT.—On Monday week, says the Inverness Courier, the Duke and Duchess of Montrose left Tonnadown, in Glengarry, to visit Lord Macdonald, bury, at Achnacarry House. They set off on foot, expecting to overtake their ponies, and were accompanied by a guide. When about half way the guide was dismissed, the duke conceiving that he was sufficiently acquainted with the path over the hills. Unfortunately, however, his grace turned to the left instead of the right hand, and came down upon Loch Lochy instead of Loch Arkaig. The journey, however, was proceeded with, and about 8 in the evening the Duke and Duchess arrived at Achnacarry, having travelled from 20 to 25 miles of rock, bog, and corries—a pedestrian feat which probably no lady of peerage ever surpassed.

PUGILISM.—A fight for 400*l*. to 200*l*. took place last week in a field a few miles from Tunbridge, between Sayers, the champion of England, and Brettle, of Birmingham, in the presence of a large number of persons. Only six rounds were fought, and the contest terminated in a quarter of an hour. At the commencement of the fight the odds were in favour of Sayers. At the conclusion of the second round, however, they were drawn by Sayers. In the second round, however, Brettle appeared to have the advantage, and there were cries for "a first knock-down blow," but it was not allowed. In the fifth round, however, Brettle gave Sayers such a tremendous blow that he fell, and it was then admitted that the Birmingham man had knocked his adversary down. Brettle is round had a fall which dislocated his shoulder, and this accident virtually terminated the fight. Brettle, however, stood up for a sixth round, but was so powerless from the injury to his shoulder that his blows produced no effect. Sayers then struck Brettle a tremendous right-handed hit upon his left shoulder, and he fell down suddenly with great force. His backers and the surgeon then decided that Brettle was no longer able to continue the fight, and Sayers was therefore the winner in 11 minutes only. Both the men had been well trained, and were in excellent condition.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE THAMES.—The great boat race between Robert Chambers, the champion of the Tyne, and Henry Kelly, the champion of the Thames, took place on Thursday from Putney to Mortlake, in the presence of thousands of persons who lined the shore on foot and horseback, while no less than 14 steamboats crowded with people accompanied the race. The result was the defeat of Kelly, the north countryman winning by 20 lengths, the first victory ever achieved over the champion of the London river. A great many gentlemen from the north came to town to witness the race, and very large sums changed hands upon the event.

Obituary.

HIS HIGHNESS THE RAJAH OF COORG died on the 24th ult. at his residence, 20, Clifton Villas, Warwick Road, Maida Hill West. He has resided in this country for several years, and has been in a declining state of health for some months past. His Highness was the father of the Princess Gouramma, who has been educated in this country at the Christian faith under the direction of the Queen, who stood as sponsor at her baptism.

VISCOUNT ST. VINCENT, one of the oldest members of the House of Peers, died on Sunday last at Meaford Hall, his seat in Staffordshire, in his 93d year. His lordship, Edward Jervis Jervis, Viscount St. Vincent of Meaford, in the county of Stafford, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, was second son of Mr. William Henry Ricketts, by the fourth daughter of Mr. Swynfen Jervis, and sister of Admiral Earl St. Vincent and first Viscount. He was twice married, first in 1790 to the Hon. Mary Cassandra Twisleton, second daughter of the tenth Lord Saye and Sele, which was dissolved in 1796, when he married the second daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Parker. He succeeded to the viscountcy and estates on the death of his uncle, Admiral Earl St. Vincent, in 1823. He leaves surviving issue a son and a daughter by his second marriage—namely, the Hon. Edward S. Jervis and the Hon. Mary Anne, widow of the late Colonel Dyce Sombre. His lordship is succeeded in the title by his grandson, Carnegie Robert John, son of the late Hon. Robert John Jervis by Sophia, daughter of Mr. George Narbonne Vincent. The present Viscount was born in 1825, and married in 1848 the youngest daughter of Mr. John Baskervyle Glegg, of Withington Hall, Cheshire.

GENERAL EVELEIGH, R.A., who bore the oldest commission extant in the Royal Artillery, died at his residence at Standen, near Newport, Isle of Wight, on the 24th ult., in his 87th year. He served in the Corunna campaign, and received the war medal and one clasp for Sabagen and Benevente. He attained the rank of general in 1854.

LIEUT.-GENERAL MORSE, of her Majesty's Indian forces, was killed on the evening of Friday, the 16th ult., by being thrown from his dog cart. Driving home in the evening from Reading to Farley Hill House, Swallowfield, he came in collision with a phaeton with such force that he and the butler were thrown out into a ditch, and the dog-cart was overturned in the road. General Morse and the butler were picked up in the ditch, both in an unconscious state. The butler recovered, but the general had sustained concussion of the brain, and died on the 20th ult. A coroner's inquest was held, and a verdict of Accidental Death returned.

CAPTAIN VANSITTART, R.N., C.B., commander of her Majesty's ship Magicienne, died on the 17th of July off Kintaug or Lookong, near Ningpo, from the effects of the wound by which he lost his leg in the engagement in the Peiho river on the 25th June, aggravated by fever and ague arising from exposure in the swamp on that occasion. Captain Vansittart entered the navy in 1832, joined the Cornwallis in 1841 under Admiral Sir William Parker; served in the operations against Tsekee, Chapoo, and Woosung, for which he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant in December, 1842. As flag-lieutenant he accompanied Sir Thomas Cochrane's expedition in the Brunei river, and shortly after was engaged as aide-de-camp to Captain Rodney Mundy in the arduous pursuit of the Sultan of Brunei. For his conduct on that occasion and other services he was promoted to the rank of commander in January, 1847. Soon after he commissioned the Frolic, 16, and was on the Mediterranean station until 1849, when she was paid off. He obtained his commission as captain in 1854. In the following year he commissioned the Magicienne, and was most actively employed in the Baltic, where he distinguished himself on many occasions in the destruction of forts, and had command of a division of gun and mortar boats at the bombardment of Sweaborg. For this service he was made a Companion of the Bath. After the war he proceeded in the Magicienne first to the Black Sea, then to the Pacific, and afterwards to China. He did good service in command of a squadron acting against pirates in the vicinity of Hong Kong, in September and October last, destroying 150 junks and fast-boats, and killing and capturing 458 pirates; and off Amoy, in October, he destroyed 60 pirate junks and row-boats. The Magicienne was then appointed to the special service of the British Minister in China, and left Shanghai on the 15th June with the Hon. F. Bruce and suite for the entrance to the Peiho, on their way to Pekin, to exchange the ratified treaty. The funeral took place at Shanghai in the evening of the 18th July, and was attended by the Ministers of England and France, the foreign Consuls, a large number of the foreign residents at Shanghai, and nearly 500 men from the ships of war in harbour.

COMMANDER FREDERIC WHITE, R.N., died on the 10th ult. He entered the navy in 1805, and served in the Africa at the battle of Trafalgar, where he was wounded. He returned to England in 1806, but soon afterwar is joined the Orestes, and was present at Lord Gambier's attack upon Copenhagen in 1807. He served in the Milford, Cossack, and Lavinia, on the coast of Spain, and at the defence of Cadiz, and became a Lieutenant in 1812. In 1814 he joined the Rinaldo, in which vessel he escorted the Allied Sovereigns to England, and then proceeded to the West Indies. In 1843 he was appointed to the Ocean, 80, guardship at Sheerness, from which he was promoted [commander. He enjoyed a pension for wounds received in the service, and the Greenwich Hospital out pension. He had received a medal, and was gazetted in 1805 for his valuable services.

MR. GEORGE KREHMER, Russian Consul-General, died suddenly on Saturday morning at his residence, 2, Chester Terrace, Chester Square, it is supposed from disease of the heart. He had for a long period been engaged in diplomacy in Russia, America, and England.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

The prices of all descriptions of wool continue firm, the stocks moderate; in fact very small indeed for the season of the year. The consumers are all fully employed and likely to be so for some time to come, and the price of wool is more likely to advance than otherwise.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 26.

The supply of Beasts is large, but the quality is only middling, consequently prices are not lower, although some inferior descriptions cannot be sold. The number of Sheep is small, and [illegible] the best mutton that we can not offer a [illegible], although there is a disposition to take lower rates. Calves are selling about the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Russia there are 1731 Beasts, 5470 Sheep, 37 Calves, and 40 Pigs; from Scotland, 99 Beasts; from Ireland, 650; and [illegible] from the northern and midland counties.

THURSDAY, Sept. 29.

The number of Beasts is large but the average quality only middling. Prices are about as on Monday last. The supply of Sheep is small, so also is the demand. A few of the choicest descriptions are more readily disposed of; in other respects trade is no better. Good Calves are in demand. Our foreign supply consists of 260 Beasts, 1250 Sheep, and 35 Calves. The number of Milch Cows is 114.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 26.

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was small, the quality indifferent. Fine samples brought the prices of this day se'nnight, but others met a slow sale. The attendance was good, and the trade [illegible] Foreign was in more general request, but being held for some advance the amount of business transacted was not large. Barley of all descriptions is firm at late rates. Beans sell slowly. Hog Peas are mastered in value; white are inquired for, and bring rather more money. Russian Oats being in sight advance upon the prices of this day week, but other descriptions are rather cheaper. There is no alteration in the value of Flour.

FRIDAY, Sept. 30.

The weather has been boisterous, with much rain during the past week, and continues wet. Although the value of Wheat, excepting in Liverpool, has been generally well maintained, there has been a want of inactivity in the trade generally. Spring Corn of all kinds has been a dull sale, and each description is quoted rather lower in many markets. Less business has prevailed in the Flour trade, but prices are unaltered. The arrivals of grain and seed from vessels from Southern Europe off the coast are considerable this week, as are also the sales; the sales include Berdiansk Wheat at 43s. 8d. and Taganrog Ghirka at 42s. 3d. to 42s. 6d. per 492 lbs.; Ibrail Maize at 26s. to 26s. 10½d. per 480 lbs.; Galatz at 29s. to 29s. 3d., Foxanian at 28s. 3d., Odessa at 27s. 3d. to 28s. 3d., each per 492 lbs.; Egyptian Barley at 22s., c. f. and i., Odessa at 21s. 6d. per 400 lbs.; Taganrog Oats at 17s. per qr.; Odessa Linseed at 46s. 6d. per qr. delivered. The arrivals of English grain and foreign Barley and Oats are to a fair extent, but small of Wheat. This morning's market was badly attended, and the little English Wheat on the stands met a slow sale at Monday's prices; we observe no alteration in the value of foreign, which is held firmly, although the inquiry is limited; in Black Sea cargoes on the coast there has been again an extensive business, at rather more money. Barley, Beans, and Peas bring Monday's quotations. For Russian Oats there is a fair demand at an advance of 6d. per qr.; other descriptions are unaltered in value.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, Sept. 27.—With the exception of about 13,000 qrs. of Indian Corn (from the Mediterranean) the week's arrivals of grain and Flour are very moderate; but notwithstanding the market is amply supplied with samples from granary, and we only want more customers. No change of moment has occurred in prices during the week, and buyers have taken merely sufficient to satisfy the regular consumptive demand. The market to-day was only noticeable by steadiness in price and a moderate demand. No change therefore is made in the quotations of last week.

FRIDAY, Sept. 30.—The grain market was thinly attended. Wheat in slow request, owing to a required advance of 2d. per cental. Flour steady. Indian Corn rather cheaper. Egyptian Beans, 33s. Other articles quiet, and without quotable change in value.

A SINE-QUA-NON FOR RAINY WEATHER AND ALL TIMES.—BERDOE'S UNIVERSAL CAPES effectually exclude rain, yet freely admit air. The extensive sale of these respectable and economical garments is their best recommendation.—W. BERDOE, Tailor, 96, New Bond Street, W.; and 69, Cornhill (north side), E.C.

PRIZE MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION 1855.

METCALFE, BINGLEY, AND CO.'S New Pattern and Penetrating Tooth Brushes, Penetrating unbleached Hair Brushes, Improved Flesh and Clothes Brushes, and genuine Smyrna Sponges; and every description of Brush, Comb, and Perfumery for the Toilet. The Tooth Brushes search thoroughly between the divisions of the Teeth and clean them most effectually—the hairs never come loose. M., B., and Co. are sole makers of the Oatmeal and Camphor and Orris Root Soaps—sold in Tablets (bearing their names and address) at 6*d*. each; of METCALFE'S celebrated Alkaline Tooth Powder, 2*s*. per box; and of the New Bouquets.—Sole Establishment, 130B and 131, Oxford St. 2d and 3d doors west from Holles St., London, W.

WHITE AND SOUND TEETH are indispensable to personal attraction and to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food. ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of oriental ingredients, is of inestimable value in improving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath sweet and pure. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a pearl-like whiteness. As the most efficient and fragant aromatic purifier of the breath, teeth, and gums ever known, ROWLANDS' Odonto has for a long series of years occupied a distinguished place at the toilets of the sovereigns and the nobility throughout Europe: while the general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is universally held.—Price, 2*s*. 9*d*. per box. CAUTION.—The words "ROWLANDS' Odonto" are on the Label, and "A ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved on the Government stamp affixed on each box.—Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

COOL AND REFRESHING BALM.—Among the many luxuries of the present age, none can be obtained possessing the manifold virtues of OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA. If applied to the roots and body of the hair, it imparts the most delightful coolness, with an agreeable fragrance of perfume. It also at this period of the season prevents the hair from falling off, or if already too thin or turning grey, will stop its further progress, and soon restore it again. Those who really desire to have beautiful hair, either with wave or curl, should use it daily. It is also celebrated for strengthening the hair, freeing it from scurf, and producing new hair, whiskers, and moustaches. Established upwards of 30 years. No imitative wash can equal it. Price 3*s*. 6*d*., 6*s*., and 11*s*. only.—C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 13, Wellington Street North, Strand, W.C.

DR. DE JONGH'S

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL, administered with the greatest success in cases of CONSUMPTION, GENERAL DEBILITY, RHEUMATISM, INFANTILE WASTING, AND ALL THE DISORDERS OF CHILDREN ARISING FROM DEFECTIVE NUTRITION, is the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, unquestionably the most economical of all kinds. Its immeasurable therapeutic superiority over every other variety is attested by innumerable spontaneous testimonials from Physicians and Surgeons of European reputation.

OPINION OF EDWIN LANKESTER, ESQ., M.D., F.R.S., Late Lecturer on the Practice of Physic at St. George's Medical School, Superintendent of the Food Collection at the South Kensington Museum, &c.

"I believe that the purity and genuineness of this Oil is secured in its preparation by the personal attention of so good a Chemist and intelligent a Physician as DR. DE JONGH, who has also written the best medical treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence I should deem the Cod Liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medical efficacy."

Sold ONLY IN IMPERIAL half pints, 2*s*. 6*d*.: pints, 4*s*. 9*d*.; quarts, 9*s*., capsuled, and labelled with DR. DE JONGH'S stamp and signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE IS GENUINE, in the provinces by respectable Chemists,

IN LONDON BY HIS SOLE AGENTS,

ANSAR, HARFORD, AND CO., 77, Strand, W.C.

CAUTION.—Strenuously resist proposed substitutions.

EPPS'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA.—Produced, in 1839, specially for the use of Homœopathic Patients, to provide them with a beverage highly nutritious and free from those effects of Coffee and Tea which to many persons are pernicious. Rendered attractive to the taste by its delicious aroma and grateful smoothness, it has become adopted by the public generally for breakfast, luncheon, and supper. It is sold by the principal Grocers at 1*s*. 6*d*. per lb., in 1 lb., ½ lb. and ¼ lb. packets. Each packet is labelled. "JAMES EPPS, Homœopathic Chemist, London."

FRY AND SONS' CHOCOLATES AND COCOAS—Victoria Chocolate, Bon Bons, Soluble Cocoa, &c., in great variety. These delicious beverages are now sold at very moderate prices, and many of them are highly economical. FRY'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA is an article of unexceptionable quality. FRY'S SOLUBLE COCOA, in Hexagon packets, and FRY'S PEARL COCOA, are strongly recommended.

FRY AND SONS, MANUFACTURERS TO THE QUEEN.

Liebig, the celebrated Chemist, asserts that nitrogen is essential to the healthy action of the bile, and the grand sustenance, and invigoration of the body. No stronger recommendation of Cocoa and Chocolate can therefore be given than the following statement:—Caffeine and Theine each contain only about 29 per cent., whilst Theobromine (or essence of Cocoa) contains upwards of 35 per cent. of nitrogen

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—CONSUMPTION PREVENTED.—Influenza, colds, and fevers are now prevailing with unusual severity; though easily cured at first, when neglected they frequently induce serious disease, of which the chief and most fatal is consumption. If HOLLOWAY'S Pills be resorted to on the first appearance of any of these diseases, and, if the symptoms be very urgent, the Ointment well rubbed twice a day on the back and chest, they will cease to cause alarm, and all consumptive tendency will certainly be banished, and the body, freed from all impurities, will be left in a healthier state than it was before the illness; the natural strength and vigour likewise will soon be restored to their natural standard.

News of the Week.

MR. BUCHANAN, the President of the United States, has despatched General SCOTT, Lieutenant-General of the American army, to British Columbia, for the purpose of settling the differences which have arisen from General HARNEY's seizure of the Island of San Juan. The selection of an officer of so much experience and judgment as General SCOTT for this delicate and important mission, is regarded at Washington and New York as a proof of the earnest desire of the United States Government to bring the question at issue to a pacific settlement. Mr. BUCHANAN, as Secretary of State, negotiated the treaty of 1846, and is therefore well acquainted with its provisions and with the grounds upon which Great Britain claims the Island of San Juan. This treaty, which concluded by an amicable compromise the controversy between Great Britain and the United States in regard to the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, provided that the line of frontier should be continued westward from a point already determined by a previous treaty "along the 49th parallel of north latitude to the middle of the channel which separates the continent from the Island of Vancouver, and thence southerly through the middle of the said channel and of Fuca Straits to the Pacific Ocean." It further provided that "the navigation of the whole of the said channel and straits south of the 49th parallel of north latitude should remain free and open to both parties." Now it appears that there are two channels between the American continent and Vancouver's Island,—the one a broad estuary forming a portion of the Straits of Fuca and now called the Gulf of Georgia, and the other a narrow passage called the Canal de Haro, separating the island of San Juan from Vancouver's Island. A line drawn through the middle of the former leaves the Island of San Juan far within the limits of what have hitherto been considered as British waters; while the Canal de Haro lies far to the westward of the mid-channel between Vancouver's Island and the continent, and is not struck anywhere by the 49th parallel of latitude. The question at issue is therefore whether the line which the treaty intended to be continued through the "middle of the channel" is to be drawn through the narrow passage which separates Vancouver's Island from San Juan, or through the broad gulf which lies between it and the continent. The American Commissioners contend that the narrow passage was intended to be the boundary, while the British Commissioners assert that the existence of such a passage was unknown to the statesmen who negotiated the treaty of 1846, and that by giving to Great Britain and the United States the free navigation of the channel which was to be the boundary of their respective territories, the treaty manifestly referred to the broad gulf or estuary which divides the empires. General HARNEY's seizure of the island while this question was still under discussion might easily have brought about a collision with our small military force in British Columbia and our more powerful naval squadron in the Pacific; but Admiral BAYNES, the commander of the latter, though urged by Governor DOUGLAS to take active measures for the expulsion of the Americans, declined to resort to hostilities without orders from the Home Government. It is now hoped that on receiving General SCOTT's report, Mr. BUCHANAN will disavow the seizure of the island, and that all further disputes will be prevented by bringing the frontier question to a speedy settlement.

Telegraphic despatches in anticipation of the Bombay and Calcutta mails reached town yesterday. It is reported from Calcutta that 8000 of the disbanded Indian army have accepted the bounty and consented to go to China. The Nana and Begum are in Nepaul, Feroze Shah is in Central India, and disturbances seem imminent at Jeypore and on the coast of Kattywar.

The Revenue Returns for the year and quarter, which were published on Saturday, proved to be more favourable than was stated in our last Number, the increase for the year amounting to 828,798*l.*, and the increase on the quarter to 300,724*l.*

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Friday week the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Helena, drove to the Abergeldie Woods. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went to the Abergeldie Woods, which were driven for deer. In the evening her Majesty gave a small dance to which several of the neighbouring gentry were invited. On Saturday the Queen drove in the neighbourhood of the Castle. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. The Prince of Wales rode to Invercauld. On Sunday the Queen, Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie; the Rev. Dr. Lee officiated. On Monday the Queen, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and Princess Alice, rode to Lochnagar. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. On Tuesday the Queen, Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice went to Balloch Bui, where the woods were driven for deer. Sir G. C. Lewis left the Castle.

THE DUCHESS OF KENT is still at Norris Castle, in the Isle of Wight. Her Royal Highness's health is quite re-established, and she will return to Frogmore towards the end of this month.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.—Dr. Enrico Lemmi, who distinguished himself in the Sardinian army under King Charles Albert in the war of 1848, and was subsequently Secretary to the Sardinian Embassy at Constantinople, has been appointed Italian tutor to the Prince of Wales.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—A new writ has been issued for Ayrshire, vacant by the death of Lord James Stuart. The candidates at the field are Sir Campbell, of Craigie, and Sir James Fergusson, of Kilkerran, the former in the Liberal, the latter in the Conservative interest.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF THE CAPE.—It was stated by the managing director of the Cape Town Railway, at a meeting of the Company on Friday, that Sir George Grey is no longer the "late" Governor of the Cape, but is forthwith to return to the colony as governor, having been reinstated in his office from which he was recalled by the Derby Administration.

THE REVENUE.—The Revenue returns for the year and quarter ended the 30th September show a net increase of 828,798*l.* on the year, and a net increase of 300,724*l.* on the quarter. The year's account shows an increase in the Customs of 1,335,935*l.*, Excise, 264,000*l.*, Stamps, 259,638*l.*; Taxes, 53,967*l.*, Post Office, 230,000*l.*; Crown Lands, 4639; Miscellaneous, 157,138*l.*; the only item in which there is a decrease being the Income Tax, in which there is a decrease of 2,166,519*l.* The quarter's account shows an increase in the Customs of 461,144*l.*, Excise, 464,000*l.*; Stamps, 106,000*l.*; Taxes, 5000*l.*; Post Office, 35,000*l.*; Crown Lands, 1639*l.* On the other hand there is a decrease in the Income Tax of 580,000; Miscellaneous, 191,759*l.*

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Constitutionnel of Thursday contains an article signed by its chief editor, stating that "the preliminaries of peace of Villafranca had rescued Italy from every foreign intervention, no matter under what name or from what quarter it might come. France confined herself to giving the Italians proper advice, which, if followed by them, would have assured the prosperity of Central Italy; but, having in vain offered advice, she cannot go so far as to dictate orders to Italy." The Imperial Court will quit Biarritz on the 10th inst., and arrive at Bordeaux on the following day, in accordance with an invitation from the municipality of that city. It was confidently expected that the Emperor, as on a former occasion, would take advantage of this visit to make a speech on his foreign policy; but his Majesty has declined to be present at a banquet offered him by the Prefect as an opportunity for making the speech. The Emperor and Empress, however, will be present at a grand ball to be given in their honour on the evening of the 11th, and will arrive in Paris on the 12th inst. The Imperial Prince will travel direct from Biarritz to Paris. Lord Cowley left Paris on Sunday for Biarritz, in order it is said to arrange with Count Walewski for the joint expedition to China. Marshal Canrobert and Marshal the Duke of Magenta have quitted Paris for Nancy and Lille to resume the command of their military districts. Generals Changarnier and Bedeau have availed themselves of the amnesty and returned to Paris. The Patrie states that the Mediterranean squadron has received orders to put to sea immediately, but is unacquainted with the object and duration of the expedition. A French force of about 20,000 men has been concentrated on the frontiers of Morocco under the command of General Martimprey, and it is said that their operations will not be confined to the protection of the frontiers of Algeria, but that they will occupy a portion of the territory of Morocco, of which Ouchda is the centre, and from which point the recent incursions by the Moors have been made. It is said that a special corps d'armée of 15,000 men is to be formed, including three new regiments of Zouaves, for the expedition to China. Voluntary enlistment, it is thought, will go far towards composing them, but draughts will also be made from regiments of the line. It is further stated that a portion of the French troops intended for China will embark at Marseilles for Egypt, and be conveyed thence to their destination in British transports.

SPAIN.—The Cortes were to be opened on Saturday without the usual speech by the Queen. The Madrid journals announce that provision will be made in the budget for an army of 100,000 men, and that discretionary power will be left to the Government to increase this number. It is asserted that England will not offer any opposition to the measures Spain may be obliged to take against Morocco.

SWITZERLAND.—The treaty of Zurich will be signed in the course of a few days, in consequence of instructions from Biarritz. There will be three instruments of peace. The first, signed by the Plenipotentiaries of the three Powers, concerns only the conclusion of peace and frontier line; the second, Austro-French, refers to the cession of Lombardy, and renews the stipulations of the preliminaries of Villafranca; the third, Franco-Sardinian, sanctions the cession of Lombardy. It is asserted that Austria has consented to reduce the debt of Lombardy to be borne by Piedmont from 400 millions to little more than half that sum. A congress will be accepted for the settlement of the affairs of Central Italy.

DENMARK.—At the sitting of the Council of the Kingdom on Wednesday, the President in answer to several questions said that the Government was making continued efforts to join Holstein constitutionally to the remainder of the kingdom.

PRUSSIA.—The railway bridge over the Rhine at Cologne was inaugurated on the 3d inst. with great ceremony, in the presence of the Prince of Prussia.

SAXE-COBURG.—The Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha

has returned an answer to the remonstrance which was made to him by the Court of Vienna on the 4th ult., in which it is said that he has maintained his own independence and that of his people with becoming dignity. He has also called upon the Prussian Government to take such measures as may be necessary to prevent the recurrence of any similar interference on the part of Austria with any of the other States of the German Confederation.

AUSTRIA.—The Archduchess Sophia, mother of the Emperor of Austria, is about to leave Vienna for the Palace of Possenhofen, in Bavaria, with the intention of remaining there for an indefinite period. The Viennese papers say that this retirement of the Princess is regarded as a proof that the influence of the ultra-catholic party at Vienna is on the decline.

BAVARIA.—It is said that the Grand Duke Ferdinand of Tuscany and his younger brothers are expected at Munich, to take up their permanent residence in that capital, until the affairs of Italy are definitively settled. The King of Bavaria, in recognition of the services of the Messrs. Schlagintweit, whose valuable collections made during a three years' exploratory journey in Upper India and Thibet are deposited in the India House in London, has conferred upon them titles of nobility.

ITALY.—A fatal disturbance occurred at Parma on Wednesday last. Colonel Anviti, late president of the Military Commission of the ex-Duchy was discovered to have arrived at Parma in disguise, by the Bologna road. He had come for the purpose of getting up a conspiracy, and had remained concealed until Wednesday, when he was recognised by the populace. Heroic efforts were made to save him, but the troops being quartered in the citadel, which is at half an hour's distance, and the door of the guard-house, in which four or five carabineers were stationed, and in which he had taken refuge, having been forced, Colonel Anviti was killed. The greatest tranquillity now reigns in the city. The following is an abstract of the circular note which has been sent by the Sardinian Minister o Foreign Affairs to the diplomatic agents of that country at the Courts of London, Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg, for the purpose of communicating it to those Governments:—

"It commences by forcibly setting forth arguments in favour of the formation of a strong and independent Kingdom of Upper Italy, sufficiently powerful to counterbalance the influence of Austria, and keep in check her domineering tendencies. The constitution of such a State would, it urges, dispel the apprehensions and tranquillise the mind of Europe, at the same time that it fulfilled the just wishes, so loudly and unanimously expressed, of those Italian countries which have lately shaken off tyrannical Governments. The note points out the impossibility of Piedmont's resisting Austria should that Power at any future time think fit to attack her, unless she be put in a more favourable position for so doing than has hitherto been secured to her. Intrenched in Venice and the quadrilateral, Austria will always press upon Italy, if there be not in that country a Power capable of inspiring her with respect. With Austrian fortresses overlooking her Lombard provinces, and with Austrian Dukes established by Austrian influence in the other countries adjacent, Sardinia would find herself hemmed in by hostile Governments, and her resistance to an attack might be desperate but must be ineffectual. The note points out that peace made on such bases would be in reality only a truce, to be broken by Austria whenever she saw what she held to be a favourable opportunity. It then calls attention to the fact that the people of Central Italy, with a true instinct of the necessities of the case, have shown by their recent conduct how indispensable they deem the formation of the Kingdom of Upper Italy. Forgetting the long standing feelings of rivalry, and discarding old jealousies, the different States have voted one after the other with the utmost order and unanimity their own annexation to Piedmont. Their wish, the note says, has the strongest claim to respect; its realisation would not be the sanction or introduction of a new and subversive principle, or of one opposed to European law and precedent, since the principle that would be recognised has already been acted upon in various European countries, in Greece, in Belgium, and in the Danubian Principalities, and since it is to its application that the present Emperor of the French owes his crown, and the present dynasty in England their first introduction as sovereigns of Great Britain."

It is officially announced that the French army of Italy will winter in Lombardy. General Ulloa and M. Montanelli have arrived in Paris from Florence. A public proclamation of the Provisional Government was posted up at Florence on Saturday announcing that from this time forward all Government powers will be exercised in the name of Victor Emmanuel, the King chosen by the people. Another proclamation announces the adoption of the monetary system of Sardinia, and states that in future the coinage of Tuscany will bear the effigy of Victor Emmanuel. The Savoy cross and Sardinian standard have been hoisted on the Palazzo Vecchio. The Governor of Bologna, on the proposition of the Minister Marquis de Pepoli, has decreed the abolition of the customs line on the frontiers of Modena and Tuscany, and the adoption of the customs tariff of Sardinia. Accounts from Rome state that the Pope on being informed of the recent answer of the King of Sardinia to the deputation of the National Assembly of Bologna, gave orders that the Count Vittoria de la Minerva, Minister of Sardinia at Rome, should receive his passports. This of course implies a complete rupture of diplomatic relations between Rome and Sardinia. The Papal garrison at Ancona has been reinforced, and there is a strong impression that a collision with the army of Central Italy is at hand. General Fanti, who was recently appointed to the command-in-chief of the military forces of the Central Italian League, has issued an order of the day, calling upon his soldiers to show devotion to their flag, faith in their rights, and perseverance in their object; qualities which, combined, will assuredly lead to the triumph of independence. He says that the tricolour, with the old cross of Savoy, shall precede them in the fresh battles that will for ever free Italy from the stranger. Garibaldi is also displaying his wonted energy and decision; he has summoned the Italians of the Legations to arms, and has opened, with a contribution of 5000f., a subscription fixed at 1,000,000f. for the purchase of muskets. Orders have already been sent to Marseilles to purchase forthwith for the Duchies 3800 common muskets, 2000 rifles of Vincennes, and 1000 rifles of another description. The clerical party at Rome having published a statement that the soldiers of the insurgents had entered the convent of Verrucchio and ill-treated the nuns, the Monitore of Bologna publishes a letter from the Abbess of the Convent, declaring that she had never seen a single soldier enter that building. It appears that it was the Pope's own soldiers of the Swiss guard who invaded the convent, and that it was not at Verruechio, but at Perugia. Accounts from Naples state that 14 persons belonging to the highest families had been arrested, including the Baron Galotti, the Marquis d'Afflito, and the Marquis de Bella Caracciolo. They are accused of giving parties for the discussion of politics. An outbreak is said to have occurred at Aquila, in the Abruzzi. From the excited state of the northern districts 15,000 soldiers have been sent to the frontiers, and the number is expected to be increased to 25,000. The King, who has been to Gaeta, has returned to Naples. The French liner, Hellespont, was stranded last week at Posilipo, and, as it is found impossible to get her off, it is reported that she is to be broken up.

RUSSIA.—Schamyl and his son were presented to the Emperor Alexander at Tchougoniev on the 27th ult. The Emir was much moved by the kindness of the Emperor. After assisting at a military review he returned on the 28th to Kharkov to be present at a ball given in his honour.

TURKEY.—Accounts from Constantinople of the 28th ult. state that Omar Pasha, chief of the Army of Bagdad, has been deprived of his command in consequence of serious abuses of his authority; and that the Sultan was about to send Mehemed Pasha to Smyrna, in order to invite Prince Alfred to visit Constantinople. The conspiracy discovered on the 15th ult. at Constantinople, in spite of the efforts of the Turkish Government to diminish its importance and to conceal the true objects of the plot, is now known to have been on a most extensive scale, and to have comprised so large a number of persons that it is surprising it should not have been discovered until two days before the one appointed for its execution. The following details gathered from the various papers contain the leading incidents of the plot:—

"Two years ago a dervish named Halidi, who enjoyed a high reputation in his own country, namely, Soulananié, in the province of Bagdad, came to Constantinople previously to proceeding on a pilgrimage to Mecca. Everything seemed to him so corrupt in the Turkish capital, and the fate of the Ottoman empire appeared to him so certain, that he renounced his pilgrimage and set himself up as the regenerator of Islamism. His project, which at first was known to only a few friends, soon acquired a number of partisans, who went on increasing. Some months ago the plot began to receive a serious organisation, and reckoned its members by thousands. Among its leading adherents was the Circassian Hussein Pasha, a brave resolute man, distinguished in 1855 in the Kars campaign. He was then colonel of the first regiment of Arabistan, and so greatly distinguished himself in the repulse of the Russian attack, that his conduct on that occasion won him a general's rank. Less fortunate last year in Montenegro, where his corps d'armée was roughly handled, and he himself had two horses killed under him, and escaped most narrowly, he was removed from his command. He went to Constantinople to demand a court martial, which was refused. Left without employment, and considering himself unjustly treated, he became a malcontent. He deemed himself dishonoured and his character becoming soured, he fell in with the dervish, and readily joined in his plans. They next secured Djafer Pasha, an Albanian of high family, who in former days was more than once in arms against the Porte, but who, during the campaign on the Danube, joined the Sultan's army with 2000 of his countrymen armed and equipped at his own charge. After the war they promised him much, but performed nothing; they would not even let him return to his own country, but compelled him to live in Constantinople on his pay of about 7l. sterling a month. They next endeavoured to seduce from his allegiance Hassan Pasha, General of Artillery who commanded the Bosphorus, with all its batteries and military posts. Several colonels and chiefs of battalions, almost all belonging to the artillery, a number of sailors, priests, students, and Government clerks were then admitted into the plot, which reckoned, in Constantinople alone, from 10,000 to 12,000 members, and throughout the whole empire 70,000, all of whom engaged to sacrifice their lives in the cause. The object of the conspirators was to seize on the Sultan on the 17th September at the mosque of Tophané; to kill him and all the Ministers and other personages in high office with him; and to proclaim as Sultan, Abdul-aziz Effendi, the Sultan's brother. Hassan Pasha, commander of the Bosphorus, is said to have disapproved of the intention to put the Sultan and the Ministers to death, and therefore resolved to reveal the plot. He accordingly put Riza Pasha, Minister of War, in possession of the whole scheme. Prompt measures were at once taken. On the 15th the arrests commenced, in the course of a few days 800 persons were in custody, and fresh and important arrests have since been made. Riza Pasha, the Minister of War, himself presided at a number of them, which took place in the three mosques of Hamet, Soulemanie, and Mehemed. He examined the prisoners at his official residence, and thence sent them to Couleli, where the other Ministers, under the presidency of Aali Pasha, sat as Commissioners to investigate the affair. Almost all the conspirators have boldly avowed their participation in the plot. Djafer Pasha, as already stated, jumped into the Bosphorus as he was proceeding under a guard of soldiers, to Couleli, and was supposed to have been drowned, but as he was a swimmer of rare strength and expertness, many believe that he may have escaped. Since the revelation of the plot Constantinople has been traversed day and night by patrols, and the greater part of the garrison of Pera had been transferred to Stamboul, showing that the Christian quarters of Constantinople had nothing to fear."

INDIA.—Telegraphic despatches were received yesterday in anticipation of the Bombay and Calcutta mails, with news from Bombay to the 12th Sept., and from Calcutta to Aug. 31. The following are the details:—

Calcutta.—It is reported that the disbanded European troops have accepted the bounty, and consented to go to China. The Government has increased the licence-tax to an income-tax 7*d.* in the pound on all incomes above 25*l.* a year; officials and landlords are exempted. The Council refuses to pass the Bill without a clear statement of receipts and expenditure, and denounces the clause exempting officials.

Central India and Nepaul.—The Nana and Begum are in Nepaul, watched by Gen. Romaine. Feroze Shah is in Central India. Disturbances seem imminent on the coast of Kattywar. A report states that the people of Jeypore will not comply with the disarming order. Captain Richards, of the Central India Field Force, has compelled Chuttersall, a leading rebel, to surrender.

Bombay.—The ship Admiral Boxer has been wrecked 3 miles from Kurrachee; all lives saved.

CHINA.—China dates to August reached Bombay to the 2d ult. but there was no additional news of importance. A Supplement to the London Gazette, published on Wednesday night, contains the correspondence which has taken place between the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and the Hon. F. W. Bruce, her Majesty's Minister in China. The first despatch is from the Earl of Malmesbury to Mr. Bruce, dated March 1, 1859; and the last from Lord John Russell to Mr. Bruce, written as late as the 26th of September and containing the views of the present Government on the late affair of the Peiho. Mr. Bruce's despatches show that the Chinese made every effort to evade the ratification of the Treaty at Pekin. After having in vain proposed a re-discussion of the Treaty, on the ground that it had been "signed under pressure," they suggested an exchange of ratifications at Shanghai, and a land journey from that place to Pekin, instead of an official visit to Pekin in the first instance, the object being to meet the prejudices of the old party in China by placing the Ambassadors in the degrading position hitherto occupied by foreign envoys. It was therefore determined to take the course prescribed by the instructions of the Home Government and force the passage of the Peiho. The following is Lord J. Russell's letter:—

"Foreign Office, Sept. 26, 1859.

"Sir,—I have received and laid before the Queen your despatches of the 30th of May, 1st and 14th of June, and 5th, 13th, and 15th of July, the first three giving an account of your proceedings up to the time of your departure from Shanghae for the mouth of the Peiho, and the last three containing a report of the events which occurred on your arrival off the Peiho and of your subsequent return to Shanghae. The events of the first period are clear and free from all obscurity, and I am happy to convey to you her Majesty's entire approval of your communications with the Chinese commissioners, and of the firmness with which you resisted their attempts to dissuade you from insisting upon the strict fulfilment of the stipulations of the Treaty of Tien-tsin. That treaty provided for the exchange of ratifications at Pekin on a day not later than the 26th of June of the present year, a time so nearly at hand as not to admit of any further delay. You were enjoined by the instructions given you by the Earl of Malmesbury, on your departure from England, to insist on being received at Pekin, and to refuse to exchange ratifications at any other place. You were further informed that it might be advisable before your departure from Shanghae to send an intimation to Pekin of your approach, and to request that suitable arrangements might be made for your honourable reception at the mouth of the Peiho and at Tien-tsin, and for your journey from that place to Pekin. You were informed that the admiral in command of her Majesty's naval forces in China had been directed to send up with you to the mouth of the Peiho a sufficient naval force, and you were instructed that, unless any unforeseen circumstances should appear to make another arrangement more advisable, it would seem desirable that you should reach Tien-tsin in a British ship-of-war. Your conduct, therefore, in insisting upon being received at Pekin, and in proceeding to the mouth of the Peiho, was in strict conformity with your instructions. Upon arriving at the mouth of the Pei-ho you were placed in circumstances of great difficulty in selecting the course you were to pursue; you were obliged to found that course mainly upon presumptive evidence. In these circumstances you had to weigh contingencies upon which no safe calculation could be made. I can only say, therefore, that her Majesty's Government, without being able, in the present state of their information, to judge precisely what measures it might have been most advisable for you to adopt at that moment, see nothing in the decision that you took to diminish the confidence which they repose in you. Her Majesty deeply regrets the loss of life which attended the gallant though unsuccessful efforts of the British and French forces to clear the passage of the river. Her Majesty has commanded preparations to be made which will enable her forces, in conjunction with those of his Majesty the Emperor of the French, to support you in the execution of the instructions which will be hereafter addressed to you.

"I have, &c.,

"J. RUSSELL."

UNITED STATES.—After an interview with the President, Gen. Scott has been despatched to the Pacific coast to prevent complications in the San Juan affair. The Government has left him a wide margin for his action, relying upon his good judgment and wise counsel in adjusting and settling the existing difference between the two Governments. It is understood that the sending of General Scott implies no censure upon General Harney. General Scott was selected because of his experience and clear judgment, and because there was no other general who could be sent to supersede or rank General Harney without implying disapprobation. The Administration does not apprehend any serious difficulty, though it still asserts a right to the island of San Juan. Lord Lyons had a long interview with the Secretary of State on the 19th ult., and is said to be of opinion that the questions in dispute between the two Governments will be satisfactorily arranged. General Scott left New York for California on the 20th ult.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—We have accounts from San Francisco to the 5th ult., and later intelligence from the Island of San Juan. The number of American troops on the island had been increased to 500, earthworks had been thrown up, and General Harney had declared that he would call for volunteers if attacked. The British Admiral on the station had refused to obey the orders of Governor Douglas to bring on a collision and he had also refused to bring his fleet to the island, saying that he intended to await orders from the home Government. The relations between the American and British officers continued very friendly.

Canada.—A despatch from Toronto states that on the 16th all the departments of the Government were moved to Quebec, the future seat of the Government, and that the Governor-General left on the day previous. The Government intend to proceed with the Government buildings in Ottawa as speedily as possible. On the 13th ult. the 100th anniversary of the capture of Quebec was celebrated in some parts of Upper Canada. The Governor-General has appointed the 3d of November as a thanksgiving day for the abundant harvest.

Public Addresses.

The Right Hon. James Wilson has been visiting Hawick, Manchester, and Liverpool, previous to his departure for India, and has addressed large meetings at each place on the nature of the duties he will have to perform, as well as on the encouragement to be given to the growth of cotton and wool in India. The following are extracts from these speeches:—

"I have great confidence that with industry, with attention, with determination, with single-mindedness to apply those principles which have been found to result so beneficially at home, we may, with the able aid and assistance of the local authorities in India, apply the same principles there ultimately with the same benefit. I am one of those who believe that what is right in one part of the world cannot be wrong in another. I am one of those who believe in the universality of principle. I am one of those who believe that human nature is human nature all the world over. I am one of those who believe that Englishmen must not, even in their vainglory and their strength, believe that because they are Englishmen they must trample over everybody else. I am one of those who believe that kindness, generosity, and justice, exercised with a fair and firm hand, whatever the race may be, whatever the time may be, will produce the desired results. I am one of those who believe that if we respect the feelings and obligations, and deep convictions of those over whom Providence has appointed us to rule, we may draw them within the bonds of affection, and peace, and unity, and good citizenship. And if we can do that, then I say the charm of Indian finance is gone. Why, what is the cause of your embarrassment in India? Four years ago your army expenditure was 11,000,000*l.* sterling; since that it has been 24,000,000*l.*; at the present moment it is 31,000,000*l.* If you cannot govern the country and keep the internal peace of the country for less than 21,000,000*l.*, then I say you must abandon it altogether. There is no choice. England will not consent that the blood of Englishmen should be poured out, that English life should be endangered, that we should be exposed to these disasters in keeping a country on principles so ill suited to the habits and manners and feelings, or, if you will, prejudices of the people—that less than 21,000,000*l.* sterling should not suffice to keep people in order. There is one subject on which I am particularly anxious to be explicit on the present occasion, as this is, perhaps, one of the last opportunities that I may have of expressing my views to an English or a Scotch community before I leave these shores. We have passed through, in India, a period of awful suspense. From post to post, and from mail to mail we have known at one period whether India was still under British rule, or whether it had fallen back to that anarchy and confusion which preceded our government. But we have had the evidence of what I would call the greatest statesman and the most distinguished man of the age in regard to Indian matters as to the cause of that revolt—I allude to the report made by Sir John Lawrence to the Governor General; and I am desirous above all things that the cause which he described should be deeply imbedded in the minds of every Englishman and of every Scotchman in all time to come, because, in my opinion in that report there is more wisdom, and more statesmanship, and more truth than is to be found in any State document that I have read for many years. Sir John Lawrence, after the trial of the King of Delhi, made a report to Lord Canning, in which he stated, in the most clear and unequivocal terms, that he had investigated the records in the archives of Delhi, and had had opportunities of viva voce communication with the natives at the time, and the result had been the deliberate conclusion that there was one cause, and one cause alone, to which all these misfortunes had to be traced, and that cause was the conviction on the minds of the people of India that the British Government had determined within itself forcibly to change the caste and religion of the natives and to force upon them by the force of Government the Christian religion. Now, Sir J. Lawrence is a man who, upon a topic of that kind, ought in every respect to be trusted. I may say in a very emphatic manner that he is a man and a Christian who has devoted himself perhaps more than any other man in a similar position to exercising his influence in every possible way for the spread of Christianity, and for the progress of that Gospel in which we all rejoice to believe. And therefore we may receive his evidence upon the subject of that movement with confidence—as that of one who would not willingly say one word that was likely to detract from the spread of Christianity in India. And he shows by demonstrations which no man can read and disapprove, that it was the conviction on the part of the Indian mind that we had deliberately determined by the force of Government influence, to change their religion, which alone caused the mutiny. Now, we have, as a Government, invariably practised absolute neutrality with regard to the natives in their religious matters. We have said, as a Government, to the natives of India that they were entitled to exercise all their religious opinions in the same manner that we ourselves do claim at home the free exercise of our religious opinions, and freedom of worship. But though we have said that, no doubt many things have occurred which may have carried to the native mind convictions and feelings of a different kind; and all I can say in respect to this subject is, that while I hope the Government of India will never fail to give every proper encouragement to the missionaries who go forth from this country, who are freely accepted by the natives—while they will never fail to give just and ample encouragement to the administration of the Christian religion in all its forms so far as Christians are concerned, yet I trust that neither public opinion nor Government influence will ever be brought to bear in order, in the slightest degree, through Government influence or other force, to enforce those truths which we ourselves value so much, but which, in proportion as we value, we may be sure that they will make their way if they only have fair play. I for one shall be glad to see that the English people resident in India will, by their example, continue to give to the natives a higher appreciation of the value of the true religion than that which they now possess. I have alluded to this subject because at the bottom of our financial arrangements must lie every question of policy affecting the good and well-being of the country. Unless you have the confidence of a people who are numbered by something like 200,000,000, and who are spread over a million and a half of square acres—for these are the dimensions of your empire—unless you have the confidence of a people so circumstanced, I say that is a misfortune of immense magnitude in the system of government, be where it may, of us or of the East European who has to take the responsibility. You must remember such things are not [illegible] that they come suddenly and [illegible]. I [illegible] —that if you pursue a policy of that kind, you may so far relieve that [illegible] ture that in the course of time without making sacrifices to any very increased [illegible] [illegible] sufficient [illegible] [illegible] those who have read the very interesting report of the committee on Indian Colonization will have come to the conclusion which that committee has itself come to—that it is utterly impossible in the present or probable future condition of India that Indian [illegible] [illegible] Europeans, in the ordinary way of the [illegible] [illegible] I think they would come to the conclusion to which we have to advert came, and to which the committee came—a committee composed of the most distinguished and enlightened men of the House of Commons upon these subjects—the conclusion that really the profitable way by which Indian production can be developed will be by the superintendence of Europeans, be the [illegible] [illegible] by the advice of Europeans, but [illegible] by the actual [illegible] Europeans themselves to cultivate the land. I believe that you have great facilities for that plan of operation, which you never could have for any other projected plan. In the first place, the wages of labour in India are so low that European labour never could compete with it, and it never could be upon the value of European [illegible] [illegible] with the wages of labouring cultivators of the soil. On the other hand, what you want is India-rubber, is your home of the [illegible] where in the world is superintending intelligence which may be easily and rapidly transported from this country by enterprising young men, well backed from home, with a combination of a sufficient amount of capital to purchase the raw products of the country, and to give a price corresponding with the better qualities that are produced. That you will find will be the best and shortest means of inducing the natives to improve their quality. As soon as they see that the better quality of an article brings a higher price I have no doubt that result will be secured. It is some satisfaction to know that the supply of cotton is not standing but rapidly increasing. Although I know it is very difficult to increase the supply of an article so universally in demand over the whole world with sufficient rapidity to meet the increase of that demand, yet I think that we cannot look to the statistics of this trade without feeling that a great deal has been done in all parts of the world for the purpose of meeting your requirements. With regard to wool, if the statistics of the trade were referred to, it would be seen that in 1830 no wool whatever was imported from India; that when we became possessed of Scinde a small quantity only was imported, and that in 1848 it did not exceed 2,000,000*lbs.*, while in 1857 it had risen up to about 4,000,000, and that from 1851, when the last of Runjeet Sing was established, an impulse was given to sheep-farming that increased to 19,000,000 or nearly 20,000,000*lbs.*, and was 12,000,000 or 13,000,000*lbs.* And from a report we had received from the customs department at Kurrachee, we learnt that the trade of that port, which before was nothing, was now two millions sterling. This showed to some extent the vast room there was for a development of the trade in India. Considerable encouragement and protection had been given to trade there by placing a few soldiers in the principal passes leading through the hills, and this had been effected at a trifling cost. Now, what he would suggest was that they should send out samples of the finest staples of wool to the part of Kurrachee, and instruct their agents to explain to natives what large prices could be obtained for long staples as compared with the present short clips; he thought the most natural and easy way of encouraging the change which was sought would thus be attained. With respect to the British possessions in India, all the hill districts were capable of producing wool, and many of the plains, because the sheep fed upon them supplied the chief food for the Calcutta and other great markets, mutton being the principal flesh meat consumed; but the more temperate climates of India were no doubt necessary to produce good wool, such as was required here. One thing against the trade of India, as had been suggested, was the want of the means of transport, and he should take an early opportunity on arriving in India to bring this matter under the notice of the proper authorities. He could only say that in any measure he should advocate he should look to the permanent interest and well-being of India as he would to the interests and well-being of her Majesty's subjects in this country. He believed that good government and wise regulations would ultimately develope the vast and almost untold resources of India to an extent that would greatly add to the prosperity and welfare of this country, for the interests of both were, to an extent, identical."

The Right Hon B. Disraeli, at a meeting of the Royal Bucks Agricultural Society on Wednesday, spoke as follows on the state of agriculture in that county:—

"I can recall the time when it was necessary on every occasion to vindicate assemblies of this kind and institutions of this character. The best answer, however, to the attacks that were made upon them is the fact that 25 years have now elapsed since the foundation and introduction of these societies, and that now they are sown broadcast over the land, and we find men of all parties supporting such societies and endeavouring to carry their [illegible] into effect. We find, also, an unanimous agreement among all who have due acquaintance with real life as to the beneficial effect which attends the operations of such as are open to criticism; but I wish to know what in this world is not open to criticism. But, gentlemen, if there were only critics in the world, society would soon be at a standstill. To animate skill, to encourage enterprise, to reward merit, these have always been considered means by which a community is taught to flourish, by which mankind is rendered happier. But if there were only critics in the world, none of those means would ever be had recourse to, for critics never encourage skill, critics never animate enterprise, critics never reward merit. It is now generally admitted that England is a country which takes the lead in the cultivation of the soil, and there are many other points with respect to which we have been in the habit of assuming superiority. Without now entering into any controversy as to whether that assumption is just or not, I think that superiority has been questioned upon many other points by continental nations and critics, but with respect to agriculture never, and for this simple reason,—the test of the superiority of agriculture is the amount you produce from the soil of the country, and that country which produces the most from its soil is held to be the most skilful in agriculture. That being the case, the condition of agriculture in this country is such that for a very long period of years we have been famed for the cultivation of the soil, and for the progress which England has made in that respect. It has been the boast of the county of Buckingham that it has occupied no mean position, and I am not at all aware, speaking on that subject without [illegible] feeling, I am not aware that the county of Buckingham is at all inferior to that rôle it has hitherto occupied in this country. If you go to the extreme south, I can point out the fields of one who is looked upon as one of the most skilful cultivators of whom Buckinghamshire has reason to be proud, [illegible] [illegible] you come to this district I say that there is no portion of it [illegible] which you can, be in this land [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] were not rude to speak of such an assembly in such language, he should say that it was composed of the most chattering body of men that ever came together to conduct either public or private business. Following the example of some of his Yorkshire friends, he had performed his duties in the House of Commons in silence, and he was not ashamed to confess it; on the contrary, he believed that those duties might be fulfilled in a manner as conscientious to the individual, and with as much good to the country at large, in silence as by making long speeches. One of the great evils in our Legislative Assembly of the present day was a vast amount of conceit and self-ignorance, which made men ignorant of their own defects, and inflicted an amount of tedium upon their audiences which was terrible to endure. This was an evil which must be corrected, and he could not think of it without great indignation. He felt indignant also when he found constituencies classifying the House of Commons on this principle, and talking of one man as a useful member and of another as an obscure one, because the former was constantly trespassing upon the valuable and important time of the House, and the latter performed his duties quietly, though truly and conscientiously. Politics were properly excluded from agricultural meetings, and he hoped he had not violated that rule by the remarks he had made, but as a member of a great Legislative Assembly he felt it his duty to seize the opportunity to warn them against the evil to which he had referred."

"Going the circuit in his younger days was a very different thing to what it had been since the introduction of railways. It was then much more expensive and formal; indeed, it was not untruly considered that the whole body going circuit expended more than it carried away. The judges did not post, but went in sober state, four-in hand. Barristers posted, as it was considered irregular to travel in a public conveyance. The mess was rather expensive; the bar had their own cellar of wine, under the care of their own officers, who went the circuit. The leader of the circuit was expected to be frequent in his attendance at mess, for to him they appealed to decide disputed points of professional etiquette. Those were days when gentlemen in common life wore clothes of every colour, but the barrister was always expected to dine in black. In his early career, although the law did not allow him to languish in idleness, he still had many idle days. He was fond of employing them in note-taking, whenever cases of an interesting character presented themselves, and he had found great benefit therefrom, especially at times when the facility of taking a rapid and accurate note became of great importance to him. He found that he had a note of a remarkable case which he had heard while on circuit in Cornwall. The story was this:—In the county of Cornwall there lived a highly respectable family named Robinson, consisting of two sons, William and Nicholas, and two daughters. The property was settled on the two sons and their male issue, and in case of death on the two daughters. William was to be the 'squire, and Nicholas was placed with an eminent attorney at St. Austell, as his clerk, but with a prospect of one day being admitted into partnership. The young man conducted himself well and respectably, and the attorney became much attached to him. The harmony, however, between the two and between the family was broken, for Nicholas had fallen in love with a young woman at St. Austell, who was a milliner or a milliner's apprentice. The result was that in November, 1782, the young man was sent to London to qualify himself as an attorney, and thence he wrote unhappy letters to his old master and others, but he was ultimately admitted an attorney of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas. Thenceforward he was never seen by any member of his family or former friends, and all search for him proved fruitless. In the course of time the old Robinson died. William, the eldest son, succeeded to the property; he never married, and died in May, 1802. As nothing was heard of Nicholas, the two sisters became entitled to the property, and they held possession of it for 20 years, no claim being made to disturb their enjoyment of it. In 1783 a young man, whose looks and manners were above his means and station, made his appearance as a stranger at Liverpool. He called himself Nathaniel Richardson—the same initials as Nicholas Robinson. He bought a cab and horse, and plied for hire in the streets of Liverpool. Being a civil, sober, and prudent man, he soon became prosperous, and drove a coach between London and Liverpool. He married, had children, and gradually acquired considerable property. Having gone to Wales to purchase horses in 1802, he was by an accident drowned in the Mersey. In the year 1821 it was said that this Nathaniel Richardson was no other than Nicholas Robinson, and his eldest son claimed the property which was then inherited by the two daughters, and the action was tried in Cornwall. Nearly 40 years had elapsed since anyone had seen Nicholas Robinson, but it was made out conclusively, in a most remarkable way, and by a variety of small circumstances, all pointing to one conclusion, that Nathaniel Richardson was the identical Nicholas Robinson. The Cornish witnesses and the Liverpool witnesses agreed in the description of his person, his height, the colour of his hair, his general appearance, and more particularly it was mentioned that he had a peculiar habit of biting his nails, and had a great fondness for horses. In addition to other circumstances, there was this most remarkable one,—that Nathaniel's widow married again, and the furniture and effects were taken to the second husband's house. Among the articles was an old trunk which she had never seen opened, but it happened one day that this old trunk was, through curiosity, examined, and, among other letters and papers, the two certificates of Nicholas Robinson's admission as attorney to the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas were found. On the trial the old master of Nicholas Robinson, alias Nathaniel Richardson, swore to his handwriting, and so the property was recovered. The right hon. gentleman in referring to the trials of Feargus O'Connor and O'Brien, at which he presided as judge, observed that the Chartist body at that time interested him a good deal. For the most part, its members appeared to have been honest, but misguided persons. He had no doubt if the movement had not been suppressed that it would have led on to plunder and havoc, and that blood would have flowed like water, for the occupation and habits of these men made them a hard-handed and stern race. The way in which some of them defended themselves was remarkable: although speaking with a Lancashire pronunciation, which was very difficult to understand, they, nevertheless, spoke pure English, and quoted—not the works of Tom Paine and other infidel writers, but such writers as Algernon Sidney, Sir William Jones, John Locke, and John Milton. There were men among them who, after working 10 or 12 hours a day, had been diligent readers, and were better English scholars than many of the jurymen who tried them." After passing a glowing eulogium on the legal and forensic abilities of two of his contemporaries—Erskine and Follett, Sir John Coleridge concluded by warmly advocating the system of trial by jury. "There were some," he said, "who laboured to depreciate trial by jury, or, as it was more correctly termed, 'trial by judge and jury.' He did not mean to say that this mode of trial was perfect, or that it was appropriate in deciding all matters of fact. He was far from saying that it would not admit of some improvement; but, speaking from long experience and from much consideration, in nothing was he more confident than in thinking that to trial by jury they were more indebted, as members of society, as citizens, in respect to their property, their character, their safety, and their liberty, than to any other single institution in the country. He had been a judge for an unusually long period, and he should ever regard with admiration the manner in which juries discharged their duties. Again and again he had reason to marvel at their patience, and again and again he had observed questions put by a jury which had been omitted by counsel and judge, and the answer to which had thrown a light that had guided them to the truth of the whole matter. As regarded the judge and society generally, the institution of trial by jury was most important. Take it away from the merchant, the tradesman, and the farmer, and he ventured to say that they would take away one of the most important institutions which distinguished this country from every other. It was one, and not the least important, part of their system of self-government. It was also a material part of a citizen's education. He had often thought if he had the appointment of the magistrates in the country that he would appoint those gentlemen who had served on petty juries on the Crown side for two assizes at least; for he was sure that a more practical knowledge of criminal law was learnt in that way than could be acquired by several months of careful reading. Earnestly did he hope that in their laudable desire to improve their institutions they would never fancy themselves more wise than their ancestors and dispense with trial by jury. Let them be true to its principle if they improved it in some of its details. Let them cherish it as an inestimable treasure, and guard it as they did their Habeas Corpus, their Bill of Rights, and Magna Charta, for sure he was that it was not less essential than any one of these to their liberties and to their well being—civil, social, and national. One thing should always be remembered, that stupid verdicts were no arguments against the institution, for no human institution however wise in itself could be expected to work perfectly. Let them improve their jurymen by raising the character of their national education; let them introduce into their panels all classes who by law were liable to serve; and when they had done that, and not till then, if they found it to fail let them condemn the institution. They lived under a law which, though far from perfect, was framed in a wise and just spirit. They could not possibly overrate the blessing which they possessed, yet it was so much a matter of course that they were apt to think as little of it as they did of the sun that shone upon them from heaven. Such was human nature, and he should not consider that he had spoken so long in vain if what had been said should rouse them to a grateful sense of the blessings they enjoyed, and to an earnest resolution that as far as it was in their power they would hand down this institution of trial by jury pure and undiminished to their latest posterity."

ELECTION OF AN ALDERMAN.—At a wardmote held at the vestry of St Magnus, Thames Street, on Thursday, Mr. Joseph Abbiss, wholesale tea dealer of Gracechurch Street, was elected without opposition Alderman of the ward of Bridge in the room of Sir Chapman Marshall.

THE METAGE DUES.—An important question affecting the fruit trade was settled in the Court of Common Council on Thursday. A report from the General Purposes Committee, recommending that the metage of fruit be henceforward voluntary, instead of compulsory, was unanimously adopted—thus virtually freeing fruit from the tax hitherto levied. A small metage on potatoes is to be continued, the work of weighing being required by the trade, and an annuity of 800*l.* per annum is to be paid to the remaining fruit-meter in lieu of the fourth part of the fees heretofore payable to him.

THE NEW REFORM BILL.—The following letter from Mr. Bright has been recently received by Mr. John Davidson, the author of a pamphlet entitled, "A New Reform Bill:"—

"Rochdale, Sept. 21. Dear Sir,—I do not think such a Bill as is described in your pamphlet either practicable or just. The exclusions contemplated would turn out most capricious in working. I am in favour of an extension of the franchise, consistent with our ancient practice, based upon [illegible] and unfettered by considerations connected with [illegible] temperance. Fix the franchise at the point which will [illegible] all ratepayers, or at a 6*l.* rental—at some point on which [illegible] majority can agree—but don't confuse the question with [illegible] tions of morals. If you try to exclude all men who are [illegible] perfectly wise and prudent, and to include only the [illegible] your whole system will break down. If you will [illegible] people in the bulk, without attempting definitions and [illegible] selections, you will get a good constituency, and without [illegible] culty.—I am, yours respectfully, JOHN BRIGHT."

MARLBOROUGH HOUSE.—The time having now arrived for Marlborough House to be prepared for the residence of the Prince of Wales, the whole of the paintings forming the English portion of the National Gallery, the Vernon and Turner collections, &c., which for some years past have been exhibited to the public at Marlborough House, have been removed to the new building erected for their reception at Kensington Gore, where they will be opened to view on Monday the 24th inst. The Wellington Funeral Car has been removed to Chelsea Hospital.

FRACTURE OF THE GREAT BELL OF WESTMINSTER.—On Saturday the great bell of the Houses of Parliament sounded for the last time, and while in the very act of striking Big Ben became even more hopelessly cracked than its ill-fated predecessor. It will now be necessary to remove the clock, get down the bell, break it up and recast it for the third time, prove it, get it up the tower again, and refix the clock. These operations are expected to average, on the whole, about three months to each, so that it will be upwards of a year before the Great Bell of Westminster can again be heard. Mr. Denison, in a letter to the Times, gives the following account of the cause of the accident:—

"A week ago I should have fully endorsed all you say of Mr. Mears's bell. He certainly worked exactly to my pattern, as to 'the weight, size, and tone were exactly what had been required,' and everybody believed it to be a 'magnificent casting'—everybody, that is, except certain persons at Whitehall who knew a very different secret. Last week, however, Mr. Dent's men found out, and I was immediately informed, and sent the information on to the Board of Works, that this magnificent casting was, like many other fine things, a magnificent imposture; for that there is a place in the bell, on the soundbow, but far from where either clapper or hammer have struck (and this is probably not by accident), full of holes not a quarter of an inch wide and more, and others smaller, of these not certain yet, but some probed down to nearly half an inch, and, in short, every external indication of a perfectly unsound casting, and that from two of those holes cracks were visible nearly a foot long and of depth unknown yet, but with very indications of still wider holes within them. But how could Mr. Taylor and I come to certify such a bell as sound? And how did such unsoundness as this elude the observation of 'the indefatigable clerk of works' who examines all the castings that come to the Palace, and of Sir C. Barry's engineer Mr. Jabez James, and of the hundreds of people of all classes who came to see and hear the bell? For a very good reason, because the holes were all as carefully stuffed as a bad tooth by a dentist with some 'mineral succedaneum,' of which a piece has been sent to me, and which can be shown to you at Mr. Dent's or in the bell itself; and to make all still safer the hole was washed over with some colouring stuff which the atmosphere has now removed. Some persons noticed this colouring as suspicious at the time; but still, with the suspicion to help them, nobody could find anything wrong."

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE.—In consequence of the recent resolution of the Masters' Committee refusing to recognise the Conference, on the ground that it is an irresponsible body, a meeting of about 5000 artizans convened by the Conference was held in St. Martin's Hall on Wednesday week, when it was unanimously resolved that it is the right of the trades to appoint whom they think fit to conduct their affairs, and to [illegible] all communication or negotiation with the employers be transacted by the Conference on behalf of the [illegible] men until the settlement of the present dispute. A meeting pledging itself to support the Conference long as the struggle lasts. The Masters' Committee held their weekly meeting on Tuesday, but as they with closed doors nothing is known of their delibera tions except that they ended in no definite result, that the meeting was adjourned for a week unless circumstances should arise to render earlier meeting necessary. It is understood the masters remain firm in their adhesion to the declaration, or at least to the desire to procure revision of the trade regulations which impede public interests, cramp the freedom of the workmen themselves, and are said to be at variance with the law relating to masters and workmen. It appears from returns of the Masters' Association that nearly [illegible] men in various departments of the building trade now at work under the terms of the declaration in the metropolitan postal district. Meanwhile the Conference is following up its policy of "calling off" the men employed by the masters on building operations in the country beyond the metropolitan district, which, until now, the strike has been confined. In some cases of intimidation within the metropolis have been again brought under the notice of the magistrates. At the usual weekly meeting of the Conference on Tuesday, the delegates from the metropolitan trade societies, not belonging to the building trade, presented themselves in considerable force, and [illegible] contributions to a large amount for the support of the men on strike. The Rev. Mr. Verity, a Lancashire clergyman, also delivered a lecture on Tuesday night in St. Martin's Hall, in the interest of the men, to a crowded assembly of them.

THREATENED STRIKE OF JOURNEYMEN BAKERS. Several meetings of journeymen bakers have been held and associations have been formed in Bermondsey, Lambeth, Shoreditch, Islington, and other districts of the metropolis, for the purpose of taking steps to procure the abolition of night work in bakehouses, and to reduce the hours of labour from 18 to [illegible] day. Resolutions have been adopted to the effect that account of the privations and degradation the unlimited hours system has entailed, the meetings pledged themselves to use every means in their power to procure the total abolition of night work, and the restriction of the hours of labour to 12 per day; and that in order to bring about an uniform system, the hours be from 4 A.M. to 4 P.M. The speakers said they did not want to strike, but would certainly do so if they could not obtain their just and reasonable demands in any other way.

New Church Movement.—A new Association called the Church Institution has just been formed in connection with the Church of England. The whole metropolitan circuit is to be divided into 20 districts, and it is proposed that an annual general meeting of the several incumbents in each separate district shall take place for the purpose of appointing as consultees 16 laymen resident therein, to adopt measures for the defence of the Church against attacks in and out of Parliament. Accordingly, where practicable, it is proposed that an association should be formed in every parish, with the usual officers—the president or chairman of each being appointed by the incumbent. In order to secure united action among the several parochial associations it is further proposed that an annual general meeting should take place of the incumbents in each rural deanery, for the purpose of appointing as consultees some convenient number of laymen resident therein; the duty of such local or provincial consultees being to attend, at such times as may be deemed advisable, for the sake of joint advice and common consultation with the clergy. By the rules of the association the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of Winchester, for the metropolis; and for the country, the bishops of the several dioceses will be solicited to sanction annual general meetings of the clergy for the purposes required. The Institution will encourage social progress, premising that such progress, to be salutary, must rest upon religious principles.

New Church at Knightsbridge.—It is stated that, in consequence of the continued dissatisfaction felt by certain parishioners of the Knightsbridge district with the ceremonial still adhered to by the rector, the Hon. and Rev. R. Liddell, a new church is about to be built on the site of the old chapel or lazar-house, on the high road, Knightsbridge, between Albert Gate and Hyde Park Corner.

The Special Sunday Services.—The services which were conducted last winter in St. James's Hall by Nonconformist ministers, and were attended so largely by the working classes, will be resumed early next month. By permission of the military authorities, religious services have been conducted on Woolwich Common on Sunday afternoons during the past season by ministers connected with the London Diocesan Society, of which the Bishop of London is president. Similar services have taken place on Plumstead Common, under the auspices of the vicar, the Rev. W. Acworth; and by permission of the ranger, Lord Aberdeen, special services have been conducted by various ministers in Greenwich Park on Tuesday and Friday afternoons.

Church of England Book-hawking Union.—The first report of this society, the object of which is to assist the local societies and extend the movement into new districts, has been just published. The following extract will show the nature and results of its operations:—

"The general success of the system of book-hawking has been most encouraging; a few details may be given. A society in the eastern counties, employing one hawker, sold during the year to the amount of 310*l.*; another in the south to the amount of 330*l.* The largest association, employing five hawkers and an assistant, sold nearly 855*l.* worth. In one district, where the work is carried on by an individual clergyman employing one hawker, books and prints were sold last year to the amount of 500*l.* A hawker in the north is selling weekly to the amount of 4*l.* 9*s.* almost entirely among the colliers, visiting each colliery in his district once a month. The average weekly sales of one of the southern hawkers amount to more than five guineas. Another near London sometimes sells 9*l.* worth a week. In addition to the large number of secular works circulated by this means, the sale of Bibles and Prayer books has been considerable. In one midland district 840 Bibles and Testaments were sold in one year; by a southern society 877, and by another 1056. One of the Welsh hawkers sold 410 Bibles in the year. Of Prayer-books and Church Services nearly 1000 were sold by one society, and by others 1100, 1400, and 1700 respectively. The county association before mentioned, which employs six men, sold in one year 2500 Bibles and Testaments and nearly 3000 Prayer-books and Church Services. The large number of prints sold in some districts is worthy of notice; in one, 1200 single prints and volumes were sold in the year, and 166 packets of picture cards, also nearly 200 atlases and single maps. Books of a useful kind, such as those on cookery, gardening, &c., meet with a ready sale. So far as the committee has statistics, the book which has sold most largely in any one district throughout the kingdom, excepting Bibles and Prayer-books, is Sir Joseph Paxton's 'Cottager's Calendar of Gardening Operations.' By some of the book-hawkers periodicals are sold readily, by others not at all, as they cannot of course supply them regularly. Of this class the chief favourite is the 'British Workman,' owing in great measure to the first-rate excellence of its illustrations. The total number of publications sold in the year in some districts was more than 20,000 in each, in one county association 22,000. As an instance of the increase during successive years, a south-eastern society may be referred to in which were sold in the first year 3600 publications, in the second year 4980, in the third year (when a second man was employed) 10,500, and in the fourth year, 13,600. Another society in the same county nearly doubled its sales since the hawker was provided with a donkey-cart. With regard to the class of purchasers, it appears from the records of one district, where an accurate account has been kept, that the comparative numbers were—labourers, 1813; servants, 747; tradesmen, 478; mechanics, 278; gentlemen, 139. In another district there were 1600 labourers, servants, and mechanics who had purchased, and 245 gentlemen. In the report of a southern society it is mentioned that by far the greater number of the Bibles, Testaments, and Prayer-books sold, amounting in all to 1500, were disposed of one by one in the families of labouring men. The immense superiority of small books and tracts to a great extent shows that they go to the right quarter. In one instance it is stated that the average value of publications sold was 4*d.* In another we find more than 40 per cent. of the publications sold for 1*d.*, which gives the same average. In a third, out of 2000 publications sold, 7500 were less than 1*s.* 6*d.* each. In a fourth, out of 4000 only 24 were at 1*s.* and upwards."

The Great Eastern.—It is now announced that the great ship will not visit Southampton, as stated last week, but will leave Weymouth to-day, the 8th inst., on her trial trip. Her course will be to the Scilly Isles, and thence across St. George's Channel to the Old Head of Kinsale, and so on up the Channel to Holyhead, where she is expected to arrive on the 11th inst. No passengers will be conveyed on this trial trip, and all persons who have taken berths for the occasion will have the passage money returned to them. It appears that under the provisions of the Mercantile Marine Acts the Great Eastern would not be permitted to carry passengers, and the directors would be liable to heavy penalties if they did so before receiving the certificate of the Marine Department of the Board of Trade. Should the trial trip prove satisfactory, the ship will leave Holyhead for Portland in the United States on the 20th inst. During the trial trip Mr. Scott Russell and Messrs. Boulton & Watt will have the entire management of the engines without any interference on the part of the company's engineers.—At the Judges' Chambers on Tuesday an application was made to Mr. Justice Byles at chambers, for a writ of certiorari to bring up the conviction of Francis Johnson, who was sentenced to one month's imprisonment in Dorchester gaol for refusing to clean the decks on Sunday, and also for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the prisoner. He submitted various objections to the conviction on the face of it, and also that the refusal to work on the Sabbath was not an offence, being within the prohibited work specified in the statute of Charles. After some discussion, his lordship granted orders for the writs, so that the questions may be solemnly argued.

Surrey Gardens.—It is said that Mr. Simpson has purchased the remaining 11 years which the lease of this place has to run, for the sum of 3000*l.*, in order to convert the gardens into a winter garden, the chief feature of which will be skating on the lake.

The Amended Law on Weights and Measures.—Some important alterations have been made in the law relating to weights and measures in the new Act of Parliament passed at the end of the late session. A penalty not exceeding 10*l.* is imposed on any person who shall wilfully and knowingly make or sell or cause to be made or sold any false beam, scale, balance, weight or measure. Hawkers in the streets are now made amenable to the law. It is lawful for every inspector of weights and measures, or other persons duly appointed, to inspect all beams, scales, balances, weights and measures in the possession of any person exposing for sale any goods on any open ground or in any public street, lane, or thoroughfare, or any open place, and if found to be false, or if any fraud be wilfully committed in the using thereof, the same shall be liable to be seized and forfeited, and the person using the same, or having in his possession any such false beams, scales, weights and measures, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* In default of payment, imprisonment will follow. A clerk or toll collector in any public market may weigh or measure goods offered for sale, and if found to be deficient he may summon the offender, and the justice may award him a part of the penalty as a remuneration for his trouble.

New Inventions in Artillery.—The difficulty hitherto experienced in converting the ordinary cast-iron guns into breech-loaders has at length been surmounted by Mr. Warny, the inventor of the new breech-loading percussion cannon, who has just succeeded in attaching a wrought-iron breech to a cast-iron gun, the first attempt of the kind which has yet proved successful. The gun experimented upon consisted of the ordinary cast-iron barrel, weighing about 40 lbs., which having been rifled, Mr. Warny attached his breech-loading invention to it; the gun being fired by percussion. The breech is provided with a lever fixed at the end, which by one movement lubricates the chamber, primes the nipple, and closes the breech. By an exceedingly simple contrivance the breech can be almost instantaneously detached from the other portion of the gun, so that in the case of a sudden surprise by an enemy, these guns can have their breeches removed and be rendered entirely unserviceable. During the trials made at Chatham to test the new gun it was ascertained that with a small charge of gunpowder the shot could be thrown 4000 yards, or upwards of two miles, while by slightly increasing the charge a range of 5000 yards was obtained, the gun throwing a shower of balls at the rate of 10 per minute, a rapidity of firing which the inventor is able to maintain as long as the ammunition lasts, the current of air admitted each time the breech is opened preventing the gun becoming heated and expanding. Mr. Warny expresses his readiness to take any ordinary metal or cast-iron gun now in use, and to convert it into a breech-loader capable of discharging from 10 to 20 shots per minute a distance of at least three miles, the barrel being previously rifled. A long-range cannon, invented by Mr. Jeffries, patentee of the well-known marine glue, is in course of being mounted in the Arsenal, at Woolwich, for experiments at Shoeburyness. Its range or flight of shot is spoken of as certain to eclipse every other weapon hitherto known. The gun, with its present bore of 3-inch diameter, weighs 7 tons, and presents an appearance of a 68-pounder. The charge will consist of 2 lbs. of powder, and a conical shot, weighted with lead to 9 lbs., and hollowed like the Minié bullet. It is said that this shot will be propelled 15 or 20 miles and the authorities intend to carry out a varied course of experiments with it under the inspection of the School Committee of Woolwich Arsenal. After being satisfied of its power in its present form, the bore will be progressively increased to a 68-pounder. To enable the gunners to point the gun, the trunnions will be fitted with a couple of telescopes, to assist the eye over the enormous range predicted. Some experiments have also been made at Chatham by Captain Norton, to show the method by which sporting guns can be utilised as military arms, and the ordinary muzzle-loading patent breech sporting guns rendered available for military purposes in case of emergency. This Captain Norton proposes to effect by using his gossamer-covered cartridges, with a close-fitting spherical bullet, enclosed in a thin greased patch of elastic cotton net. The result of the trials which have already been concluded leaves no doubt that any ordinary musket may by these means be turned into a military arm. During the experiments Captain Lempriere, instructor of musketry to the Royal Engineers, fired two blank gossamer cartridges from an ordinary 14-bore sporting gun, and a "jacketed" rifle shot was fired with the same description of cartridge from a 14-bore grooved rifle having a patent breech, the results in each case being equally satisfactory.

The Wreck of the Alma.—An official inquiry, instituted by the Board of Trade under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, was opened at the Greenwich Police Court on Wednesday, for the purpose of ascertaining the circumstances attending the recent loss of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam ship Alma in the Red Sea. Mr. Traill, the magistrate, conducted the inquiry, assisted by Capt. Walker as nautical assessor. It is expected that the inquiry will last several days.

Lectures on Social Science.—A course of six lectures on this important subject, embracing all the relations between labour and capital, is about to be delivered by Mr. William Ellis, under the authority of the Committee of Council on Education, at the South Kensington Museum. These lectures are particularly addressed to school teachers, but the general public will be admitted as far as there may be room in the theatre. The first will be given on Tuesday, the 11th, and they will be continued on each succeeding Tuesday.

Purification of the Thames.—The following report on the state of the Thames has been presented to the Metropolitan Board of Works by Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer:—"I beg to report that in consequence of the decrease in the temperature the liming operations were maintained during the daytime only from the 12th of August to the 3d inst., at which latter date, upon the advice of Dr. Miller, the operations were discontinued. The total quantity of disinfectant agents used during the past season has been about 4281 tons of chalk lime, 478 tons of chloride of lime, and 56 tons of carbonic acid, at a cost of 17,733*l.*"

The New Westminster Bridge.—The last rib in the southern portion of the new bridge was completed last week, and it is confidently expected that the southern half of the bridge will be opened in November for carriage traffic.

Movements of Convicts.—Sir John Dean Paul and Mr. Strahan, now under sentence in Woking prison, will be released from confinement on the 23d inst. Robson, Redpath, and Jim the Penman have arrived at their destination, the penal settlement in Western Australia.

Drinking Fountains at the British Museum.—Two drinking fountains of a classical design by an eminent living artist, the material to be of white marble, are in course of erection, one on either side of the portico of the British Museum, which, when completed, will be a great benefit to the visitors. It is also contemplated to fix similar fountains, of approved designs, on conspicuous sites in Kew Gardens, at the South Kensington Museum, and other national places of resort.

The Southern Main Drainage.—A large number of excavators in the employ of the contractor for completing the main drainage south of the Thames have commenced operations in Deptford Broadway, and will continue their work along Church Street to Deptford Creek. An immense amount of earth has already been cleared out.

The Case of Dr. Smethurst.—It is said that the report which was current last week, that inquiries had been instituted with regard to other crimes supposed to have been committed by the prisoner, is without foundation, and that the only question under consideration is what ought to be done with the prisoner under the peculiar circumstances of the case.

The Extraordinary Affair at Stepney.—The Coroner's inquest on the body of Philip Yorath, an infant about three weeks old, the illegitimate child of a young lady, the daughter of a clergyman in Wales, was concluded yesterday, when the jury returned the following verdict:—

"That the said Philip Yorath, an illegitimate child of tender age, in the charge of Elizabeth Yorath, his mother, and the Rev. James Bonwell, did die of inanition, which they find is due to one of two causes: either that it did not or could not swallow food: and the said jurors do further say the deceased was able to swallow, and did swallow, food; but whether sufficient to maintain life they are unable to ascertain; and the said jurors do lastly say, from the evidence it appears the conduct of Elizabeth Yorath and the Rev. James Bonwell and Mr. Ayres the undertaker, is highly censurable."

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's report states that the deaths registered in the week which ended October 1st were 1014. Excluding the deaths from epidemic cholera in the two years 1849 and 1854, the present return is considerably below the average of the corresponding week of the years 1849-58. During the week the births of 812 boys and 766 girls, in all 1578 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1621.

BIRKENHEAD.—The foundation stone of the water tower of the Wirral Waterworks, near this town, was laid with much pomp on Monday afternoon by the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot. At the dinner given at the conclusion of the ceremony, the noble lord made the following remarks in reference to his present title and claim to the estates:—

"I am, as you know, by the decision of the House of Peers in the possession of the title of Lord Shrewsbury. I was told before I got that title that when I got it there would be an end to all the dispute. Since that, however, I have gone through several phases of law, and I believe I shall have to go through a few more. So far as we have gone I have had a very elaborate and deliberate judgment, which was in my favour, and which I think it will be very difficult to upset. But still, we all know what are the glorious uncertainties of the law. I say this with great respect for that very great institution of our country, the law; but we all know that there is a glorious uncertainty about the law. I therefore do not like to count my chickens before they are hatched. I am consequently, to a certain extent, in a false position. I am saying this and that as if I were the actual and positive landlord of the place. The judgment may be reversed; I do not think it will, and I am sure that if it is, it will not be of long duration. Still it is possible, and therefore I should speak within bounds. So far as in me lies, if I be continued as the landlord of this locality or not, all that I can say is, that I shall ever entertain the most grateful sense of the kindness with which I have been received; and I shall always feel an interest in the place, and always wish for its prosperity."

BIRMINGHAM.—The number of persons who have already died in consequence of the late explosion is 22, viz., two who have died in the hospital, and 20 whose dead bodies have been dug out of the ruins. The funeral of 14 took place in St. Mary's churchyard on Sunday afternoon in the presence of from 30,000 to 40,000 persons.

BLANDFORD.—At a recent meeting of the Bankruptcy Court in the case of Messrs. Oak & Snow, bankers, of this town, the requisite number of creditors agreed to a proposal by which the joint creditors will receive altogether 5*s.* 8*d.* in the pound, the claimants on the separate estate of Mr. Oak, 6*s.* 4*d.*, and those on Mr. Snow, 18*s.* 6*d.* in the pound. The bankruptcy will, consequently, be annulled.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—On the 12th ult. died at Chevington Frances Harris, a very aged woman, who for many years imposed upon the credulous by her reputed witchcraft, until the magic implements containing her "spell" were destroyed at the request of the Rev. Lord Arthur Hervey and Lord Alfred Hervey. Her exact age cannot be ascertained; but it appears from the parish register of Hargrave that she was baptised in 1763, and she has often stated that she well remembered walking three miles to church in pattens to be christened. It is therefore probable that she was 103 years of age at the least.—The Bury Post states that the Rev. Dr. Amhurst, Roman Catholic Bishop of Northampton, has been making a "visitation" in Suffolk, a proceeding which has not taken place since the Reformation. A report is current that one of the principal noblemen in Norfolk, who has also large estates in Scotland, has "gone over" to the Church of Rome.

CHATHAM.—The authorities at the Horse Guards have directed a number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men selected from the East India depôts to proceed to Eastbourne for the purpose of going through a course of instruction in the long range rifle firing and skirmishing practice. They had previously directed a number of young officers who have been recently appointed to the West India Regiments to be attached to the depôts at Chatham, for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of garrison duties, and taking part in brigade field movements previously to joining the head-quarters of their respective regiments. During their stay at Chatham the officers are to be instructed in field works and pontooning with the Royal Engineers; pitching and striking tents, rifle drill with the Enfield musket, and the great gun drill.

LEEDS.—A warrant has been issued by the magistrates for the apprehension of James Hubert Saddler, the Leeds agent of the Butterley Iron Company, for embezzling money belonging to the company. It has been ascertained that Saddler, who was well known as a cricket player, and has long lived a fast life, left Liverpool in the Nova Scotia steamer with the All England Eleven for Montreal, on the 7th ult. The amount of his defalcations to the company is said to be not less than 1000*l.* He has left a wife and two children behind him, and took with him a young woman with whom he had lived a short time previously at Scarborough. Previous to leaving Leeds he left a letter for his wife, stating that in consequence of his accounts being wrong he was going to India, and intimating that if no proceedings were taken against him he would refund the money.

LEWES.—The inquest on the five persons killed by the explosion of the steam-engine at the recent sheep fair, after several adjournments, terminated on Saturday, when the jury, after two hours' deliberation, returned the following verdict:—

"That the deaths of Reuben Lamport, John Gold, Jesse Upton, Albert Hilder, and Thomas Woodhall were occasioned by the explosion of a steam-engine boiler, on the Wallands, September 21, 1859, caused by the non-action of a safety-valve; and that the said engine, from subsequent examination, has been found to be of inferior quality and construction, and not properly repaired and examined before it was used. The jury feel it their duty to recommend that every portable steam-engine should have an indicating pressure-gauge; and that the present system of employing unskilled persons as engineers requires that all persons so employed should be properly examined and certificated; and that a periodical inspection of such engines should be made by competent persons."

There is another victim to the explosion—namely, George Cox, who was removed to the Brighton Hospital, where he died from concussion of the brain and other injuries. The investigation in this case falls within the province of the coroner for Brighton, and is still in progress.

LINCOLN.—The Dean and Chapter of Lincoln have resolved to devote 2000*l.* to the repairs of their cathedral during the ensuing year. The north-east side of the sacred edifice is to receive attention. Last year 1300*l.* was expended on the cathedral.—The influence of the builders' strike in London has not been unfelt in the provinces. The stonemasons of this city have proposed to their masters that they should leave work at 4 P.M. on Saturday, and have carried their point.

LIVERPOOL.—A good deal of excitement has been caused by the announcement that the officers in the Post Office of this town have been called upon to reply to a series of questions of an inquisitorial character. It appears that some persons in the office having become embarrassed in their affairs and entangled in a system of pecuniary accommodation, an investigation was ordered, and that the postmaster in making the investigation addressed the following questions to these officers, but Mr. Rowland Hill states that he did so without the authority of the Postmaster-General:—

"P. O., Liverpool, Aug. 24.

"For Mr. ——, who I request will carefully answer the following questions, for the information of the Postmaster-General:—1. Where do you reside? 2. What rent do you pay—what taxes? 3. Do you pay the rent quarterly, monthly, or weekly? 4. Have you any income beside that received in your official capacity here, or do you carry on or share profits in any kind of business. If so, state particulars. 5. What family have you? If you have any children state their ages, and whether any of them is in employment; and if so, the wages received and by whom employed. 6. Did your expenditure for the year ended 31st July last exceed your income? If so, what amount? 7. State as nearly as you can the principal items of expenditure, and what caused the excess? 8. State the amount of your debts and to whom they are owing. 9. From whom have you borrowed money during the last two years? When did you borrow it, and has any portion of it been repaid? Have you undertaken to repay debts by weekly instalments or otherwise? 10. Have you lent money to any person in this office? If so, state his name, the amount, and when the transaction occurred; also whether such money or any portion of it has been repaid? 11. Are you bondsman for any person (whether connected with this office or not) who has borrowed money from a loan society? If so, state his name, address, the sum you are surety for, and when the loan was contracted; also the name of the society from which the loan was obtained. 12. State the circumstances fully which led to your present pecuniary embarrassment?"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—A pitman named William Harrison has made a statement before the magistrates that he was on the spot when the Burnopfield murder was committed, nearly four years ago, and that he knew the two men who perpetrated it. He says that while he was in the lane he heard a gun fired; and on looking through the hedge into the wood he saw a man, whose name he gives. He also states that he heard a man at the head of the place shout, "Come here." The man who was in the wood, observing Harrison looking at him, asked what he was doing there, and clenched his teeth at him, and said he would kill him. Harrison only saw the man's head and shoulders, but he says he knew him. Harrison also alleges that he has been living in fear of the threats of this man, who, if he be innocent of the charge, may prefer the chance of confronting him to flying from the neighbourhood.

OXFORD.—The Bishop of Oxford has issued a commission to five beneficed clergymen of his diocese to inquire into certain charges alleged against the Rev. William Simcox Bricknell, vicar of Ensham, by Mr. Joseph Druce, ex-churchwarden of that parish. The offences specified are reading the Morning and Evening Prayers and Lessons from the pulpit instead of from the reading-desk; not rehearsing the Ten Commandments, nor reading the Epistle and Gospel at the north side of the communion-table; and suffering the reading-desk to be desecrated by a number of bricks placed there. The commissioners named by the bishop are Archdeacon Clerke; the Rev. Dr. Leighton, rural dean; the Rev. Dacres Adams, vicar of Bampton; the Rev. Daniel Goddard, vicar of Burford; and the Rev. W. E. D. Carter, vicar of Shipton-under-Wychwood.

PLYMOUTH.—The transport ship Clara, 938 tons, Captain Sautry, belonging to Messrs. Teighe & Smith, of London, left this port on Sunday for Calcutta, with 9 married men, 188 married women, 91 boys, and 107 girls, in all 412 persons, the families of soldiers in the East. On the following morning at half-past 3 A.M. she grounded on the rocks under Penare Head, near the entrance to Falmouth harbour. Her guns and blue lights brought a pilot, who assisted in carrying out an anchor astern, by which she was hove off as the tide rose. The pilot states that the Clara's jib-boom was within 50 feet of the cliff, against which she would have gone to pieces had the tide been higher. She returned to this port on Tuesday afternoon, making five inches of water per hour. A telegraphic despatch was shortly afterwards received from the Horse Guards ordering the immediate landing of the passengers while the ship is docked. The chief officer was in charge at the time of the accident, which is attributed to [illegible] draught, or swell of the sea.—A report is in circulation that the managing steward of a landed proprietor in this county has forged the name of his employer to a mortgage of a considerable portion, if not the whole, of his estates, amounting to 100,000*l.*, and that the detective police are on the alert to discover the steward, who has left the place in which he resided.

PORTSMOUTH.—A Russian squadron, comprising a screw line-of-battle ship of 84 guns, a screw frigate of 51 guns, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Nordmann, and a screw corvette of 11 guns, arrived at Spithead a few days since from the Baltic, and left on Thursday under steam for the Mediterranean. A Russian screw sloop, one of three ships on their way from Cronstadt to the Amoor River, arrived at Spithead as the other vessels were getting under weigh. The New York liner American Congress, from London for New York with cargo and passengers, ran ashore on Thursday during thick weather on the shoal of the Lead near the Owers light-vessel, where she still remains, though no fear is entertained of her ultimate safety.

TAMWORTH.—A branch of the river Tame, near the Moat House, has been recently piled across in the directions of Sir Robert Peel, with the view of ultimately annexing some waste land near the river to his land. The Town Council of Tamworth having not only the right of fishing the river jointly with other parties, but also claiming, as lords of the manor to the waste lands within the borough, objected to the course pursued by Sir R. Peel, and notice was given to his agent that the encroachment was objected to and would be resisted. The work being still proceeded with, the council resolved that the river should be fished, and all obstructions removed. Accordingly the Mayor and several members of the council and other gentlemen went to the spot on the day appointed, with a strong body of workmen, boats, nets, tools, &c., and proceeded at once to remove the embankment, which was accomplished after several hours' labour in the presence of a large number of people, who appeared to take considerable interest in the proceedings. Sir Robert Peel had been down to the spot the morning before with his steward, but had not prevented his men proceeding with the work.

WAKEFIELD.—On Tuesday Mr. Serjeant Pigott, Mr. Willes, and Mr. Slade, the Commissioners appointed by her Majesty to inquire into the corrupt practices which prevailed at the last election for this borough, opened this inquiry at the Town Hall, and have sat daily during the week. The inquiry is expected to last several days.

WELLS.—A man named James Woolley has been committed by the magistrates for trial on the capital offence of feloniously setting fire to a dwelling house. It appeared that the prisoner had married a daughter of the prosecutor, but that, owing to his idle and dissipated habits, they had lived very unhappily. A few days ago he ill-used his wife with so much brutality that she took shelter in the house of her parents. The prisoner was subsequently heard, while drinking in a public-house, to threaten that he would set fire to their cottage, and this he eventually did. If it had not been for very violent rain everybody in the house must have been burned to death, for he had taken care to set fire to the dwelling at a point where the flames would have cut off all communication between the upper and lower storeys.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.—The example of [illegible] Derby in effecting a clearance of his tenantry has been followed by Mr. Vincent Scully, the popular Roman Catholic member for the county of Cork, by the Right Hon. John Wynne, M.P. for Sligo, and by Mr. Chearnley, of Salterbridge, county of Waterford, who is said to have served every tenant on ten townlands with notice to quit.

LAW APPOINTMENT.—The chairmanship of the county of Waterford became vacant on Sunday by the death, after a short illness, of Mr. James Bessonett, Q.C., at the ripe age of 76. The Lord-Lieutenant on Monday appointed Mr. John Henry Richards, son of ex-Baron Richards, to the chairmanship vacated by the death of Mr. Bessonett. Mr. Richards was called to the bar in 1839.

THE REVIVAL.—The Dublin Evening Mail says that since the commencement of the movement Belfast crime has rapidly increased. It appears that in the months of January, February, March, and April of the present year, the number of persons brought before the magistrates of that city amounted to 370. In May commenced the revivals. In the four months from May to August the number of prisoners brought before the magistrates amounted to 3939.

LORD CLONCURRY ON THE GALWAY LINE.—The Lord Mayor of Dublin gave a dinner on Saturday evening to the directors of the Galway Navigation Company, the Carysfort Mining Company, and other noblemen and gentlemen engaged in Irish enterprise. In the course of the evening Lord Cloncurry, being called upon to respond to the toast of the Irish nobility and gentry, made the following remarks on the Galway line, to the manifest annoyance of the company, who frequently interrupted his lordship with expressions of dissatisfaction:—

"He was proud to have his name associated with that of the country gentlemen of Ireland, whom he looked upon as one of the most useful classes in the country. He thought, however, that he deserved to have his name connected with the line, because for the last 23 or 24 years he believed he had not spo[illegible]

four months altogether out of Ireland. He would have sat down without further remark were it not that he would appear in the light of rather a false position, as it was stated that those present had gone there for the purpose of [illegible] the Atlantic Steam Packet Company. In common with all of them, he wished the greatest success to that company; but at the same time he could not sanctify his opinions, and he hoped they would not think the worse of him for openly announcing them. He repeated that he wished every success to the Atlantic Company, but at the same time he must say that he thought there was a great deal of delusion and mistaken talent in it. He had not heard anything that evening calculated to convince him that the more carriage of passengers and mails would be at such extraordinary advantage to the country at large as some persons seemed to think would be the case. The only way to judge of the future was by the experience of the past. He instanced, for example, that Ireland had possessed a large passenger trade for many years. Every Irish gentleman passed through on his way to London, and yet it was the most stand-still place in existence. He did not wish to throw cold water on the undertaking, but as he had been invited, under the circumstances, to express his views on the subject. He decried that passenger traffic encouraged trade and promoted manufactures. For upwards of a century all the mail and passenger traffic from England to two-thirds of the habitable globe started from Falmouth—one of the most ignorant towns in the south of England. Again he said, that he wished the Galway company every success. If there were a trade—well and good—if the holds of their vessels were taken with merchandise to America, they would have a fair prospect of success; but he believed in his conscience that they would derive more advantage by having a steam communication with France or Russia than by establishing the post and line to America. It was said that England, and Liverpool especially, were jealous of this project. He would stake his existence that there was no jealousy in the bosom of any man in England on the subject. He believed that anything tending to promote the benefit of the most remote part of the country would be sympathised with, rather than impeded by the people of England. Why, then, throw out in the newspapers that England wished to crush this project—that Liverpool was jealous of it, and desired to strangle it? This was unworthy of them."

Scotland.

The Hume Monument at Montrose.—The inauguration of the monument to the memory of the late Mr. Joseph Hume took place at his native town, Montrose, on Saturday week, in the presence of from 6000 to 10,000 persons. The Provost delivered an inaugural address, and the statue was then unveiled amid enthusiastic cheering. The statue, which has been executed by Mr. Calder Marshall, of London, is in Portland stone, and is about 9 feet in height. The monument has been erected at a cost of 500*l.*, raised by public subscription.

The Forbes Mackenzie Act Commission.—The commissioners appointed to examine the working of the Forbes Mackenzie Act in Scotland met in the Town Hall, Inverness, last week. The commissioners present were Sheriff Monteith (in the chair), Professor Swinton, Mr. Maclean, of Ardgour, Mr. M'Geachy, and Mr. Leslie, of Warthill. The investigation lasted nearly nine hours. The evidence was generally favourable to the working of the Act.

The Ayrshire Banking Company.—An action has been raised in the Court of Session, at the instance of the liquidators of the Western Bank, against no fewer than 250 parties in Ayrshire and Wigtonshire, by whom nearly the whole stock of the Ayrshire Bank was held prior to its amalgamation with the Western Bank.

Trial for Murder by Poisoning.—At the recent sitting of the Inverness Circuit Court David Ross was charged with poisoning his uncle, Walter Ross, carrier, Invergordon, by means of arsenic. They lived in the same house, and the libel charged the prisoner with administering the poison in repeated doses between the 21st of February and the 17th of April, 1859, chiefly in tea, toddy, sago, gruel, &c., by which his uncle died on the 17th of April. Fifty witnesses were examined, and from their evidence and that of the medical men there was no doubt of the fact that death had been caused by arsenic, and Lord Cowan in summing up said there could also be no doubt that the poison was administered to deceased by some other person. The prisoner and his wife attended him during his illness, and no other person gave him either food or medicine. It was proved that the prisoner had purchased arsenic at Tain in February last, but it was contended for the defence that he bought it for the purpose of killing rats, and several witnesses bore testimony to the good feeling that existed between the prisoner and deceased, and to the presence of rats on the premises. The jury after an absence of an hour and a half returned a verdict of Not Proven, by a majority of one.

Railways.

Explosion of an Engine on the South Coast—On Monday evening as a goods train of 45 trucks was proceeding from Lewes to London, with one engine in front and another in the rear, the boiler of the leading engine burst, when the train was about a mile from Ashcombe. The engine driver and fireman were thrown to a distance of 30 yards, the former with his leg and collar bone broken, and the latter with both legs broken, and one thigh smashed in so shocking a manner that he died soon after his removal to Brighton Hospital. The engine was thrown across the up line, while the tender fell in a transverse direction across the down line. A luggage truck filled with pockets of hops was next to the tender, but owing to the propulsion of the train by the engine in the rear, a cattle truck containing two cows was forced completely over the hop truck, and upon the top of the engine. The guards and the drivers of the second engine escaped unhurt.

Obituary.

The Earl of Jersey died on Monday last at the family residence in Berkeley Square, in his 87th year. His lordship [illegible] Earl of Jersey, Viscount Villiers of Dartford, and Baron Hyde, County of Kent, in the peerage of England, and Viscount Grandison [illegible] in the peerage of Ireland, was the eldest of the two sons of the fourth earl, by his marriage with the eldest [illegible] of the Right Hon. [illegible], Baronet, of Hagbourne. He was born in August, [illegible] and succeeded to the family honours on the death of his father, [illegible]. He married, first, in 1804, Frances Anne, eldest daughter of the late Right Honourable Spencer Perceval, by whom he had issue [illegible]. He married, secondly, in 1821, Sarah, only daughter of Mr. Bonham Child, of Fleet Street, and leaves surviving issue—Viscount Villiers, Hon. Frederick William Hyde Villiers, Hon. Francis William Child Villiers, and Lady Adelaide married to Captain Alexander, late Fifth Dragoons. [illegible] will be succeeded [illegible] Chess at the [illegible] last year. His lordship [illegible] the family by [illegible] the death of his father in 1805. For a few months in 1830 he held the office of Lord Chamberlain of the King's Household, but on the [illegible] Lord Grey succeeding the Duke of Wellington as First Lord of the Treasury he retired. On Sir Robert Peel's accession to office, in 1834, his lordship was again appointed Lord Chamberlain. In 1841 he was appointed Master [illegible] Horse, which office he held until the breaking up of Sir Robert Peel's second Administration. Although a thorough Conservative in politics, he supported the Government of Sir Robert Peel in the repeal of the Corn Laws and all the [illegible] measures of Reform introduced by that statesman. When the Earl of Derby came into power, in 1852, he was selected, it was stated at the Duchess of Montrose's request, to fill the post of Master of the Horse, and on the Earl of Aberdeen succeeding to Lord Derby in the following year, he was [illegible] by the same noble Lord. His lordship [illegible] Lord Chamberlain's Cabinet. Since that period his lordship, though [illegible] a young and increasing family, retired into private life. Lord Jersey was formerly a warm patron of the turf, and was a member of [illegible] of its most successful supporters. He [illegible] a few years after having won the Derby with a horse called Bay Middleton. His lordship is succeeded in the titles and estates by his eldest son, Viscount Villiers, who was born in 1808, and married in 1841 Miss Peel, eldest daughter of the late Sir Robert Peel, by whom he has a [illegible] family.

Major the Hon. Charles Murray, third son of the second Earl of Mansfield, died at Paris on the 17th ult. He became a major in the 17th Dragoons in June, 1825, but he had for many years retired from active service, and has resided principally on the Continent. He had attained the age of 79 years.

His Excellency the Hon. Louis V. Mason, United States Ambassador at the French Court, died on Monday last in Paris. His death was quite unexpected, as only a day or two previously he was in perfect health. Mr. Mason was originally engaged in the [illegible] profession, but was subsequently attorney-general [illegible] his native state, Virginia, and was an [illegible] friend of the respected [illegible] he [illegible] Minister at Paris during the latter [illegible] Tyler's Presidency.

The Rev John Angell James, of Birmingham, died at his residence in that town on Thursday morning, after an illness of only half an hour, in his 75th year. He was well known as an author, and was one of the most prominent members of the Independent body. His work, "The Anxious Inquirer," is said to have had a larger circulation than any book of its class, having been translated into [illegible] languages. He had been connected with Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, as pastor for nearly 36 years. On the occasion of completing the [illegible] year of his ministry a celebration of the event took place, which was attended by [illegible] from all parts of the country, from America, and the [illegible] and [illegible] testimonials [illegible] a handsome chapel was erected at Edgbaston at the cost of many thousand pounds, in which he preached what proved to be his last sermon on the evening of Sunday week.

Miscellaneous.

The British Pompeii.—The lovers of our national antiquities will rejoice to learn that the Duke of Cleveland has let to the Committee of Excavations four acres of ground at Wroxeter, the two on which the excavations have hitherto been carried on, and two additional acres adjoining, to be kept permanently open to the public, and not be filled up again. Four acres of the buildings of a Roman town in Britain, ruined in the fifth century, will be a monument of great interest, and not the less so by contrast with the mediæval castles and abbeys with which the county abounds. All that remains now is to obtain money enough to carry out actively the designs of the committee. The recent excavations prove beyond a doubt that the whole mass of the ancient Roman city—that is, the floors and lower parts of the walls—exists underground, and also that a better place could not have been chosen for excavating than that selected by the committee. The following details, gathered from a lecture delivered by Mr. Wright at the recent meeting of the Archæological Association of Birmingham, will be read with interest. After describing by the help of some large maps and plans, the topography of Uriconium, and giving a minute account of its brief history from the second century to its recent exhumation, he stated that it was buried under soil varying from 2 to 3 feet in depth, and had evidently been destroyed by violent means. The recent excavations, carried on with great difficulty and at a large expense, had shown the city to be of very great extent, and certainly the largest remnant of the Roman period in Britain. The date of its destruction could be pretty nearly ascertained by the coins found near the skeleton of an old man, who, when the city was attacked by barbarians, had taken refuge in a hypocaust, the remains of the box in woody fragments and the nails having been found near the coins. From these it appears that the city must have been destroyed about the close of the fourth century, or some 1500 years ago. In the corner of another small room of the baths several skeletons had been found, evidently of persons who had hidden themselves when the city was finally destroyed. Among the other remains found, were large quantities of coins, ladies' hair-pins of horn and bone, brooches, bracelets, rings, and other articles of personal use, two ornaments of silver, a quern for grinding corn, spears, javelins, pickaxes of curious form, and other implements, pieces of pottery, glass, human and animal bones, Corinthian capitals admirably carved, and which must have surmounted columns at the least 20 feet high. Several skulls, remarkable for deformities eminently puzzling to physiologists and phrenologists, and which appear to have belonged to some of the savages by whom Uriconium was destroyed, had also been discovered. These and the other relics have been deposited in the museum at Shrewsbury. The chief architectural peculiarities of the city were that its houses, as far as excavated, consisted of one story only, that the doors were very high in the walls, and that they were apparently lighted from the roof, that these roofs were generally flat, and the floors generally cemented, and not mosaic, as in many Roman cities. A very large palace building had been discovered at the corner of two streets. It was 220 feet long and 80 feet wide, and had a central open court, paved with tiles bricks, in zig-zag fashion. Near it a building had been exhumed, where large numbers of bones, including two very fine antlers of a red deer, were found, and as these were mostly sawn, and several weights were found near, it was supposed to be a manufactory of bone and ivory goods. Only a very small portion of the soil had at present been removed, but enough had been done to show that a very valuable and to the illustration of the history of Britain at the period of the decline of the Roman power would be obtained by further research. The pottery found was of two classes, a red kind and one white, and exactly similar to the modern Broseley ware. Specimens of pottery in which harder substances had been employed, to form mortaria and triturating vessels, had been discovered, with pieces of remarkably good window glass, grains of wheat, and an elegantly formed vase or urn of Upchurch pottery, almost in an entire state, which contained besides the common soil with which it was filled a single iron nail and some bones not human. In the southern part of the ground an undoubted street had been met with running eastward from the Watling Street Road, and bounded apparently on the south by houses. This street appeared about four yards south of the centre of the great building containing so many hypocausts. The progress of the excavations in the more important part of the area has hitherto been impeded by the accumulation of earth taken out of them, but as it has now been resolved to keep a portion of the ruins open to the public, this difficulty will be at once removed by carting the earth away.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN.—Oct. 8.

Pine Apples and Grapes continue plentiful. Pears consist chiefly of Marie Louise, Duchesse d'Angoulême, and Beurré Diel. The best dessert Apples at present in the market are the Ribston and King of the Pippins. What are termed soft fruits are now nearly over. New Madeira Oranges have just arrived. Good Filberts may be had for 9d. per lb. Cabbages, Beans, Carrots, and Artichokes may be obtained in quantity. Cauliflowers are scarce. Potatoes realise from 4s. to 8s. per cwt. Cucumbers abundant. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Gardenias, Dahlias, Violets, Mignonette, China Asters, Heaths, and Roses.

BRITISH WOOLS.—London, Friday, Oct. 7.

The large amount of business transacted during the last few weeks has naturally produced a comparative scarcity of wool in this market, and at the same time the wants of the consumers having been supplied there is no demand of any urgency. Prices remain firm.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Oct. 3.

The supply of Beasts is very much smaller, yet the trade is by no means brisk; however, prices on the average are better. The number of Sheep is about the same as on Monday last. The demand has increased, and prices consequently have advanced. Good Calves are in demand. From Germany and Holland there are 1190 Beasts, 6130 Sheep, and 64 Calves; from Scotland, 40 Beasts; from Ireland, 550; and 2100 from the northern and midland counties.

Thursday, Oct. 6.

The number of Beasts is not large, but fully equal to the demand. The warm weather operates against the trade, and prices are scarcely as good as on Monday. There are very few good sheep on offer, and they realise Monday's quotations, but trade is dull for inferior. Calves are rather lower. From Germany and Holland there are 179 Beasts, 1290 Sheep, and 194 Calves; from the northern and midland counties, 500 Beasts; and 112 Milch Cows from the home counties.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Oct. 3.

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was small, and nearly the whole of very poor quality and condition; the few good samples were picked at fully last week's prices, but the value of the others continues to be irregular. The attendance again included several distant buyers from the country; this caused foreign Wheat to be held for somewhat enhanced rates, which resulted in a very limited business; we advance our quotations for old Dantzic 2s per qr. Fine malting Barley brings full prices, inferior descriptions are difficult of sale and rather cheaper; for foreign grinding there is a good demand. New Beans are 1s. per qr. cheaper. Peas are unaltered in value, with a good demand for fine boilers. The Oat trade is quiet, but Russians bring an advance of 6d. per qr. Prices of Flour are unaltered.

Friday, Oct. 7.

The weather during the past week has been remarkably fine and unusually warm. Our Baltic and Hamburgh advices of this morning generally quote an advance of 1s. to 2s. per qr. upon Wheat. Great firmness has characterised the Wheat trade during the past week, and in several of the principal markets of the kingdom it is quoted 1s. per qr. dearer, particularly for fine qualities, but this in many instances has produced inactivity. Business in all kinds of Spring Corn has remained without alteration. Excepting in Liverpool and Glasgow, where Flour is quoted 1s. per sack higher, no change has occurred. The arrivals of grain and seed-laden vessels off the coast for orders from Southern Europe are again considerable this week, consisting chiefly of Wheat and Maize. The sales also continue on a liberal scale, including Marianopoli Wheat at 43s. 9d. to 45s. and Taganrog Ghirka at 42s. 6d. to 44s. per 496 lbs.; Ibrail Maize at 25s. 6d. o 26s. 9d. per 480 lbs.; Galatz at 28s. 9d. to 29s. 3d. and Odessa at 27s. 10 d. each per 492 lbs.; Egyptian Barley at 22s. 3d. and Odessa at 23s. 6d. per 400 lbs.; Taganrog and Odessa Linseed at 44s. 3d. to 44s. 6d. per qr. delivered. The arrivals of foreign Barley are large, of other grain moderate. The attendance at to-day's market was small; nevertheless English Wheat commanded the extreme prices of Monday, and in a few instances that day's currency was rather exceeded for foreign, but the demand continues to be limited. In the value of Barley, Beans, and Peas there is no alteration. The Oats trade is slow, and Russian qualities are 6d. per qr. cheaper.

Liverpool, Tuesday, Oct. 4.—Grain market dull and attendance small. Holders of Wheat ask higher prices, which checks business. Fine French Flour firm; lower sorts neglected. Indian Corn and Egyptian Beans rather cheaper, and in limited demand. Other articles without change.

Friday, Oct. 7.—In Wheat there was a fair business at full Friday's prices. Flour steady at the advance. Indian Corn 6d. dearer. Retail trade—Beans steady; Oats and meal without alteration. Limited attendance at market.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL

administered with the greatest success in cases of Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Rheumatism, Gout, Neuralgia, General Debility, Diseases of the Skin, Rickets, Infantile Wasting, and all Scrofulous Affections, is the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its superior curative effects, unquestionably the most economical of all kinds. Its immeasurable therapeutic superiority over every other variety is attested by innumerable spontaneous testimonials from Physicians and Surgeons of European reputation.

Opinion of Baron Fouquier,

Professor at the University of Paris, Physician to the Majesty Louis Philippe, &c.

"You have rendered an eminent service to science by acquainting practitioners with the cause of the frequent irregularity in the effects of Cod Liver Oil, and directing their attention to a proper choice. You have thus shown us the means of rendering highly effectual the administration of one of the most powerful medicines we are acquainted with."

Sold only in imperial half pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s. 9d.; quarts, 9s., capsuled, and labelled with Dr. de Jongh's stamp and signature, without which none can possibly be genuine, by most respectable Chemists.

THE NATURE-PRINTED BRITISH SEA-WEEDS.—With Engraved Magnified Dissections of the whole Species described in the Volume. The Descriptions by WILLIAM G. JOHNSTONE and ALEXANDER CROALL. Nature-Printed by HENRY BRADBURY.

The NATURE-PRINTED BRITISH SEA-WEEDS will form four handsome Volumes, in royal 8vo, consisting of about 220 plates, with the necessary letter-press, extending to about 900 pages.

 Vol. II. will be published in November.

"For this kind of work Nature Printing is exactly adapted. Every delicate and minutable ramification is most attractively and accurately represented. The fifty-six plates in this volume can scarcely be surpassed, and have not, as far as we know, been equalled. Those who will not give an hour to the letter-press may find more than an hour's delight in the plates. For ourselves, we have found them pleasing and still pleasing during several inspections. The volume is handsomely got up, and will make a very attractive drawing-room table book at home or at the sea-side. If the three succeeding volumes are as beautifully illustrated, we shall be glad to welcome them."—Athenæum.

News of the Week.

THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH on Tuesday delivered a speech at Bordeaux which has produced as great a sensation in the ranks of the Roman Catholic priesthood as that which was produced in the political world a few years ago by the celebrated speech which proclaimed in the same city that "the Empire was peace." An address had been presented to the EMPEROR by the CARDINAL ARCHBISHOP of Bordeaux in the name of the clergy of the diocese, in which HIS MAJESTY was urged to put an end to the anxieties of the Catholic world by securing to the POPE the integrity of his temporal power. In reply to this address, the EMPEROR indirectly rebuked the ultramontane violence which has recently been exhibited by several of the French bishops, by thanking his Eminence for having understood his high mission by "endeavouring to strengthen confidence in HIS MAJESTY'S good intentions rather than spread needless alarms." The EMPEROR expressed his hope that a new era of glory would rise for the Church on the day when the whole world would share his conviction that "the temporal power of the POPE was not opposed to the liberty and independence of Italy." HIS MAJESTY said that the Government which restored the Holy Father to his throne could only give him such counsels as were dictated by a respectful and sincere devotedness to his interests; but HIS MAJESTY was anxious, and with good cause, about the day which "must soon come," when Rome will be evacuated by his troops; for Europe cannot allow the occupation of Rome by the French troops, which has already lasted for 10 years, to be indefinitely prolonged. "When our army shall be withdrawn," said HIS MAJESTY, "what will it leave behind? Anarchy, terror, or peace?" These are questions, he said, the importance of which no one can deny, and in order to resolve them in the times in which we live, it is necessary, instead of appealing to ardent passions, to search with calmness for the truth, and to pray to Providence to enlighten peoples as well as Sovereigns on "the wise exercise of their rights, and the extent of their duties."

It was reported in Paris on Thursday that the Plenipotentiaries at Zurich had at length received instructions to put their signatures to the Treaty of Peace, so far as it relates to the surrender of Lombardy and the amount of the Lombard debt to be borne by Sardinia. The question of the Duchies, it is said, is to be referred to a Congress at which all the Great Powers, including England, will be represented.

Accounts from Constantinople state that the conspiracy recently discovered in that city was far more serious than at first supposed. It appears to have had ramifications in all parts of the Empire, and to have numbered among its adherents at least two members of the SULTAN'S family, several Pashas, Muftis, and other personages of high rank, and about 15,000 troops. The object of the conspiracy was not only to depose the SULTAN in favour of his brother, who is very popular with the orthodox Mussulmans, but to obtain the recall of the Hatti Humayoun of 1856, and to put an end to the existing system of wasteful extravagance, of which the troops and the people are victims. The latest news adds to these details that incendiary machines which were intended to burn the European quarters of the capital have been discovered, and that the Ambassadors have held meetings to deliberate on the measures to be recommended for the public safety.

Home News.

THE QUEEN'S RETURN FROM SCOTLAND.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family left Balmoral at half-past 10 on Thursday morning, and took the railway at Banchory at half-past 12. The Royal party lunched at Stonehaven, passed through Perth at 4, and arrived at Edinburgh at 20 minutes after 6, the railway journey of 177 miles having been run in less than six hours. Her Majesty alighted at St. Margaret's station, and drove through the park to Holyrood under a salute from the Castle heights. The Duke of Buccleuch, General Viscount Melville, and Sheriff Gordon were in attendance to receive the Royal party. The Duke of Newcastle accompanied her Majesty as Secretary of State. The Queen and Royal family remained at Holyrood on Thursday night, and at 10 o'clock yesterday morning left Edinburgh for Loch Katrine, in the Trossachs, to inaugurate the opening of the new waterworks for the supply of the city of Glasgow, returning to Holyrood in the evening. This morning the Queen, Prince Consort, and Royal family will leave Edinburgh for Penrhyn Castle, near Bangor, travelling by the Lancashire and Carlisle and London and North-Western Railways, through Carlisle, Lancaster, Preston and Chester. The Royal train is appointed to leave Edinburgh at 9 o'clock, and to arrive at Bangor at 5.40 this afternoon, stopping half an hour at Lancaster at 2.12 for refreshment.

THE QUEEN AT BALMORAL.—On Wednesday week the Queen and Princess Alice drove to Alt na Gussack. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went out deer-stalking. The Duke of Newcastle arrived on a visit. In the evening her Majesty gave a ball to the gillies and tenants. On Thursday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, drove to Craig Spanie and rode back to the Castle. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. The Prince of Wales drove to Mar Lodge. Mr. Headlam arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Friday the Queen, accompanied by the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice, undertook the ascent of Ben Muick Dhui. The Royal party left the Castle at a quarter before 9 o'clock in the morning and drove by Castleton to the Derry Shiel, in Glen Derry, where they found their hill ponies. They reached the summit of Ben Muick Dhui by 2 o'clock, and returned to Balmoral at a quarter-past 8 in the evening. Mr. Headlam left the Castle. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Princess Helena, drove to Loch Bullig. The Royal party then proceeded to Doldoonie, where they mounted the hill ponies and rode by the Beltie of Gairn and the Hill of Larich, and returned to the Castle in the evening. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went out deer-stalking. Colonel the Hon. Robert Bruce and Dr. Baly arrived on a visit. On Sunday the Queen, Prince Consort, Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice, attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie; the Rev. Dr. Tulloch officiated. On Monday the Queen Prince Consort, Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice drove to Balloch Buie, where the Princes shot, the woods being driven for deer. Her Majesty and Princess Alice mounted their ponies at the Bridge of Dee, and rode to the Falls of the Garr-valt. The Royal party returned to the Castle in the evening. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, drove to the woods of Garmaddie, whence they walked to the hill of Cannape and Invergelder. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking, and met her Majesty on his return. The Royal party drove home from Invergelder. The Prince of Wales rode to Invercauld.

THE PRINCE OF WALES arrived at Buckingham Palace yesterday from Holyrood Palace. His Royal Highness will leave London for Frewen Hall, Oxford, on Monday, to commence his studies at the university.

PRINCE NAPOLEON.—It is reported from Paris that Prince Napoleon will visit London at the end of the present week, and will remain in England five days.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor and Empress arrived at Bordeaux on Monday and were received with great enthusiasm by the inhabitants. Most of the Italian residents in the town were arrested during his Majesty's stay, but were released after his departure. These arrests were made on account of a despatch having been received from the Prefect of Algiers, stating that four passports had been stolen from the Sardinian Consulate in that place, with which four Italians had started for France and passed through Montpellier, where further trace of them was lost. On Tuesday morning the Emperor received the authorities and clergy of the city, when the Cardinal Archbishop delivered the following address:—

"Sire,—The clergy of this diocese, through the organ of its Archbishop, is happy to renew to your Majesty the sincere homage of its respect and devotion. It is with a pride truly French that it contemplates the monarch whose valiant sword has raised so high the glory of our country. It is with joy that it salutes the mother of the Imperial Prince and the noble Sovereign (Souveraine) who knows so well to unite decision with kindness, and who in difficult times manfully undertook the care of public business. Sire, when eight years ago the city of Bordeaux gave you an enthusiastic reception, the walls of our ancient cathedral re-echoed to the shouts of the multitude; we were there, my priests and myself, assisting joyfully at what we supposed to be the baptism of the new empire. We then prayed for him who had stopped the ever-rising tide of revolution, who had restored to the Church and to the priesthood the crown of glory, to steal which from them had been attempted, and who inaugurated his great destinies by restoring to the Vicar of Jesus Christ his city, his people, and the integrity of his temporal power. We now, Sire, pray with more fervour, if possible, that God may give you the means, as he has given you the desire, to remain faithful to that Christian policy which has called down a blessing upon your name, and which is, perhaps, the secret of the prosperity and the source of the glories of your reign. We pray with unswerving confidence, with a hope which deplorable events and sacrilegious acts of violence have not been able to shake, and the motive of this hope, the realisation of which appears now so difficult, is, after God, you Sire, who have been, and still wish to be, the eldest son of the Church; you, who spoke these memorable words:—'The temporal sovereignty of the venerable head of the Church is intimately connected with the fame of Catholicism and the liberty and independence of Italy;'—a noble idea, conformable to the sentiments professed by the august head of your dynasty, when, speaking of the temporal power of the Popes, he said, 'Centuries have established this, and they have done well.' Yesterday, when your Majesty for the first time entered the elegant city which has arisen, as if by enchantment, on a once solitary strand; when you were seen kneeling in an untinished sanctuary, a blessed asylum shut out from the noise of the world, and open heavenwards to receive the falling dews, i appeared to all that the immaculate patroness of the [illegible] shielded you, your august wife, and your beloved son under [illegible] maternal protection. You will acquit a debt of gratitude to [illegible] by preparing a triumph for her Son in the person of her [illegible] Such triumph is worthy of you, Sire; it will put an end to [illegible] anxieties of the Catholic world, who will hail it with transports."

The Emperor replied to this address as follows:—

"I thank your Eminence for the sentiments you have [illegible] expressed. You render justice to my intentions, [illegible] however, overlooking the difficulties which obstruct them, [illegible] I believe you understand your high mission in endeavouring to strengthen confidence rather than to spread useless [illegible] I thank you for having recalled my words, for I entertain the firm hope that a new era of glory will arise for the Church [illegible] the day when the whole world will share my conviction that the temporal power of the Holy Father is not opposed to the liberty and independence of Italy. I [illegible] not now enter into details which the grave question you have touched upon would give rise to, and I confine myself to reminding you that the Government which placed the Holy Father on his throne can only give him counsel inspired by a respectful and sincere devotion to his interests. But he is anxious, and with good cause, as regards the day, which must soon come, when Rome will be evacuated by our troops; for Europe cannot allow that the occupation which has lasted for 10 years shall be indefinitely prolonged, and when our army withdraws, what will it leave behind? Anarchy, terror, or peace? This is a question the importance of which no one can deny. But, believe me, in the times in which we live, to resolve it, we must, instead of appealing to ardent passions, endeavour calmly to fathom the truth, and pray to Providence to enlighten peoples and kings on the wise exercise of their rights and extent of their duties. I do not doubt that the prayers of your Eminence and those of the clergy will continue to call down the blessings of Heaven on the Empress, my son, and myself."

The Emperor and Empress returned to St. Cloud on Wednesday, and on the following day his Majesty presided over a Privy Council. It is said that a Congress has been agreed upon, and that all the Great Powers, including England, will be represented at it. Several alarming rumours were current on the Bourse on Thursday, including the outbreak of a revolution at Rome, a conflict between the English and French naval forces in the Tangier waters, and the departure of Baron de Bourqueney from Zurich, but they have been semi-officially contradicted. It has been reported in Paris this week that the French Government is determined to claim from Sardinia the amount of the expenses incurred by France in the recent war with Austria, but there is at present no official confirmation of the rumour. The French bishops and clergy have latterly assumed a very bold tone in preaching against all who dare to question the temporal power of the Pope, and the Bishop of Orleans has published a protest against any attempt to interfere with the Holy See. The Bishop of Châlons has addressed a letter to the Univers to say that "it would be an insult to the bishops and priests of France" to suppose that they can have any other sentiments respecting the present situation of the Holy See than those expressed in the pastoral letters of the Bishops of Arras, Poitiers, Algiers, Orleans, &c.; and the Bishop of Beauvais has written to the Bishop of Orleans to declare that he adheres to his protest. The clergy of Paris have arranged to give a great banquet in honour of Monseigneur de Tulle, who preached in two churches on Sunday last in favour of upholding the rights of the Pope. Five French ships and two frigates, commanded by a Vice-Admiral, arrived at Algesiras on the 7th inst. on their way to Morocco, and several French frigates have sailed for the coast of Africa with 6000 men. These troops will be landed at the port of Nemours, formerly Djemma Gazaoua, situate seven or eight leagues distant from the frontiers of Morocco, and will reinforce the expeditionary corps which is to occupy the district of Ouchda.

SPAIN AND MOROCCO.—Letters received from Madrid state that the Emperor of Morocco has ratified the arrangement concerning the frontier line of Melilla, and has expressed his readiness to give to Spain all the satisfaction she demanded. The Madrid journals state that the ultimatum sent to the Emperor of Morocco was as follows:—

"On a day indicated the Moorish Government shall cause the Spanish flag to be saluted by artilley at Melilla, Ceuta, and other places on the coast. It shall immediately pay an indemnity for the expenses occasioned by the preparation of the expedition. It shall concede near the Spanish fortresses in Africa a certain extent of territory, at the extremity of which it shall construct blockhouses to be occupied by soldiers of the Emperor's guard, charged to prevent any act of hostility against the Spaniards. In case the Kabyles should present themselves in large numbers to attack the Spanish territory, the Spanish authorities may, if they think fit, send troops to assist the Moorish soldiers."

SWITZERLAND.—Letters from Zurich dated Thursday state that the Plenipotentiaries have at length received instructions to put their signature to the Villafranca treaty, confirming the transfer of Lombardy to France, the further conveyance of that country to the King of Sardinia, together with provisions for the payment of the national debt of the Lombard dominions to Austria, as well as confirming the newly traced boundary between the kingdoms of Piedmont and Venetia. The questions of the Duchies are to be left to a Congress. The delay which has lately occurred is caused by the refusal of Austria to diminish the amount of the debt of Lombardy to be borne by Sardinia.

PRUSSIA.—The Prussian Government has sent a reply to the Austrian circular relative to the proposed reform of the German Confederation and the recent speech of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, from which the following are extracts:—

"The opinion of the Prince Regent is, that the full confidence which he places in his cousin and friend the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha does not allow it to be supposed that there exist motives to reserve the rights of other German Princes, either of one in particular, or of all of them together, and that the words of the Duke, which expressed the often repeated want of reform of the Federal Constitution, exclude all encouragement of tendencies to achieve that end by illegal means. The

however still undecided great questions which it would be neither prudent nor just to leave pending; and if the solution of them is still to remain reserved for the future the Prussian Government will not carry out selfish tendencies and private views, but will fulfil duties both to Prussia and to Germany."

Holland and Belgium.—The Luxembourg Railway was inaugurated on the 4th and 5th inst. with considerable pomp, the ceremony attracting an unusually large attendance of distinguished persons, including some whose presence was to be attributed to the anticipated courtesies between the reigning houses of Holland and Belgium. King Leopold sent his Minister, M. Tesch, on a special mission to represent him at the ceremony, and to compliment in his name the young Prince of Orange and Prince Henry of the Netherlands. These advances were most courteously received by the Dutch Princes, who greeted M. Tesch with marks of great cordiality, and received from him the official announcement that the article of the constitution banishing the Princes of the house of Orange from the Belgian territory had been expunged. The Grand Vicar, after blessing the line and locomotives, made an appropriate discourse, and the railway company afterwards gave to a large party a magnificent banquet in the Town Hall. The railway, as well as its branches into Prussia and Holland, now in course of construction, is the work of an English firm, Messrs. Waring, of Westminster, who, in addition to the congratulations of the shareholders and directors on the successful issue of their undertaking, received, on the occasion of the inauguration, the Cross of Leopold from the King of the Belgians, and that of the Oaken Crown from the King of Holland. The Count of Flanders has since arrived at the Hague on a visit to the Dutch Court.

Saxe-Coburg Gotha.—The following is a summary of the despatch sent by the Grand Duke to the Austrian Cabinet:—

"The Austrian Cabinet must have misunderstood the words of the Duke, as he only expressed a desire for the union of Germany, which does not render necessary the exclusion of Austria from that union. The Duke however as a reigning Sovereign must make the reservation that he does not consider that an account of words spoken by him is due to any one, and least of all to another Cabinet. The Duke, during the late war, was ready to take up arms for the guarantee of the provinces of Austria not included in the German Confederation, and has always most seriously persisted in the support of Austria by Germany, but such support has lately been rendered impossible by the imperfections of the Federal Constitution, and by the sudden conclusion of peace by Austria. The Duke expresses a doubt that the Emperor of Austria, for whom personally he entertained the highest esteem, had any knowledge of the note that had been addressed to him; he therefore insists that his reply should be submitted to the Emperor."

Italy.—The following despatch contains some further details of the assassination of Count Anviti at Parma on the 5th inst.:—

"The Count Anviti, formerly Colonel of the troops of Parma, and held in detestation by the people for the cruelties he practised while Director General of the Police under the late Duke, was passing through Parma on his way to Piacenza, but was recognised at the railway station and arrested. The populace, informed of his arrest, broke open the barracks of the Gendarmerie where he was confined, and, having seized the Count, dragged him through the city, while he received blows on all sides. His hands were fastened together with a cord, and he was thus pulled through the streets until he arrived opposite a café he was in the habit of frequenting, where, while he was still alive, his head was cut off, and then carried in triumph to the Grand Place, where it was placed on the top of a column. The cries of joy of the populace increased the terrors of the scene. The National Guard and the troops were called out, but arrived when all was over. At 9 o'clock in the evening the dead body was conveyed to the hospital."

The French Consul on Saturday received orders from Paris to quit his post in Parma, unless prompt justice be done and exemplary chastisement inflicted on the authors of this murder. The Government of Parma immediately informed the French Cabinet that the most severe example should be made of those who were guilty of the murder. The Dictator Farini left Turin for Parma on Monday, in order to see that signal justice was administered, and has since issued two energetic proclamations declaring that the guilty shall be punished and the name of Italy shall not be dishonoured. The latest news states that upwards of 50 persons suspected of being concerned in the murder have been arrested, and that the Procureur-Général and the Juge Instructeur in the case have been suspended. The townspeople have begun to deliver up their arms, and the Piedmontese troops garrisoned at Piacenza have been sent to Parma. M. Mazzini has addressed a letter to King Victor Emmanuel, dated from Florence, where he was able for three weeks in September to evade the researches of the police, who had been warned of his presence. In this letter M. Mazzini declares that, far from wishing to excite any party against the policy now followed, he approves and is ready to unite in it; he makes the sacrifice of his particular opinions, provided the King gives independence and unity to Italy; only he recommends the King to dare, and points out how he is infinitely stronger than he thinks. A despatch from Bologna states that on the 7th inst. the functionaries of the Government took the oath of allegiance to the King of Sardinia. The citizens of Ferrara, Ravenna, and Forli, following the example of Bologna, have hoisted the Sardinian flag, and have adopted the arms of Savoy in the midst of the tumultuous enthusiasm of all present. The official journals of Tuscany, Parma, and Modena are printed with the arms of Savoy, and the press ys of Piedmont are observed throughout Central Italy. A Mo the Custom houses on the frontiers of Tuscany, and na, Parma, and the Romagna have been abolished, ferent e Sardinian tariff adopted throughout the dif- ates. Letters from Rome state that the Pope left Rome on Saturday for Castel Gandolfo, where he will have an interview with the King of Naples. It is asserted that his Holiness will prolong his stay at Castel Gandolfo on account of the agitation in Rome. After the departure of the Pope a demonstration took place in honour of the Sardinian Ambassador, and a crowd of visitors, estimated at 10,000, called and left their cards at the Ambassador's residence. The French gendarmerie preserved order, but the effect of the demonstration was profound. The Ambassador left Rome on Monday, when another silent demonstration took place. The 14 persons of rank who were arrested at Naples last week have been released without prosecution. It is credibly reported that 20,000 Neapolitan troops have had orders to cross the frontiers, and join the Papal troops under Gen. Kalbermatten, in order to make a descent on the Legations; while the Duke of Modena with his Austrians will attempt the reduction of the Duchies.

Russia.—A letter from St. Petersburg says that the Emperor had telegraphed to his Ambassadors at Paris, London, and Berlin, to [illegible] at Warsaw on the 15th inst. This news had created some sensation and much conjecture. The Emperor was expected to arrive at Odessa on the 29th inst., and it is reported that after visiting Warsaw, his Majesty and the Cesarewitch will go to Silesia and have an interview with the Prince Regent of Prussia. The Invalide Russe contains an article on the value of the treaties of 1815, and the re-establishment of the Archdukes, which bears a striking resemblance both in arguments and expressions to the recent memorandum of the Sardinian Cabinet. It concludes by saying—

"The right conferred by the treaties of Vienna can no longer be invoked, but the right of the Hapsburg Lorraine d'Este and Bourbon dynasties is less invulnerable than Austria would wish to have it thought. In 1815 Europe considered the existence of those dynasties indispensable for its tranquillity, but now they are not only unanimously rejected by the Italian people, but their restoration would be a source for continued agitations and permanent war. We consequently consider such a restoration as dangerous for general peace and tranquillity, and we think that Europe has in it the same right to work out the political combinations which are best suited to her security as she had in 1815 to place Italy under the domination of Austria."

Circassia.—It is stated that Schamyl will receive a yearly pension of 8000 silver roubles from the Czar, and that his relatives will also be endowed with pensions of from 2000 to 3000 silver roubles, and will reside either at Kaluga or Tula. Since the capture of Schamyl the emigration of the Circassians is said to have become enormous. One party which has arrived at Constantinople numbered 661 persons.

Turkey.—Advices from Constantinople to the 3d inst. state that additional discoveries have been made concerning the conspiracy, and it is asserted that incendiary machines have been discovered which were destined to burn the European quarter of the town. The Ambassadors had held deliberations as to what measures should be recommended for public safety. The official journal contains the names of 34 conspirators of high rank, among whom are Ferik Hussein Pasha, Monastir Pasha, and two brothers of the Governor of Yemen. The brothers of the Sultan are suspected, but they have not been arrested. Djafer Pasha, who leaped into the Bosphorus, is said to have saved himself by swimming, and to have arrived at Corfu. Two of the conspirators brought before the Sultan proclaimed boldly the public wrongs they conspired to redress, and accused the Government of wasteful extravagance, of which the people and the army were the victims. The Grand Vizier had tendered his resignation, but it had been refused; evident dissension reigned among the Ministry, and the fact of a dissolution seemed inevitable. One year's pay is now due to the troops in Asia and the Roumelia. A new loan had been contracted under very heavy conditions. Prince Alfred had replied to the invitation of the Sultan that he would visit Constantinople. Edhem Pasha has been ordered to proceed to Odessa to express the friendly feelings of the Sultan towards the Emperor of Russia. Mustapha Nari Pasha has been appointed Governor-General of Bagdad. The reported appearance of the plague at Beyrout has been denied.

Tunis.—The Malta newspapers state that scenes of fanaticism were enacted at the funeral of the Bey of Tunis. The Moors assailed and stoned the Jews, wounding many of them, some mortally. Some Christians were also wounded. A Minister of the new Bey came to the rescue, striking and killing with his sabre some of the culprits on the spot, and caused 30 of the Mussulmans to be arrested. Tranquillity now prevails.

Egypt.—A despatch from Marseilles states that an envoy of the Sultan had arrived at Alexandria, bearing an order to the Viceroy of Egypt to oppose the continuation of the works on the Suez Canal. The Foreign Consuls had immediately assembled.

India.—Telegraphic despatches have been received in anticipation of the Calcutta mail of September 16th. The following are the details:—

Calcutta.—The Government of Bengal has ratified the commutation of the land tax. The Bill substituting an income tax for the license tax on trades and professions has been severely criticised by the legal members of the Council. The clause exempting civil and military officers from the payment of the tax has been rejected, and the officers are to pay 3 per cent. on their incomes. The Bill thus amended has passed its second reading, and been referred to a select committee. The Chamber of Commerce and other bodies have petitioned against it, and a large public meeting has been held to petition Parliament for an inquiry into the affairs of India on the spot. The clause in the Criminal Procedure Bill, rendering Europeans liable to preliminary investigation before native magistrates, has been successfully resisted. An act has been passed enabling the Governor-General to leave Calcutta for the North-West provinces and the Punjaub, retaining full powers for seven months. A report had been circulated that Lord Canning had been recalled, and that Lord Clarendon was to succeed him, but it was understood to be without foundation. Some of the discharged Europeans have already gained employment. The reduction of all except the 60th Regiment, which is still at Dumdum, has been made.

Madras.—The Madras Government has [illegible] officers to explore the Neilgherry regions, to report on their adaptability for European colonists and sanitary, and to make a statistical report on the nature of the country.

Bombay.—General Sir W. Mansfield is to [illegible] of the Bombay army at the next vacancy. This is considered a stepping-stone to the command of the army in India. It is believed that Lord Clyde has sent in his resignation, and that he has already left Simla for Lucknow, where he will meet the Governor-General and take leave of him prior to the Governor-General's departure from India at the close of the present year. The 5th Dragoon Guards have been ordered [illegible] Kurrachee. A party of 74 Sepoys recently on their passage from Singapore to Bombay in the ship Arracan mutinied, killed their officers, and attempted to kill the captain and crew and obtain possession of the ship. The captain and his officers defended themselves with great courage, and finally succeeded in overpowering the convicts, 29 of whom were killed or drowning. Two of the crew were killed, and several others severely wounded.

China.—Accounts from Hong Kong to the 10th of August state that the Peiho and the Grand Canal are blockaded by the British and French ships of war. Admiral Hope is in a precarious state, and will have to be invalided. The American Minister was still negotiating about proceeding to Pekin. Chung-Kung-kung, the celebrated leader of the rebels, has been killed by his own people.

British Columbia.—General Harney has written to Governor Douglas, stating that he seized the island of San Juan without instructions from the Government at Washington, on account of "insults and indignities shown to American citizens by the British authorities and the establishment of the Hudson's Bay Company by sending a British ship of war from Vancouver's Island to convey the chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company to San Juan for the purpose of seizing an American citizen and forcibly transporting him to Vancouver's Island to be tried by British laws." The General adds,—"I have reported this attempted outrage to my Government, and they will doubtless seek the proper redress from the British Government. In the meantime I have the honour to inform Your Excellency I shall not permit a repetition of that insult, and I shall retain a command on San Juan Island, to protect its citizens in the name of the United States, until I receive further orders from my Government." In reply to this communication, Governor Douglas emphatically denies the alleged insults and indignities, stating that the seizure of an American citizen was never thought of, and that no British ship of war ever went to the island on such a mission. Meanwhile the Victoria House of Assembly has adopted an address to Governor Douglas from which the following are extracts:—

"The House would, therefore, respectfully inquire why the British forces were not landed to assert our just right to the island in question and to uphold the honour of our country and our Queen. The House would most urgently impress upon your Excellency to enforce upon her Majesty's Government the necessity of demanding from the Government of the United States not only the immediate withdrawal of those troops, but also strenuously and at all risks to maintain our right to the island in question, and also to all other islands in the same Archipelago, now so clandestinely, dishonourably, and dishonestly invaded. It is not for our country to be wantonly and insolently insulted, but redress must be demanded. The weakness of the colony is its greatest danger, and at the same time an inducement for the repetition of similar offences by similar persons. Let it therefore be urged upon her Majesty's Government, that sending out colonists rapidly from Great Britain is the surest way of not only maintaining peace but of preserving intact her Majesty's possessions; coupled with this, the House would propose that free and liberal grants of land be given to such emigrants after settling thereon for a certain time."

The British residents on Vancouver's Island were very indignant at the proceedings of General Harney. A very cordial feeling, however, existed between the British and American officers, although the latter continued to fortify their position.

Canada.—Mr. John Head, only son and heir of Sir Edward Head, Governor-General of Canada, has been drowned while bathing near the Falls of the Grande Mère. He had gone to the water with the Hon. J. Browne, son of the Earl of Kenmare, who left him for a time. While alone Mr. Head went in, and was immediately perceived by the voyageurs, who were on a hill close by, to struggle on his back in the water. August Bellemare, one of the voyageurs, dashed into the water and dived 16 feet deep, but without success. He then descended to the bottom by the aid of a pole, found the body, and taking it under one arm with the other climbed to the surface. These acts of daring courage were performed within 100 feet of the Falls of La Grande Mère, and in a place where the least false step would have led him over the falls. The body was but 12 minutes in the water, but though every appliance and effort were made to revive it from 8 o'clock till 12, they were without success. Mr. Head was only 17 years of age.—The Montreal papers contain elaborate accounts of the grand cricket match between the All England Eleven and Twenty-two of Lower Canada. Great enthusiasm prevailed and thousands of people came from far and near both from Canada and the United States to behold the game. The All England Eleven won easily at Montreal, although it was acknowledged that the Lower Canadians showed excellent pluck and good average play. The All England Eleven were to play the Upper Canadian Twenty-two at Hamilton, after they had tried their skill against the New York cricket clubs.

Roman Catholic priesthood as that which was produced in the political world a few years ago by the celebrated speech which proclaimed in the same city that "the Empire was peace." An address had been presented to the EMPEROR by the CARDINAL ARCHBISHOP of Bordeaux in the name of the clergy of the diocese, in which HIS MAJESTY was urged to put an end to the anxieties of the Catholic world by securing to the POPE the integrity of his temporal power. In reply to this address, the EMPEROR indirectly rebuked the ultramontane violence which has recently been exhibited by several of the French bishops, by thanking his Eminence for having understood his high mission by "endeavouring to strengthen confidence in HIS MAJESTY's good intentions rather than spread needless alarms." The EMPEROR expressed his hope that a new era of glory would rise for the Church on the day when the whole world would share his conviction that "the temporal power of the POPE was not opposed to the liberty and independence of Italy." HIS MAJESTY said that the Government which restored the Holy Father to his throne could only give him such counsels as were dictated by a respectful and sincere devotedness to his interests; but HIS MAJESTY was anxious, and with good cause, about the day which "must soon come," when Rome will be evacuated by his troops; for Europe cannot allow the occupation of Rome by the French troops, which has already lasted for 10 years, to be indefinitely prolonged. "When our army shall be withdrawn," said HIS MAJESTY, "what will it leave behind? Anarchy, terror, or peace?" These are questions, he said, the importance of which no one can deny, and in order to resolve them in the times in which we live, it is necessary, instead of appealing to ardent passions, to search with calmness for the truth, and to pray to Providence to enlighten peoples as well as Sovereigns on "the wise exercise of their rights, and the extent of their duties."

It was reported in Paris on Thursday that the Plenipotentiaries at Zurich had at length received instructions to put their signatures to the Treaty of Peace, so far as it relates to the surrender of Lombardy and the amount of the Lombard debt to be borne by Sardinia. The question of the Duchies, it is said, is to be referred to a Congress at which all the Great Powers, including England, will be represented.

Accounts from Constantinople state that the conspiracy recently discovered in that city was far more serious than at first supposed. It appears to have had ramifications in all parts of the Empire, and to have numbered among its adherents at least two members of the SULTAN's family, several Pashas, Muftis, and other personages of high rank, and about 15,000 troops. The object of the conspiracy was not only to depose the SULTAN in favour of his brother, who is very popular with the orthodox Mussulmans, but to obtain the recall of the Hatti Humayoun of 1856, and to put an end to the existing system of wasteful extravagance, of which the troops and the people are victims. The latest news adds to these details that incendiary machines which were intended to burn the European quarters of the capital have been discovered, and that the Ambassadors have held meetings to deliberate on the measures to be recommended for the public safety.

Home News.

THE QUEEN'S RETURN FROM SCOTLAND.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family left Balmoral at half-past 10 on Thursday morning, and took the railway at Banchory at half-past 12. The Royal party lunched at Stonehaven, passed through Perth at 4, and arrived at Edinburgh at 20 minutes after 6, the railway journey of 177 miles having been run in less than six hours. Her Majesty alighted at St. Margaret's station, and drove through the park to Holyrood under a salute from the Castle heights. The Duke of Buccleuch, General Viscount Melville, and Sheriff Gordon were in attendance to receive the Royal party. The Duke of Newcastle accompanied her Majesty as Secretary of State. The Queen and Royal family remained at Holyrood on Thursday night, and at 10 o'clock yesterday morning left Edinburgh for Loch Katrine, in the Trossachs, to inaugurate the opening of the new waterworks for the supply of the city of Glasgow, returning to Holyrood in the evening. This morning the Queen, Prince Consort, and Royal family will leave Edinburgh for Penrhyn Castle, near Bangor, travelling by the Lancashire and Carlisle and London and North-Western Railways, through Carlisle, Lancaster, Preston and Chester. The Royal train is appointed to leave Edinburgh at 9 o'clock, and to arrive at Bangor at 5.40 this afternoon, stopping half an hour at Lancaster at 2.12 for refreshment.

THE QUEEN AT BALMORAL.—On Wednesday week the Queen and Princess Alice drove to Alt na Gussack. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went out deer-stalking. The Duke of Newcastle arrived on a visit. In the evening her Majesty gave a ball to the gillies and tenants. On Thursday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, drove to Craig Spanie and rode back to the Castle. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking. The Prince of Wales drove to Mar Lodge. Mr. Headlam arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Friday the Queen, accompanied by the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice, undertook the ascent of Ben Muick Dhui. The Royal party left the Castle at a quarter before 9 o'clock in the morning and drove by Castleton to the Derry Shiel, in Glen Derry, where they found their hill ponies. They reached the summit of Ben Muick Dhui by 2 o'clock, and returned to Balmoral at a quarter-past 8 in the evening. Mr. Headlam left the Castle. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Princess Helena, drove to Loch Bullig. The Royal party then proceeded to Doldoonie, where they mounted the hill ponies and rode by the Beltie of Gairn and the Hill of Larich, and returned to the Castle in the evening. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales went out deer-stalking. Colonel the Hon. Robert Bruce and Dr. Baly arrived on a visit. On Sunday the Queen, Prince Consort, Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice, attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie; the Rev. Dr. Tulloch officiated. On Monday the Queen Prince Consort, Prince of Wales, and Princess Alice drove to Balloch Buie, where the Princes shot, the woods being driven for deer. Her Majesty and Princess Alice mounted their ponies at the Bridge of Dee, and rode to the Falls of the Garr-valt. The Royal party returned to the Castle in the evening. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, drove to the woods of Garmaddie, whence they walked to the hill of Cannape and Invergelder. The Prince Consort went out deer-stalking, and met her Majesty on his return. The Royal party drove home from Invergelder. The Prince of Wales rode to Invercauld.

THE PRINCE OF WALES arrived at Buckingham Palace yesterday from Holyrood Palace. His Royal Highness will leave London for Frewen Hall, Oxford, on Monday, to commence his studies at the university.

PRINCE NAPOLEON.—It is reported from Paris that Prince Napoleon will visit London at the end of the present week, and will remain in England five days.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor and Empress arrived at Bordeaux on Monday and were received with great enthusiasm by the inhabitants. Most of the Italian residents in the town were arrested during his Majesty's stay, but were released after his departure. These arrests were made on account of a despatch having been received from the Prefect of Algiers, stating that four passports had been stolen from the Sardinian Consulate in that place, with which four Italians had started for France and passed through Montpellier, where further trace of them was lost. On Tuesday morning the Emperor received the authorities and clergy of the city, when the Cardinal Archbishop delivered the following address:—

"Sire,—The clergy of this diocese, through the organ of its Archbishop, is happy to renew to your Majesty the sincere homage of its respect and devotion. It is with a pride truly French that it contemplates the monarch whose valiant sword has raised so high the glory of our country. It is with joy that it salutes the mother of the Imperial Prince and the noble Sovereign (Souveraine) who knows so well to unite decision with kindness, and who in difficult times manfully undertook the care of public business. Sire, when eight years ago the city of Bordeaux gave you an enthusiastic reception, the walls of our ancient cathedral re-echoed to the shouts of the multitude; we were there, my priests and myself, assisting joyfully at what we supposed to be the baptism of the new empire. We then prayed for him who had stopped the ever-rising tide of revolution, who had restored to the Church and to the priesthood the crown of glory, to steal which from them had been attempted, and who inaugurated his great destinies by restoring to the Vicar of Jesus Christ his city, his people, and the integrity of his temporal power. We now, Sire, pray with more fervour, if possible, that God may give you the means, as he has given you the desire, to remain faithful to that Christian policy which has called down a blessing upon your name, and which is, perhaps, the secret of the prosperity and the source of the glories of your reign. We pray with unswerving confidence, with a hope which deplorable events and sacrilegious acts of violence have not been able to shake, and the motive of this hope, the realisation of which appears now so difficult, is, after God, you Sire, who have been, and still wish to be, the eldest son of the Church; you, who spoke these memorable words: — 'The temporal sovereignty of the venerable head of the Church is intimately connected with the fame of Catholicism and the liberty and independence of Italy;' — a noble idea, conformable to the sentiments professed by the august head of your dynasty, when, speaking of the temporal power of the Popes, he said, 'Centuries have established this, and they have done well.' Yesterday, when your Majesty for the first time entered the elegant city which has arisen, as if by enchantment, on a once solitary strand; when you were seen kneeling in an unfinished sanctuary, a blessed asylum shut out from the noise of the world, and open heavenwards to receive the falling dews, it appeared to all that the immaculate patroness of [illegible] shielded you, your august wife, and your beloved son [illegible] maternal protection. You will acquit a debt of gratitude [illegible] by preparing a triumph for her Son in the person [illegible] Such triumph is worthy of you, Sire; it will put an end [illegible] anxieties of the Catholic world, who will hail it with [illegible]

"I thank your Eminence for the sentiments you have expressed. You render justice to my intentions, [illegible] however, overlooking the difficulties which obstruct [illegible] I believe you understand your high mission in endeavouring to strengthen confidence rather than to spread useless [illegible] I thank you for having recalled my words, for I entertain firm hope that a new era of glory will arise for the Church the day when the whole world will share my conviction that the temporal power of the Holy Father is not opposed to the liberty and independence of Italy. I will not now enter into details which the grave questions you have touched upon would give rise to, and I confine myself to reminding you that the Government which has replaced the Holy Father on his throne can only give him counsel inspired by a respectful and sincere devotedness to his interests. But he is anxious, and with good cause, as to the day, which must soon come, when Rome will be evacuated by our troops; for Europe cannot allow that the occupation which has lasted for 10 years shall be indefinitely prolonged, and when our army withdraws, what will it leave behind? Anarchy, terror, or peace? This is a question the importance of which no one can deny. But, believe me, in the times in which we live, to resolve it, we must, instead of appealing to ardent passions, endeavour calmly to fathom the truth, and pray to Providence to enlighten peoples and kings on the wise exercise of their rights and extent of their duties. I have no doubt that the prayers of your Eminence and those of the clergy will continue to call down the blessings of Heaven on the Empress, my son, and myself."

The Emperor and Empress returned to St. Cloud on Wednesday, and on the following day his Majesty presided over a Privy Council. It is said that a Congress has been agreed upon, and that all the Great Powers, including England, will be represented at it. Several alarming rumours were current on the Bourse on Thursday, including the outbreak of a revolution at Rome, a conflict between the English and French naval forces in the Tangier waters, and the departure of Baron de Bourqueney from Zurich, but they have been semi-officially contradicted. It has been reported in Paris this week that the French Government had determined to claim from Sardinia the amount of the expenses incurred by France in the recent war with Austria, but there is at present no official confirmation of the rumour. The French bishops and clergy have lately assumed a very bold tone in preaching against all who dare to question the temporal power of the Pope, and the Bishop of Orleans has published a protest against any attempt to interfere with the Holy See. The Bishop of Châlons has addressed a letter to the Clergy to say that "it would be an insult to the bishops and priests of France" to suppose that they can have any other sentiments respecting the present situation of the Holy See than those expressed in the pastoral letter of the Bishops of Arras, Poitiers, Algiers, Orleans, &c. and the Bishop of Beauvais has written to the Bishop of Orleans to declare that he adheres to his principles. The clergy of Paris have arranged to give a great banquet in honour of Monseigneur de Tulle, who preached in two churches on Sunday last in favour of upholding the rights of the Pope. Five French ships and two frigates, commanded by a Vice-Admiral, arrived at Algesiras on the 7th inst. on their way to Morocco, and several French frigates have sailed for the coast of Africa with 6000 men. These troops will be landed at the port of Nemours, formerly Djemma Gazaoua, situate seven or eight leagues distant from the frontiers of Morocco, and will reinforce the expeditionary corps which is to occupy the district of Ouchda.

SPAIN AND MOROCCO.—Letters received from Madrid state that the Emperor of Morocco has ratified the arrangement concerning the frontier line of Melilla, and has expressed his readiness to give to Spain all the satisfaction she demanded. The Madrid journals state that the ultimatum sent to the Emperor of Morocco was as follows:—

"On a day indicated the Moorish Government shall cause the Spanish flag to be saluted by artilley at Melilla, Ceuta, and other places on the coast. It shall immediately pay an indemnity for the expenses occasioned by the preparation of the expedition. It shall concede near the Spanish fortresses in Africa a certain extent of territory, at the extremity of which it shall construct blockhouses to be occupied by soldiers of the Emperor's guard, charged to prevent any act of hostility against the Spaniards. In case the Kabyles should present themselves in large numbers to attack the Spanish troops, the Spanish authorities may, if they think fit, send troops to assist the Moorish soldiers."

SWITZERLAND.—Letters from Zurich dated the 7th day state that the Plenipotentiaries have at last received instructions to put their signature to the Villafranca treaty, confirming the transfer of Lombardy to France, the further conveyance of that country to the King of Sardinia, together with provisions for the payment of the national debt of the Lombard dominions to Austria, as well as confirming the newly traced boundary between the kingdoms of Piedmont and Venetia. The questions of the Duchies are to be left to a Congress. The delay which has lately occurred is caused by the refusal of Austria to diminish the amount of the debt of Lombardy to be borne by Sardinia.

PRUSSIA.—The Prussian Government has sent a reply to the Austrian circular relative to the proposed reform of the German Confederation and to a recent speech of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, from which the following are extracts:—

"The opinion of the Prince Regent is, that the full confidence which he places in his cousin and friend the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha does not allow it to be supposed that there are motives to reserve the rights of other German Princes, either of one in particular, or of all of them together, and that the views of the Duke, which expressed the often repeated wish for reform of the Federal Constitution, exclude all encouragement of tendencies to achieve that end by illegal means. There however still undecided great questions which it would be neither prudent nor just to leave pending, and if the solution of them is still to remain reserved for the future the Prussian Government will not carry out selfish tendencies and private views, but will fulfil duties both to Prussia and to Germany."

Holland and Belgium.—The Luxembourg Railway was inaugurated on the 4th and 5th inst. with considerable pomp, the ceremony attracting an unusually large attendance of distinguished persons, including some whose presence was to be attributed to the anticipated courtesies between the reigning houses of Holland and Belgium. King Leopold sent his Minister, M. Tesch, on a special mission to represent him at the ceremony, and to compliment in his name the young Prince of Orange and Prince Henry of the Netherlands. These advances were most courteously received by the Dutch Princes, who greeted M. Tesch with marks of great cordiality, and received from him the official announcement that the article of the constitution banishing the Princes of the house of Orange from the Belgian territory had been expunged. The Grand Vicar, after blessing the line and locomotives, made an appropriate discourse, and the railway company afterwards gave to a large party a magnificent banquet in the Town Hall. The railway, as well as its branches into Prussia and Holland, now in course of construction, is the work of an English firm, Messrs. Waring, of Westminster, who, in addition to the congratulations of the shareholders and directors on the successful issue of their undertaking, received, on the occasion of the inauguration, the Cross of Leopold from the King of the Belgians, and that of the Oaken Crown from the King of Holland. The Count of Flanders has since arrived at the Hague on a visit to the Dutch Court.

Saxe-Coburg Gotha.—The following is a summary of the despatch sent by the Grand Duke to the Austrian Cabinet:—

"The Austrian Cabinet must have misunderstood the words of the Duke, as he only expressed a desire for the union of Germany, which does not render necessary the exclusion of Austria from that union. The Duke however as Reigning Sovereign must make the reservation that he does not consider that an account of words spoken by him is due to any one, and least of all to another Cabinet. The Duke, during the late war, was ready to take up arms for the guarantee of the provinces of Austria not included in the German Confederation, and has always most seriously persisted in the support of Austria by Germany, but such support has lately been rendered impossible by the imperfections of the Federal Constitution, and by the sudden conclusion of peace by Austria. The Duke expresses a doubt that the Emperor of Austria, for whom personally he entertained the highest esteem, had any knowledge of the note that had been addressed to him; he therefore insists that his reply should be submitted to the Emperor."

Italy.—The following despatch contains some further details of the assassination of Count Anviti at Parma on the 5th inst.:—

"The Count Anviti, formerly Colonel of the troops of Parma, and held in detestation by the people for the cruelties he practised while Director General of the Police under the late Duke, was passing through Parma on his way to Piacenza, but was recognised at the railway station and arrested. The populace, informed of his arrest, broke open the barracks of the Gendarmerie where he was confined, and, having seized the Count, dragged him through the city while he received blows on all sides. His hands were fastened together with a cord, and he was thus pulled through the streets until he arrived opposite a café he was in the habit of frequenting, where, while he was still alive, his head was cut off, and then carried in triumph to the Grand Place, where it was placed on the top of a column. The cries of joy of the populace increased the terrors of the scene. The National Guard and the troops were called out, but arrived when all was over. At 9 o'clock in the evening the dead body was conveyed to the hospital."

The French Consul on Saturday received orders from Paris to quit his post in Parma, unless prompt justice be done and exemplary chastisement inflicted on the authors of this murder. The Government of Parma immediately informed the French Cabinet that the most severe example should be made of those who were guilty of the murder. The Dictator Farini left Turin for Parma on Monday, in order to see that signal justice was administered, and has since issued two energetic proclamations declaring that the guilty shall be punished and the name of Italy shall not be dishonoured. The latest news states that upwards of 50 persons suspected of being concerned in the murder have been arrested, and that the Procureur-Général and the Juge Instructeur in the case have been suspended. The townspeople have begun to deliver up their arms, and the Piedmontese troops garrisoned at Piacenza have been sent to Parma. M. Mazzini has addressed a letter to King Victor Emmanuel, dated from Florence, where he was able for three weeks in September to evade the researches of the police, who had been warned of his presence. In this letter M. Mazzini declares that, far from wishing to excite any party against the policy now followed, he approves and is ready to unite in it; he makes the sacrifice of his particular opinions, provided the King gives independence and unity to Italy; only he recommends the King to dare, and points out how he is infinitely stronger than he thinks. A despatch from Bologna states that on the 7th inst. the functionaries of the Government took the oath of allegiance to the King of Sardinia. The citizens of Ferrara, Ravenna, and Forli, following the example of Bologna, have hoisted the Sardinian flag, and have adopted the arms of Savoy in the midst of the tumultuous enthusiasm of all present. The official journals of Tuscany, Parma, and Modena are printed with the arms of Savoy, and the press [illegible]ys of Piedmont are observed throughout Central Italy. A M[illegible] the Custom houses on the frontiers of Tuscany, and [illegible]na, Parma, and the Romagna have been abolished, and [illegible]e Sardinian tariff adopted throughout the different [illegible]ates. Letters from Rome state that the Pope left Rome on Saturday for Castel Gandolfo, where he will have an interview with the King of Naples. It is asserted that his Holiness will prolong his stay at Castel Gandolfo on account of the agitation in Rome. After the departure of the Pope a demonstration took place in honour of the Sardinian Ambassador, and a crowd of visitors, estimated at 10,000, called and left their cards at the Ambassador's residence. The French gendarmerie preserved order, but the effect of the demonstration was profound. The Ambassador left Rome on Monday, when another silent demonstration took place. The 14 persons of rank who were arrested at Naples last week have been released without prosecution. It is credibly reported that 20,000 Neapolitan troops have had orders to cross the frontiers, and join the Papal troops under Gen. Kalkreuther, in order to make a descent on the Legations; while the Duke of Modena with his Austrians will attempt the reduction of the Duchies.

Russia.—A letter from St. Petersburg says that the Emperor had telegraphed to his Ambassadors at Paris, London, and Berlin, [illegible] at Warsaw on the 15th inst. This news had created some sensation, and much conjecture. The Emperor was expected to arrive at Odessa on the 29th inst., and it is reported that after visiting Warsaw, his Majesty and the Cesarewitch will go to Silesia and have an interview with the Prince Regent of Prussia. The Invalide Russe contains an article on the value of the treaties of 1815, and the re-establishment of the Archdukes, which bears a striking resemblance both in arguments and expressions to the recent memorandum of the Sardinian Cabinet. It concludes by saying—

"The right conferred by the treaties of Vienna can no longer be invoked, and the right of the Hapsburg Lorraine d'Este and Bourbon dynasties is less invulnerable that Austria would wish to have it thought. In 1815 Europe considered the existence of those dynasties indispensable for its tranquillity, but now they are not only unanimously rejected by the Italian people, but their restoration would be a source for continued agitations and permanent war. We consequently consider such a restoration as dangerous for general peace and tranquillity, and we think that Europe has in 1859 the same right to seek out the political combinations which are best suited to her security as she had in 1815 to place Italy under the domination of Austria."

Circassia.—It is stated that Schamyl will receive a yearly pension of 30000 silver roubles from the Czar, and that his relatives will also be endowed with pensions of from 2000 to 3000 silver roubles, and will reside either at Kaluga or Tula. Since the capture of Schamyl the emigration of the Circassians is said to have become enormous. One party which has arrived at Constantinople numbered 661 persons.

Turkey.—Advices from Constantinople to the 30th inst. state that additional discoveries have been made concerning the conspiracy, and it is asserted that incendiary machines have been discovered which were destined to burn the European quarter of the town. The Ambassadors had held deliberations as to what measures should be recommended for public safety. The official journal contains the names of 34 conspirators of high rank, among whom are Ferik Hussein Pasha, Monastir Pasha, and two brothers of the Governor of Yemen. The brothers of the Sultan are suspected, but they have not been arrested. Djafer Pasha, who leaped into the Bosphorus, is said to have saved himself by swimming, and to have arrived at Corfu. Two of the conspirators brought before the Sultan proclaimed boldly the public wrongs they conspired to redress, and accused the Government of wasteful extravagance, of which the people and the army were the victims. The Grand Vizier had tendered his resignation, but it had been refused; evident dissension reigned among the Ministry, and the fact of a dissolution seemed inevitable. One year's pay is now due to the troops in Asia and the Roumelia. A new loan had been contracted under very heavy conditions. Prince Alfred had replied to the invitation of the Sultan that he would visit Constantinople. Edhem Pasha has been ordered to proceed to Odessa to express the friendly feelings of the Sultan towards the Emperor of Russia. Mustapha Nari Pasha has been appointed Governor-General of Bagdad. The reported appearance of the plague at Beyrout has been denied.

Tunis.—The Malta newspapers state that scenes of fanaticism were enacted at the funeral of the Bey of Tunis. The Moors assailed and stoned the Jews, wounding many of them, some mortally. Some Christians were also wounded. A Minister of the new Bey came to the rescue, striking and killing with his sabre some of the culprits on the spot, and caused 30 of the Mussulmans to be arrested. Tranquillity now prevails.

Egypt.—A despatch from Marseilles states that an envoy of the Sultan had arrived at Alexandria, bearing an order to the Viceroy of Egypt to oppose the continuation of the works on the Suez Canal. The Foreign Consuls had immediately assembled.

India.—Telegraphic despatches have been received in anticipation of the Calcutta mail of September 16th. The following are the details:—

Calcutta.—The Government of Bengal has ratified the commutation of the land tax. The Bill substituting an income tax for the license tax on trades and professions has been severely criticised by the legal members of the Council. The clause exempting civil and military officers from the payment of the tax has been rejected, and the officers are to pay 3 per cent. on their incomes. The Bill thus amended has passed its second reading, and been referred to a select committee. The Chamber of Commerce and other bodies have petitioned against it, and a large public meeting has been held to petition Parliament for an inquiry into the affairs of India on the spot. The clause in the Criminal Procedure Bill, rendering Europeans liable to preliminary investigation before native magistrates, has been successfully resisted. An act has been passed enabling the Governor-General to issue Exchequer bills for the Naval Works [illegible] and Tea Plantation purposes, removing the power to issue [illegible] a report had been circulated that Lord Canning had been recalled, and that Lord Clarendon was to succeed him, but it was ascertained to be without foundation. Some of the discharged Europeans have already sailed from Calcutta. The disbandment of all except the 5th Regiment, which is now at Berhampore, has been [illegible].

Madras.—The Madras Government has appointed Messrs. to explore the Nilgiri [illegible] to report on their adaptability for European colonists and residence, and to make a sanitary report on the nature of the country.

Bombay.—General Sir W. Mansfield is to leave the command of the Bombay army at the end of January. This is considered a stepping-stone to the command of the army in India. It is believed that Lord Clyde has sent in his resignation, and that he has already left Simla for Lucknow, where he will meet the Governor-General and take leave of the army he has commanded from India at the close of the present year. The [illegible] Lancer has been [illegible] Kharakpore. A party of 70 Sepoys [illegible] A party of 70 Sepoys mutinied, on their coming from Singapore to Bombay in the Ship Alnwick, and [illegible] attempted to [illegible] the captain and crew and obtain possession of the ship. The captain and his officers defended themselves with great courage, and finally succeeded in overpowering the convicts, 20 of whom were killed or wounded. Two of the crew were killed and several others severely wounded.

China.—Accounts from Hong Kong to the 30th of August state that the Peiho and the Grand Canal are blockaded by the British and French ships of war. Admiral Hope is in a precarious state, and will have to be invalided. The American Minister was still negotiating about proceeding to Pekin. Chung Kwo Kung, the celebrated leader of the rebels, has been killed by his own people.

British Columbia.—General Harney has written to Governor Douglas, stating that he seized the island of San Juan without instructions from the Government at Washington, on account of "insults and the outrages shown to American citizens by the British authorities and the establishment of the Hudson's Bay Company by sending a British ship of war from Vancouver's Island to convey the chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company to San Juan for the purpose of seizing an American citizen and forcibly transporting him to Vancouver's Island to be tried by British laws." The General adds,—"I have reported this attempted outrage to my Government, and they will doubtless seek the proper redress from the British Government. In the meantime I have the honour to inform Your Excellency I shall not permit a repetition of that insult, and I shall retain a command on San Juan Island, to protect its citizens in the name of the United States, until I receive further orders from my Government." In reply to this communication, Governor Douglas emphatically denies the alleged insults and indignities, stating that the seizure of an American citizen was never the right of, and that no British ship of war ever went to the island on such a mission. Meanwhile the Victoria House of Assembly has adopted an address to Governor Douglas from which the following are extracts:—

"The House would, therefore, respectfully enquire why the British forces were not instructed to assert our just right to the island in question and to uphold the honour of our country and our Queen. The House would most urgently press upon your Excellency to enforce upon her Majesty's Government the necessity of demanding from the Government of the United States not only the immediate withdrawal of those troops, but also strenuously and at all risks to maintain the right to the island in question, and also to all other islands in the same Archipelago, now so clandestinely, dishonourably, and disloyally invaded. It is not for our country to be wantonly and unjustly insulted, but redress must be demanded. The weakness of the colony is its greatest danger, and at the same time an inducement for the repetition of similar offences by similar persons. Let it therefore be urged upon her Majesty's Government, that sending out colonists expressly from Great Britain is the surest way of not only maintaining peace but of preserving intact her Majesty's possessions; coupled with this, the House would propose that free and liberal grants of land be given to such emigrants after settling thereon for a certain time."

The British residents on Vancouver's Island were very indignant at the proceedings of General Harney. A very cordial feeling, however, existed between the British and American officers, although the latter continued to fortify their position.

Canada.—Mr. John Head, only son and heir of Sir Edward Head, Governor-General of Canada, has been drowned while bathing near the Falls of the Grande Mère. He had gone to the water with the Hon. J. Browne, son of the Earl of Kenmare, who left him for a time. While alone Mr. Head went in, and was immediately perceived by the voyageurs, who were on a hill close by, to struggle on his back in the water. August Bellemare, one of the voyageurs, dashed into the water and dived 16 feet deep, but without success. He then descended to the bottom by the aid of a pole, found the body, and taking it under one arm with the other climbed to the surface. These acts of daring courage were performed within 100 feet of the Falls of La Grande Mère, and in a place where the least false step would have led him over the falls. The body was but 12 minutes in the water, but though every appliance and effort were made to revive it from 8 o'clock till 12, they were without success. Mr. Head was only 17 years of age.—The Montreal papers contain elaborate accounts of the grand cricket match between the All England Eleven and Twenty-two of Lower Canada. Great enthusiasm prevailed and thousands of people came from far and near both from Canada and the United States to behold the game. The All England Eleven won easily at Montreal, although it was acknowledged that the Lower Canadians showed excellent pluck and good average play. The All England Eleven were to play the Upper Canadian Twenty-two at Hamilton, after they had tried their skill against the New York cricket clubs.

Public Addresses.

CAPTAIN V. A. KING, of the 2d Cheshire Rifles, has delivered a lecture at Birkenhead on the Rifle Practice at the Hythe School of Musketry, of which the following is an abstract:—

"We assembled at Hythe on the 23d of July, and reported ourselves to the General. Now, a word about Major-General Hay; he is a fine, handsome man, of very pleasing manners, and much beloved by all about him; he is a splendid shot, and is seldom seen without his rifle in his hand. There were 42 of us from all parts of the kingdom, of all classes; there were two peers, Earl Spencer and Earl Pomfret; there were country gentlemen, there were barristers, there were men from the Universities of Oxford and Edinburgh, there were merchants, there were tradesmen—all classes, in fact. We required no introduction; we were good friends as soon as we met. We felt we were all brethren who had a grand national object in view, the defence of our native land, and this was sufficient introduction. The peer was treated with no more respect than the tradesman, or the tradesman than the peer; and here let me say, for the honour of the aristocracy of England, that the peers worked quite as hard as any of us, there was no distinction; they were drilled by the sergeants just the same as all of us. On Monday, the 25th of July, we assembled in the barrack tent—a rifle, knee-cap, and book of instructions were delivered to each of us. We were then formed into six sections, containing from six to nine each. We were then ushered into the lecture-room to hear a few words from the General. He told us he was a warm friend of the volunteer movement, which he would do all in his power to forward, as he considered it essential to the safety of the country. He thanked us for our zeal in coming so far for instruction, and stated that it would give both him and his Staff the greatest pleasure to impart to us all they could in the very limited time we had for the course. He then stated that if the volunteer force could not shoot they were worse than useless; for 'suppose,' said he, 'there are 200,000 volunteers enrolled, and Government depended on them, and when the hour of trial comes it turns out that not one of them can shoot, why, then, it must be clear we had much better not have a volunteer force at all; for, if they could not shoot, we should be hanging on a rope of sand. Much better to have 20,000 men, even 2000 men who can shoot, than 200,000 men who cannot.' He then combatted and ridiculed the popular error which has been so much dwelt upon of late in the newspapers, that nothing but plenty of ball practice would ever make men good shots. He told us that such practice only perpetuated error; in fact, made it worse; that he could bring forward many instances where men shot worse and worse by mere practice. He told us that the less shooting we had previously had the better; for those of us who had never fired a gun were most probably the best, as he had merely to teach us to shoot, while those of us who had been in the habit of shooting were probably the worst, as he would have first to break them of bad habits, and, until they were broken of them, it was useless to teach them to shoot. He then told us that it was position drill alone which could teach us to shoot; the more of this a man had the better. A man had never had too much of position drill until he had not a single fault. The first object of this position drill was to teach men to shoot without ever firing a shot; and I have not the slightest doubt that this can be done; I am certain of it. He told us that we volunteers ought to be such good shots that our fire would be effective at 600 to 900 yards; for it would not be safe to employ us in the field at a less distance than this, as, of course, our drill and discipline could not be expected to be such as would enable us to come to close quarters with such troops as the Zouaves, for instance. He then told us that it was an extraordinary fact that the riflemen of the British army shot worse than any other troops until the last few years. He asked if there were any volunteer riflemen present who had been embodied some years. There was a gentleman from South Devon. The General asked him if they practised aiming drill? He said, 'No.' 'Exactly so,' said the General, 'you, like all the rest, are riflemen only in name.' He told us that the great object of the instructions at Hythe was to raise the intelligence of the soldier, to make him consider himself an unit, and not a machine. This, from my short experience, I can fully bear out; I feel certain the course of instruction is framed for this object. Now, I will tell you our daily work for the first week. The course of instruction was, cleaning of arms, theoretical principles, aiming drills, position drills, judging distance drills. In the cleaning of arms we were not only taught to clean our rifle, but every part of the weapon was named and explained to us. We were taught to dismount and remount the lock, and name every part of it. After all this explanation we were questioned, to ascertain if we understood all which had been told us. The lectures on theoretical principles explained clearly to us the force which drives the bullet forward, the force which stops its flight, the force which draws it to the ground. The course of the bullet through the air was clearly described, and the reason of having to take a greater elevation when firing at a very distant object. In the aiming drills we placed our rifle upon a tripod, with a sandbag at the top, and laid our aim at the target at all distances, from 150 to 900 yards. After laying the aim, it was examined by one of the Staff, or the sergeant, who pointed out any fault that might be in the aim, such as too full, or a little to the left or to the right. In the position drills we were taught to handle the rifle, to bring the body in the proper position for firing, to bring the rifle to the 'present' quickly and steadily. We were taught always to aim at an object, and never to draw our trigger until we had aligned the eye, the object, the back sight, and the fore sight. The greatest pains were taken with us in this position drill, as it is the foundation of good shooting. In judging distance drills, we were marched out to the shingles, where points were placed at different distances for us to observe, and we then had to judge the distance of men placed at various distances from us. We were many of us at the barrack-yard at 6.30 A.M. for an extra drill. We assembled at 9.30 A.M. and worked till 1 P.M.; then assembled at 2.30 P.M., and worked till 4.30 P.M.; then each section went to the quarters of one of them, and discussed and questioned each other on all they had heard during the day; work was over at 7 P.M., when we dined. So, you see, your representatives were not idle. On Monday, the 1st of August, we fired blank cartridge, and on Tuesday we began firing ball cartridge, and then commenced such excitement as I never witnessed before. The first course was the third class. We fired five rounds at 150 yards, five at 200 yards, five at 250 yards, and five at 300 yards; and, if we did not make 15 points, we were kept in the third class. Our gallant lieutenant made 29 points; another man, Warner, of Oxford, made the same; and this was the largest score. I only made 14 points, and like all blockheads was kept in the third class: but, I have the satisfaction to say, I got out of it, and am now a second class man. Lieutenant Horner is a first class man, and Ensign Bower, of the Rockferry Company, has the honour of being a marksman. The second class was five rounds at 400 yards, five at 500 yards, five at 550 yards, and five at 600 yards. It was necessary to make 12 points out of these to get into the first class, and 17 of our whole number stuck in the second class. The first class was five rounds at 650 yards, five at 700 yards, five at 800 yards, and five at 900 yards. And it was necessary to make seven points out of these to become a marksman, and there were no less than 14 who did this. This practice lasted from Tuesday to Saturday, and I cannot describe to you the excitement of it. It exceeded anything I ever saw. Hunting, or cricket, or boating is nothing to it. I felt, when I saw it, that there was no mistake about the volunteer movement; and there is no reason why there should not be the same excitement when the Cheshire companies march from their parade ground for ball practice as there was at the barrack-yard at Hythe. I ought to tell you that we subscribed for three rifles—one for the best shot of the whole; one for the best shot of the right wing; one for the best shot of the left wing. Warner, of Oxford, won the first; Robert Tinley, of Liverpool, the second; Coxe, of Derby, the third. I cannot attempt to describe to you the excitement on Saturday afternoon. The struggle was between Warner and Tinley for the first prize; they were firing at 900 yards. There were many spectators, and as each of these two men knelt to fire there was not even a whisper heard; all seemed afraid even to breathe. They both got 11 points—a tie; but Warner won, as in the previous classes he had made 53 points and Tinley 51. Tinley had unfortunately twice aimed at the wrong target and hit it, and these two points did not count, otherwise Warner and Tinley would have been ties throughout. On Monday we fired 10 rounds file firing, 10 rounds volley firing, and 10 rounds skirmishing. The last is beautiful work. We loaded as we ran, and fired at distances of 400 to 200 yards; but we had to judge our own distances, and we were kept advancing and retiring as much as possible so as to confuse us. Now, you know if at 200 yards' distance we fired at an elevation of 400 yards our bullets would go at least 5 feet above the target. If at 400 yards' distance we tried to fire at an elevation of 200 yards, then the bullet would strike the ground at 280 yards. Now for the result of our ball practice. You must understand that every shot which is fired at Hythe is registered. If a man fires badly or carelessly he is sure to be found out. All is reduced to figures. There cannot be a question about who shot best and who shot worst. The shooting is estimated by figures, which cannot tell lies. The mean average figure of merit of the battalion was as follows, namely:—Single Third Class, 19.36; file firing, 12.08; volley firing, 10.13; skirmishing, 5.50; total, 47.07. Which means that out of 50 rounds each man on an average had made 47.07 points. Some, of course, had not done so well, and others had done much better. I will now give you the comparison with officers and soldiers who had passed through the previous three courses at Hythe. You will, no doubt, be certain that we volunteers were a long way behind them; for bear in mind they had 16 position drills—we had only 6; they have a preliminary course of 20 rounds of ball cartridge—we had not any, but fired at once in the third class. The mean averages are as follows:—1859, January—officers, 46.08; soldiers, 43.97. April—officers, 46.94; soldiers, 44.35. July—officers, 45.62; soldiers, 42.62. The mean of this is—officers, 46.22; soldiers, 43.65. The General was surprised at this result: he said he expected us to beat the soldiers, because, in shooting, intelligence is what tells, but he could not understand our beating the officers. He could only account for it by the fact that we had worked so much harder."

CAPT. LONGLEY, R.E., son of the Bishop of Durham, made a speech on the affair of the Peiho on Tuesday, in answer to an address of congratulation presented to him on his arrival at Bishop Auckland. The following is an extract from his speech:—

"I was present during the recent engagement. We waited at Canton the arrival of the English Plenipotentiary, Mr. Bruce, and from Canton we had to proceed with that gentleman and the French envoy to Pekin, to ratify the treaties. When we approached the river we found the forts had been rebuilt, which the year before had been destroyed. The entrance up the river was likewise blockaded. The Chinese told the Ambassadors that they could not pass, but that there was another way open to them. The Ambassadors then consulted Admiral Hope and placed the matter in his hands, and he resolved upon forcing the passage. I landed a party of 10 men from one of the gunboats, as skirmishers. Whilst I was in the act of leading the men on towards the embrasures I was unfortunately wounded. If the Chinese had opened out the whole of their batteries, I do not think a single gunboat would have escaped. On the 24th the Chinese fired one gun to warn us to keep off, and waited for us to draw off our forces, and it was on our part that the declaration of war was made. There was no treachery in the case at all. There was no trap laid for us. We saw it all before we went; we saw the masks before the embrasures, and of course concluded that there were guns behind them, and we saw the mud we had to cross. Therefore I hope you will hear no more about traps or treacherous Chinese. Then as to our forcing civilisation upon these barbarians, as we term them, it appears to me to resemble such a case as this. A crusty old gentleman lives in Bishop Auckland, who likes to follow his own crotchets and keep within his own house; but a number of persons meet together, go to him, and say, 'You must come out and be civilised; or, you must let us into your house, and become a Christian.' Now I think that man has a right to defend his own house the best way he can; every man's house is his castle, at least it is acknowledged to be so in England, and I don't know why it should not be so in China. I don't say that we are to give up our trade if we can help it, but I don't think we are right in forcing our civilisation upon China; I don't think we show them very good examples of Christianity, or teach such good customs that they need wish to imitate them; and it is a fact, as stated by Lord Elgin, that the further he went into the interior the better disposed the people were towards us; but at Canton and other places, where we have been established for 200 years, they have very bad feelings towards us, because they have had much injustice done to them."

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—At the Court of Bankruptcy on Monday Mr. John Edward Buller, Solicitor, of 56, Lincoln's Inn Fields, whose liabilities have been said to exceed 100,000*l*., surrendered to his bankruptcy. He stated his belief that his assets would realise sufficient to pay all his debts in full. On the proposal of the assignees an adjournment for two months was ordered, the Court granting an allowance of 5*l*. a week to the bankrupt and his family in the mean time.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—The Great Eastern arrived at Holyhead on Monday afternoon from Portland, having accomplished the voyage round under the most favourable circumstances. Her course was from Portland to the Scilly Isles, thence across St. George's Channel to the Old Head of Kinsale, and thence up the Channel to Holyhead. The average rate of speed for the whole trip was a little more than 13 knots, or about 15 miles per hour; the highest which she reached being not more than 15 knots, equal to about 17 miles per hour. During the greater part of the time the engines never went more than half speed, the paddles averaging 10, and the screw 38 revolutions, working at 20lb. steam. The ship was tried under both screw and paddle engines, united and singly, and on both occasions with success. With screw alone it was estimated that at least 10 knots might be obtained if unimpeded by the dead resistance of the paddles. On the other hand it was calculated that the paddle engines would not, if relieved from the screw, give a greater speed than eight knots. The motion of the ship was at all times extremely slight, though the weather was very squally, with at times a heavy sea. The ship, however, in all circumstances was under the most perfect control. On entering Holyhead Bay some trials were made, in order to test the capability of the ship in bringing her head round. The helm was put aport 17 degrees, and a circle made on the starboard side in 19 minutes of one and a quarter mile in diameter. The helm was afterwards put on the starboard, and she went round on the port side in an equally handy manner. After these experiments the ship steamed inside the breakwater, and let go her anchor a few minutes after 4, nearly 24 hours before she was expected, to the disappointment of many persons, including several large parties of excursionists which had been organised at Liverpool to steam out into the channel, and to meet and accompany her to her anchorage. It is now understood that the ship will not sail for America this year. Irrespective of the probable objection of the Board of Trade to grant her an immediate sailing certificate, it is said that there are reasons of policy which render it desirable that she should not leave England at present.

THE WESTMINSTER BELL.—Messrs. Mears have published a reply to Mr. Denison's letter respecting the alleged defects in the casting of the bell, in which they give the most unqualified contradiction to Mr. Denison's statement, and say that as it amounts to a charge of fraud, they will, unless it is at once distinctly withdrawn, take the necessary legal steps to vindicate their character.

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE.—A special meeting of the Masters' Committee was held on the 7th inst. when Mr. Ayrton, M.P., attended on the part of the Conference, and had a long discussion in enforcing the claims of the men. A deputation from the Masons' Society afterwards attended the meeting, consisting of six persons, including Mr. Harnott, the corresponding secretary of that body, who had been specially telegraphed for from Bristol. The meeting was for nearly five hours in discussion on certain propositions that had been submitted by the masons, and from which they renewed negotiations there were strong hopes that would end in a satisfactory settlement. On Tuesday however all chance of a reconciliation was put an end to by the renewed demand of the deputation of masons for the entire withdrawal of the declaration, and their unwillingness to refer their trade rules to Lord Brougham or Lord Lyndhurst as arbitrators. It was subsequently resolved at a public meeting of their body that the terms already offered should be considered final, that their bye-laws should not be referred to any third party, and that no further communication should be held with the masters if they do not unconditionally withdraw the declaration. The masters on the receipt of this resolution resolved that the entire withdrawal of the declaration as demanded by the masons would admit the workmen of all other trades without any guarantee either that the strike at Messrs. Trollope's was withdrawn, or that the objectionable rules and practices of other trade societies would be modified. The Committee then adjourned for a fortnight. It is now evident, from the determination evinced on both sides, that there is no immediate probability of the dispute being speedily settled. The number of men who had resumed work under the declaration up to Tuesday was 10,740, and in addition 2100 had entered on establishments in which a shop rule embodying the spirit of the declaration is adopted.

Dr. Smethurst.—It is stated by the Globe that Dr. Smethurst will not suffer the extreme penalty of the law. But from inquiries that have been made by direction of Government, startling circumstances have come to the knowledge of the authorities which will compel them, with a due regard to justice, to commute the sentence to nothing short of penal servitude for life.

The Wreck of the Alma.—The official inquiry int the loss of the Alma terminated on Monday, when Mr. Traill and Captain Walker announced their intention to report to the Board of Trade that the vessel was lost through the fault of Mr. Davis, the chief officer; that Captain Henry, in giving him directions to haul up, and referring him to the charts, had given him all the information he possessed, and placed him in charge of the ship; and that if he had not been in charge of the vessel it would have been his duty to consult the captain. At the same time Mr. Traill said they would not fail to refer to the good character which they had received of Mr. Davis as an officer. Mr. Baker, the second officer, who received the thanks of the passengers for his daring services in putting off in a boat and obtaining water for the relief of the sufferers, and afterwards putting off and intercepting her Majesty's ship Cyclops, was exonerated by the Court from all blame.

Drinking Fountain for Animals.—The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has erected a drinking fountain near Brixton Church, with water-troughs for animals—an example which might be followed with advantage in many parts of the metropolis.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's report states that the deaths in the week that ended Saturday, October 8, were 996, having been above 1000 weekly, and in some instances much above that point, during the previous three months. After reducing the mortality in corresponding weeks of the last 10 years 1849-58 to the extent of the deaths from epidemic cholera in two outbreaks, the return of last week was nearly 100 below the average. During the week the births of 917 boys and 840 girls, in all 1757 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1407.

Provincial.

Bath.—The rectory of Bath, vacant by the death of Bishop Carr, has been conferred on the Rev. Charles Kemble, Incumbent of St. Michael, Stockwell.

Birmingham.—The funeral of the Rev. James Angell James took place on Friday, in Carr's Lane Chapel, of which place he had been the pastor for 55 years. All the shops along the route were closed, and a procession nearly three-quarters of a mile in length, at the head of which was Sir John Ratcliffe, the mayor, Alderman Hodgson, ex-mayor, and the Hon. and Rev. Grantham Yorke, attended the hearse to the chapel. The Rev. Dr. Miller, rector of the parish, was among the bearers of the pall, and men of all shades of politics and religion were present. Such a funeral has never before taken place in Birmingham.

Bradford.—The third annual meeting of the Social Science Association commenced on Monday in this town. The proceedings were inaugurated by a special religious service in the parish church, where an appropriate sermon was preached by the Bishop of Ripon in the presence of the Earl of Shaftesbury, President of the Association, Lord Brougham, President of the Council, and a considerable number of the members and associates. A meeting of the Council was afterwards held, and in the evening the first public meeting of the Association took place in St. George's Hall. The lower part of the Hall was not quite full, but the two galleries were well occupied, and among the audience there was a large number of ladies. The opening address was delivered by the President, the Earl of Shaftesbury. Lord Brougham then moved and the Right Hon. J. Napier, late Lord Chancellor of Ireland, seconded a vote of thanks to Lord John Russell for his services as President during the past year. Sir J. Ramsden moved and the Mayor of Bradford seconded a vote of thanks to Lord Shaftesbury for his opening address. Both resolutions were carried unanimously. On Tuesday Lord Brougham, as President of the Council, delivered his annual address, which occupied more than two hours in the reading. Vice-Chancellor Page Wood then delivered an address on Jurisprudence. Both these addresses were given in St. George's Hall. The five departments of Jurisprudence, Education, Punishment and Reformation, Public Health, and Social Economy, afterwards met in their respective rooms for the reading of papers and discussions. In the evening there was a soirée for members and associates at St. George's Hall; separate rooms being appropriated for conversational meetings on special subjects. On Wednesday the Right Hon. C. B. Adderley, M.P., delivered in St. George's Hall an address on Education, after which the departments met in their rooms for papers and discussions. In the evening a meeting of the Bradford Mechanics' Institute was held in St. George's Hall, Lord Brougham presiding. After the meeting his lordship distributed the prizes and certificates in connection with the Mechanics' Institute and the Society of Arts, as well as the prizes offered by Mr. Cassell. There were 548 papers and essays sent in, nearly all of which were written by working men, and some few by working women. A conversational meeting of delegates from Chambers of Commerce and similar bodies was also held in the saloon of the Hall. On Thursday Mr. Monckton Milnes, M.P., delivered in St. George's Hall an address on the Punishment and Prevention of Crime, and the Reformation of Criminals, after which the departments met in their rooms for papers and discussions. In section B. Miss Jessie Parkes read a paper on the market for educated female labour. Another by Miss Jessie Boucherette, on the industrial employment of women, was read by the Secretary. The two ladies lamented the present condition of educated women in regard to employment, and urged the claims of governesses, &c., on society. In the evening a meeting of the working-classes was held in St. George's Hall; the Mayor of Bradford presiding. Yesterday (Friday) the Right Hon. W. Cowper, M.P., was to deliver in St. George's Hall an address on Public Health, after which the departments were to meet in their rooms as usual for papers and discussions, and the Social Economy Department was to receive a report from the Trades' Societies' Committee, and discuss this subject. In the evening there was to be a soirée for members and associates in St. George's Hall. To-day (Saturday) Sir James Kay Shuttleworth is to deliver, in St. George's Hall, an address on Social Economy; after which the concluding meeting of the members and associates will take place, and reports will be received and resolutions passed. During the week excursions have been made to the Low Moor Ironworks and to Saltaire, the great spinning and manufacturing establishments of Mr. Titus Salt, M.P. Other manufacturing and mercantile establishments have also been open to members and associates during their stay; and the Exchange News Room, the Bradford Library, the Mechanics' Institute news and reading-rooms, and the Young Men's Christian Association's news-room have been free to members and associates. A large dining-hall was also erected, adjoining St. George's Hall, for the convenience of visitors. The numbers of papers sent to the general secretary with a view to their being read before the departments was about 250. The following is an extract from Lord Shaftesbury's opening address:—

"On the subject of education we all believe that we know something, and can add something to the general information. This, if not precisely accurate, is at least a healthy sign, as contrasted with past days, when many were indifferent, and not a few adverse to the education of the people. A very great advance has been made of late years, in the sense of our duty, the acquisition of experience, and the application of principles. Had not the country been induced, some years ago, to look the evil in the face, and do its best in the encounter, it would, by this time, have attained gigantic and irresistible proportions, and we should, I verily believe, have been a prey to superstition, brutality, and violence. In discussing education, we are apt to be indefinite, and, unknowingly, regard it in different points of view,—sometimes it is moral, sometimes intellectual, sometimes both. But they are very diverse. The intellectual, so to speak, can be given anywhere, and, with some increase of difficulty, even in mature age; the moral, with very few exceptions, can be given in its perfection only at home, and in the very earliest years. The intellectual training of a child may be so lost as to require in later life a renewed course of discipline and study; but the moral, long forgotten and despised, may be revived in an hour of fear or suffering, in the sudden recollection perhaps of the very words of some dying mother, and in an instant turn the hardest heart to thoughts of purity and peace. If this be so, we see the sacred importance of the homes of England, and we have a proof that the education of the people demands its preliminaries and accompaniments, and needs something more than a certain amount of subjects, and the best system of imparting them. We are frequently startled in courts of justice and reports of inspectors by revelations of ignorance: and it is wholesome that we should be so. But let us observe, by way of explanation, that though in many districts there are schools enough and teachers enough, very many children are never sent to them, and except under compulsion by law (which God forbid) never will be; that there are yet many trades and businesses in which the children, who may be counted by thousands, are, by the excess and nature of their toil, excluded from all hope or possibility of education, or even of repose—a state of things destructive alike of their souls and bodies. I appeal to the clergy, teachers, ministers of all denominations, whether in their laborious and earnest career they do not undergo almost daily mortification in the ignorance and neglect of those who, years before, were the pride and joy of their hearts? And can we wonder at it? Taken at early ages from school, these boys and girls are launched into work, removed from domestic or any other guidance. One or two here and there may possess such an indomitable love of knowledge as to give their vacant hours, unaided, to the increase of their stores. Most of them yield to the indomitable love of pleasure; while a few may be ready to accept the proffered help of those who might enable them to 'redeem the time.' Hence the necessity (however feeble as yet may be the means) of evening classes in the agricultural and manufacturing districts. This subject demands far more discussion and experiments. The thing is prodigiously valuable, and prodigiously difficult, and the man who will popularise and perfect it will be as great a benefactor to his generation as the inventors of Sunday and ragged schools. The same may be said [illegible] industrial teaching. Its principle has never so far as I know been disputed, but wise methods, the wisest mode of ascertaining character, and extent of its application. I myself have seen a little of it, and I am disposed to regard it as very beneficial indeed to all classes, not as making the boys real professors in any department of labour, such as tailoring, shoemaking, carpentering (for they may never follow the trade they have learnt), but as teaching them good habits of industry, and showing them that it is both lucrative and honourable. But those classes are more easy of adaptation to females, because everything that they learn, be it washing, sewing, or cooking, must be of use to them, as wives and mothers, in after life. And here I may express a passing wish that, while no attention be withdrawn from the boys a little may be given to the girls. They are sadly overlooked in our remedial and preventive systems, and yet women are the healthy and protectors of social life. All this during the time that the children remain 'under tutors and governors.' But then comes the time when the poorer sort go out into service, and mingle with the world. Then begins the principal danger. Utterly inexperienced, fresh in appetite and passion, with all the wildness of youthful liberty, they are surrounded by every form of allurement. Depend upon it—surely I may speak without fear of contradiction—that temptation to vice and licentiousness, in its manifold and various phases, makes tenfold, ay, fifty-fold more delinquents than all the poverty and ignorance put together. It would be endless to enumerate the sources of temptation; I notice but a few,—money left carelessly about, goods rich and easily exposed in shop windows, low theatres; fairs; low company; dancing taverns; gin palaces with measures for the least and the youngest; dealers in marine stores, which is the euphonious term for receivers of stolen goods, with the certainty of prompt payment for the thing stolen; and for a class somewhat higher, casinos, betting clubs, low races, and the like. Now, none but those who have seen them, heard them, and, as it were, felt them, can estimate the fatal power they exercise over all, and specially the young. This is the state of things—I do not pretend to say how it can be amended, but it is right that you should know it. Here, however, a question arises as to when education may be supposed to terminate. Is it closed with the period of school, or may it not, in one sense, be said to go on through the whole of life? If so, then let us endeavour to meet one influence by another—establish counteracting attractions. They may be comparatively feeble, but you will save some. There are lectures 'grave, gay, lively, and severe;' unions for mutual improvement; here many of the members may commence, or recommence, the study of the first elements, may fasten on the subject they like best, and pursue it with all the zeal and delight that belong to a natural, and not a forced undertaking, proving, in the issue, that the education which a man gives to himself is ever the most lasting and the most effective. There are reading rooms, coffee clubs, Young Men's Christian Associations, lending libraries, and penny banks. It is well to classify trades and callings, the effect is good, for it gives them a corporate spirit and self-respect. I will mention but the one last founded, the 'Society for Improving the Condition of Cabmen.' Here is a class (I am speaking of the metropolis) consisting, with their helpers, of some 15,000 persons,—a class hitherto very little known, much reviled, and, as is always the case, pronounced incurable. Well, we have established local clubs in several districts, provided rooms, libraries, and all the necessary adjuncts; left the members to raise, in great measure, their own funds, name their own committees, and manage their own affairs. The movement has been received with much favour; and the wives especially, short as has been the time, are loud in their gratitude and joy. That these things have contributed to educate the people—if education may be regarded as the means of fitting them for daily life—is manifested by the results we now constantly see. Mr. Cassell, the eminent publisher, offered prizes for the best essays by working men on specified subjects. I had the honour to be the judge of those on sanitary matters and social economy. A great number was passed under review, and few things have ever impressed me more than the good sense, sound morality, and practical knowledge exhibited by the writers. Again, we formed a penny bank to collect the children's gleanings of 60 ragged schools. The collections in one year alone amounted to 2000*l*. Was nothing done here, to teach order, thrift, management, to thousands of the community; and how to substitute the solid savings' bank for the tommy-shop and the beer-house? But so many wise, good, and earnest people of both sexes are engaged on this subject, that we need not fear any want of attention to it. It is of unspeakable importance for the present, for the future, for internal peace, for external security—and the time is coming fast when Great Britain will require that, to sustain her power, her vocation, and even her independence—there be not, in body or mind, one feeble person among her tribes."

Hull.—A fire broke out on Thursday morning in the Theatre Royal of this town, and spread with such rapidity that the entire building, including the wardrobe and other property, was destroyed. The theatre was insured but not the wardrobe. This is the second fire which has occurred in it within a few weeks.

Nottingham.—A shocking attempt at murder was made a few days since in this town. A man named Lamb armed himself with a brace of pistols and endeavoured to shoot his wife, because, he subsequently said, "she had done him an injury." She ran away and obtained the assistance of five policemen. Lamb fired twice on the men, but was eventually captured. The magistrates have committed the prisoner for trial.

Plymouth.—The new steam frigate Orlando, of 51 guns and 1000 horse power, made two trial trips last week to test her machinery and speed. On her first trial last month her average speed was 13.2 knots per hour, which was less than had been expected from her build and engines; and as her screw had been made rather too large for the aperture in which it had to work, there was not sufficient room for the water driven forward by the screw's rotation to escape, so that the result was a succession of vibrations throughout the ship, causing the masts to jump and the rigging and spars to oscillate to an extent dangerous to the men employed on them. To remedy this trembling motion the angles of the screw were reduced, and about 15 cwt. of metal cut off, while the trim of the ship was altered by shifting the position of some of the guns. In this condition she started for a renewed trial on Wednesday of last week. As she passed through the Sound she became an object of great interest to the crews of the ships belonging to the Channel fleet, and of the Dutch, Turkish, and Brazilian ships of war at anchor there. On nearing the Western Channel, when additional steam was put

Public Addresses.

CAPTAIN V. A. KING, of the 2d Cheshire Rifles, has delivered a lecture at Birkenhead on the Rifle Practice at the Hythe School of Musketry, of which the following is an abstract:—

"We assembled at Hythe on the 23d of July, and reported ourselves to the General. Now, a word about Major-General Hay; he is a fine, handsome man, of very pleasing manners, and much beloved by all about him; he is a splendid shot, and is seldom seen without his rifle in his hand. There were 42 of us from all parts of the kingdom, of all classes; there were two peers, Earl Spencer and Earl Pomfret; there were country gentlemen, there were barristers, there were men from the Universities of Oxford and Edinburgh, there were merchants, there were tradesmen—all classes, in fact. We required no introduction; we were good friends as soon as we met. We felt we were all brethren who had a grand national object in view, the defence of our native land, and this was sufficient introduction. The peer was treated with no more respect than the tradesman, or the tradesman than the peer; and here let me say, for the honour of the aristocracy of England, that the peers worked quite as hard as any of us, there was no distinction; they were drilled by the sergeants just the same as all of us. On Monday, the 25th of July, we assembled in the barrack tent—a rifle, knee-cap, and book of instructions were delivered to each of us. We were then formed into six sections, containing from six to nine each. We were then ushered into the lecture-room to hear a few words from the General. He told us he was a warm friend of the volunteer movement, which he would do all in his power to forward, as he considered it essential to the safety of the country. He thanked us for our zeal in coming so far for instruction, and stated that it would give both him and his Staff the greatest pleasure to impart to us all they could in the very limited time we had for the course. He then stated that if the volunteer force could not shoot they were worse than useless; for 'suppose,' said he, 'there are 200,000 volunteers enrolled, and Government depended on them, and when the hour of trial comes it turns out that not one of them can shoot, why, then, it must be clear we had much better not have a volunteer force at all; for, if they could not shoot, we should be hanging on a rope of sand. Much better to have 20,000 men, even 2000 men who can shoot, than 200,000 men who cannot.' He then combatted and ridiculed the popular error which has been so much dwelt upon of late in the newspapers, that nothing but plenty of ball practice would ever make men good shots. He told us that such practice only perpetuated error; in fact, made it worse; that he could bring forward many instances where men shot worse and worse by mere practice. He told us that the less shooting we had previously had the better; for those of us who had never fired a gun were most probably the best, as he had merely to teach us to shoot, while those of us who had been in the habit of shooting were probably the worst, as he would have first to break them of bad habits, and, until they were broken of them, it was useless to teach them to shoot. He then told us that it was position drill alone which could teach us to shoot; the more of this a man had the better. A man had never had too much of position drill until he had not a single fault. The first object of this position drill was to teach men to shoot without ever firing a shot; and I have not the slightest doubt that this can be done; I am certain of it. He told us that we volunteers ought to be such good shots that our fire would be effective at 600 to 900 yards; for it would not be safe to employ us in the field at a less distance than this, as, of course, our drill and discipline could not be expected to be such as would enable us to come to close quarters with such troops as the Zouaves, for instance. He then told us that it was an extraordinary fact that the riflemen of the British army shot worse than any other troops until the last few years. He asked if there were any volunteer riflemen present who had been embodied some years. There was a gentleman from South Devon. The General asked him if they practised aiming drill? He said, 'No.' 'Exactly so,' said the General, 'you, like all the rest, are riflemen only in name.' He told us that the great object of the instructions at Hythe was to raise the intelligence of the soldier, to make him consider himself an unit, and not a machine. This, from my short experience, I can fully bear out; I feel certain the course of instruction is framed for this object. Now, I will tell you our daily work for the first week. The course of instruction was, cleaning of arms, theoretical principles, aiming drills, position drills, judging distance drills. In the cleaning of arms we were not only taught to clean our rifle, but every part of the weapon was named and explained to us. We were taught to dismount and remount the lock, and name every part of it. After all this explanation we were questioned, to ascertain if we understood all which had been told us. The lectures on theoretical principles explained clearly to us the force which drives the bullet forward, the force which stops its flight, the force which draws it to the ground. The course of the bullet through the air was clearly described, and the reason of having to take a greater elevation when firing at a very distant object. In the aiming drills we placed our rifle upon a tripod, with a sandbag at the top, and laid our aim at the target at all distances, from 150 to 900 yards. After laying the aim, it was examined by one of the Staff, or the sergeant, who pointed out any fault that might be in the aim, such as too full, or a little to the left or to the right. In the position drills we were taught to handle the rifle, to bring the body in the proper position for firing, to bring the rifle to the 'present' quickly and steadily. We were taught always to aim at an object, and never to draw our trigger until we had aligned the eye, the object, the back sight, and the fore sight. The greatest pains were taken with us in this position drill, as it is the foundation of good shooting. In judging distance drills, we were marched out to the shingles, where points were placed at different distances for us to observe, and we then had to judge the distance of men placed at various distances from us. We were many of us at the barrack-yard at 6.30 A.M. for an extra drill. We assembled at 9.30 A.M. and worked till 1 P.M.; then assembled at 2.30 P.M., and worked till 4.30 P.M.; then each section went to the quarters of one of them, and discussed and questioned each other on all they had heard during the day; work was over at 7 P.M., when we dined. So, you see, your representatives were not idle. On Monday, the 1st of August, we fired blank cartridge, and on Tuesday we began firing ball cartridge, and then commenced such excitement as I never witnessed before. The first course was the third class. We fired five rounds at 150 yards, five at 200 yards, five at 250 yards, and five at 300 yards; and, if we did not make 15 points, we were kept in the third class. Our gallant lieutenant made 29 points; another man, Warner, of Oxford, made the same; and this was the largest score. I only made 14 points, and like all blockheads was kept in the third class: but, I have the satisfaction to say, I got out of it, and am now a second class man. Lieutenant Horner is a first class man, and Ensign Bower, of the Rockferry Company, has the honour of being a marksman. The second class was five rounds at 400 yards, five at 500 yards, five at 550 yards, and five at 600 yards. It was necessary to make 12 points out of these to get into the first class, and 17 of our whole number stuck in the second class. The first class was five rounds at 650 yards, five at 700 yards, five at 800 yards, and five at 900 yards. And it was necessary to make seven points out of these to become a marksman, and there were no less than 14 who did this. This practice lasted from Tuesday to Saturday, and I cannot describe to you the excitement of it. It exceeded anything I ever saw. Hunting, or cricket, or boating is nothing to it. I felt, when I saw it, that there was no mistake about the volunteer movement; and there is no reason why there should not be the same excitement when the Cheshire companies march from their parade ground for ball practice as there was at the barrack-yard at Hythe. I ought to tell you that we subscribed for three rifles—one for the best shot of the whole; one for the best shot of the right wing; one for the best shot of the left wing. Warner, of Oxford, won the first; Robert Tinley, of Liverpool, the second; Coxe, of Derby, the third. I cannot attempt to describe to you the excitement on Saturday afternoon. The struggle was between Warner and Tinley for the first prize; they were firing at 900 yards. There were many spectators, and as each of these two men knelt to fire there was not even a whisper heard; all seemed afraid even to breathe. They both got 11 points—a tie; but Warner won, as in the previous classes he had made 53 points and Tinley 51. Tinley had unfortunately twice aimed at the wrong target and hit it, and these two points did not count, otherwise Warner and Tinley would have been ties throughout. On Monday we fired 10 rounds file firing, 10 rounds volley firing, and 10 rounds skirmishing. The last is beautiful work. We loaded as we ran, and fired at distances of 400 to 200 yards; but we had to judge our own distances, and we were kept advancing and retiring as much as possible so as to confuse us. Now, you know if at 200 yards' distance we fired at an elevation of 400 yards our bullets would go at least 5 feet above the target. If at 400 yards' distance we tried to fire at an elevation of 200 yards, then the bullet would strike the ground at 280 yards. Now for the result of our ball practice. You must understand that every shot which is fired at Hythe is registered. If a man fires badly or carelessly he is sure to be found out. All is reduced to figures. There cannot be a question about who shot best and who shot worst. The shooting is estimated by figures, which cannot tell lies. The mean average figure of merit of the battalion was as follows, namely:—Single Third Class, 19.36; file firing, 12.08; volley firing, 10.13; skirmishing, 5.50; total, 47.07. Which means that out of 50 rounds each man on an average had made 47.07 points. Some, of course, had not done so well, and others had done much better. I will now give you the comparison with officers and soldiers who had passed through the previous three courses at Hythe. You will, no doubt, be certain that we volunteers were a long way behind them; for bear in mind they had 16 position drills—we had only 6; they have a preliminary course of 20 rounds of ball cartridge—we had not any, but fired at once in the third class. The mean averages are as follows:—1859, January—officers, 46.08; soldiers, 43.97. April—officers, 46.94; soldiers, 44.35. July—officers, 45.62; soldiers, 42.62. The mean of this is—officers, 46.22; soldiers, 43.65. The General was surprised at this result: he said he expected us to beat the soldiers, because, in shooting, intelligence is what tells, but he could not understand our beating the officers. He could only account for it by the fact that we had worked so much harder."

CAPT. LONGLEY, R.E., son of the Bishop of Durham, made a speech on the affair of the Peiho on Tuesday, in answer to an address of congratulation presented to him on his arrival at Bishop Auckland. The following is an extract from his speech:—

"I was present during the recent engagement. We waited at Canton the arrival of the English Plenipotentiary, Mr. Bruce, and from Canton we had to proceed with that gentleman and the French envoy to Pekin, to ratify the treaties. When we approached the river we found the forts had been rebuilt, which the year before had been destroyed. The entrance up the river was likewise blockaded. The Chinese told the Ambassadors that they could not pass, but that there was another way open to them. The Ambassadors then consulted Admiral Hope and placed the matter in his hands, and he resolved upon forcing the passage. I landed a party of 10 men from one of the gunboats, as skirmishers. Whilst I was in the act of leading the men on towards the embrasures I was unfortunately wounded. If the Chinese had opened out the whole of their batteries, I do not think a single gunboat would have escaped. On the 24th the Chinese fired one gun to warn us to keep off, and waited for us to draw off our forces, and it was on our part that the declaration of war was made. There was no treachery in the case at all. There was no trap laid for us. We saw it all before we went; we saw the masks before the embrasures, and of course concluded that there were guns behind them, and we saw the mud we had to cross. Therefore I hope you will hear no more about traps or treacherous Chinese. Then as to our forcing civilisation upon these barbarians, as we term them, it appears to me to resemble such a case as this. A crusty old gentleman lives in Bishop Auckland, who likes to follow his own crotchets and keep within his own house; but a number of persons meet together, go to him, and say, 'You must come out and be civilised; or, you must let us into your house, and become a Christian.' Now I think that man has a right to defend his own house the best way he can; every man's house is his castle, at least it is acknowledged to be so in England, and I don't know why it should not be so in China. I don't say that we are to give up our trade if we can help it, but I don't think we are right in forcing our civilisation upon China; I don't think we show them very good examples of Christianity, or teach such good customs that they need wish to imitate them; and it is a fact, as stated by Lord Elgin, that the further he went into the interior the better disposed the people were towards us; but at Canton and other places, where we have been established for 200 years, they have very bad feelings towards us, because they have had much injustice done to them."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—The Great Eastern arrived at Holyhead on Monday afternoon from Portland, having accomplished the voyage round under the most favourable circumstances. Her course was from Portland to the Scilly Isles, thence across St. George's Channel to the Old Head of Kinsale, and thence up the Channel to Holyhead. The average rate of speed for the whole trip was a little more than 13 knots, or about 15 miles per hour; the highest which she reached being not more than 15 knots, equal to about 17 miles per hour. During the greater part of the time the engines never went more than half speed, the paddles averaging 10, and the screw 38 revolutions, working at 20lb. steam. The ship was tried under both screw and paddle engines, united and singly, and on both occasions with success. With screw alone it was estimated that at least 10 knots might be obtained if unimpeded by the dead resistance of the paddles. On the other hand it was calculated that the paddle engines would not, if relieved from the screw, give a greater speed than eight knots. The motion of the ship was at all times extremely slight, though the weather was very squally, with at times a heavy sea. The ship, however, in all circumstances was under the most perfect control. On entering Holyhead Bay some trials were made, in order to test the capability of the ship in bringing her head round. The helm was put aport 17 degrees, and a circle made on the starboard side in 19 minutes of one and a quarter mile in diameter. The helm was afterwards put on the starboard, and she went round on the port side in an equally handy manner. After these experiments the ship steamed inside the breakwater, and let go her anchor a few minutes after 4, nearly 24 hours before she was expected, to the disappointment of many persons, including several large parties of excursionists which had been organised at Liverpool to steam out into the channel, and to meet and accompany her on her anchorage. It is now understood that the ship will not sail for America this year. Irrespective of the probable objection of the Board of Trade to grant her an immediate sailing certificate, it is said that there are reasons of policy which render it desirable that she should not leave England at present.

THE WESTMINSTER BELL.—Messrs. Mears have published a reply to Mr. Denison's letter respecting the alleged defects in the casting of the bell, in which they give the most unqualified contradiction to Mr. Denison's statement, and say that as it amounts to a charge of fraud, they will, unless it is at once distinctly withdrawn, take the necessary legal steps to vindicate their character.

THE BUILDERS' STRIKE.—A special meeting of the Masters' Committee was held on the 7th inst. when Mr. Ayrton, M.P., attended on the part of the Conference, and had a long discussion in enforcing the claims of the men. A deputation from the Masons' Society afterwards attended the meeting, consisting of six persons, including Mr. Harnott, the corresponding secretary of that body, who had been specially telegraphed for from Bristol. The meeting was for nearly five hours in discussion on certain propositions that had been submitted by the masons, and from which renewed negotiations there were strong hopes that would end in a satisfactory settlement. On the however all chance of a reconciliation was put by the renewed demand of the deputation of masons for the entire withdrawal of the declaration, and their unwillingness to refer their trade rules to Lord Brougham or Lord Lyndhurst as arbitrators. It was subsequently resolved at a public meeting of their body that the terms already offered should be considered final, that their bye-laws should not be referred to any third party, and that no further communication should be held with the masters if they do not unconditionally withdraw the declaration. The masters on the receipt of this resolution resolved that the entire withdrawal of the declaration as demanded by the masons would admit the workmen of all other trades without any guarantee either that the strike at Messrs. Trollope's was withdrawn, or that the objectionable rules and practices of other trade societies would be modified. The Committee then adjourned for a fortnight. It is now evident, from the determination evinced on both sides, that there is no immediate probability of the dispute being speedily settled. The number of men who had resumed work under the declaration up to Tuesday was 10,740, and in addition 2100 had entered on establishments in which a shop rule embodying the spirit of the declaration is adopted.

Dr. Smethurst.—It is stated by the Globe that Dr. Smethurst will not suffer the extreme penalty of the law. But from inquiries that have been made by direction of Government, startling circumstances have come to the knowledge of the authorities which will compel them, with a due regard to justice, to commute the sentence to nothing short of penal servitude for life.

The Wreck of the Alma.—The official inquiry int the loss of the Alma terminated on Monday, when Mr. Traill and Captain Walker announced their intention to report to the Board of Trade that the vessel was lost through the fault of Mr. Davis, the chief officer; that Captain Henry, in giving him directions to haul up, and referring him to the charts, had given him all the information he possessed, and placed him in charge of the ship; and that if he had not been in charge of the vessel it would have been his duty to consult the captain. At the same time Mr. Traill said they would not fail to refer to the good character which they had received of Mr. Davis as an officer. Mr. Baker, the second officer, who received the thanks of the passengers for his daring services in putting off in a boat and obtaining water for the relief of the sufferers, and afterwards putting off and intercepting her Majesty's ship Cyclops, was exonerated by the Court from all blame.

Drinking Fountain for Animals.—The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has erected a drinking fountain near Brixton Church, with water-troughs for animals—an example which might be followed with advantage in many parts of the metropolis.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's report states that the deaths in the week that ended Saturday, October 8, were 996, having been above 1000 weekly, and in some instances much above that point, during the previous three months. After reducing the mortality in corresponding weeks of the last 10 years 1849-58 to the extent of the deaths from epidemic cholera in two outbreaks, the return of last week was nearly 100 below the average. During the week the births of 917 boys and 840 girls, in all 1757 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1407.

Provincial.

Bath.—The rectory of Bath, vacant by the death of Bishop Carr, has been conferred on the Rev. Charles Kemble, Incumbent of St. Michael, Stockwell.

Birmingham.—The funeral of the Rev. James Angell James took place on Friday, in Carr's Lane Chapel, of which place he had been the pastor for 55 years. All the shops along the route were closed, and a procession nearly three-quarters of a mile in length, at the head of which was Sir John Ratcliffe, the mayor, Alderman Hodgson, ex-mayor, and the Hon. and Rev. Grantham Yorke, attended the hearse to the chapel. The Rev. Dr. Miller, rector of the parish, was among the bearers of the pall, and men of all shades of politics and religion were present. Such a funeral has never before taken place in Birmingham.

Bradford.—The third annual meeting of the Social Science Association commenced on Monday in this town. The proceedings were inaugurated by a special religious service in the parish church, where an appropriate sermon was preached by the Bishop of Ripon in the presence of the Earl of Shaftesbury, President of the Association, Lord Brougham, President of the Council, and a considerable number of the members and associates. A meeting of the Council was afterwards held, and in the evening the first public meeting of the Association took place in St. George's Hall. The lower part of the Hall was not quite full, but the two galleries were well occupied, and among the audience there was a large number of ladies. The opening address was delivered by the President, the Earl of Shaftesbury. Lord Brougham then moved and the Right Hon. J. Napier, late Lord Chancellor of Ireland, seconded a vote of thanks to Lord John Russell for his services as President during the past year. Sir J. Ramsden moved and the Mayor of Bradford seconded a vote of thanks to Lord Shaftesbury for his opening address. Both resolutions were carried unanimously. On Tuesday Lord Brougham, as President of the Council, delivered his annual address, which occupied more than two hours in the reading. Vice-Chancellor Page Wood then delivered an address on Jurisprudence. Both these addresses were given in St. George's Hall. The five departments of Jurisprudence, Education, Punishment and Reformation, Public Health, and Social Economy, afterwards met in their respective rooms for the reading of papers and discussions. In the evening there was a soirée for members and associates at St. George's Hall; separate rooms being appropriated for conversational meetings on special subjects. On Wednesday the Right Hon. C. B. Adderley, M.P., delivered in St. George's Hall an address on Education, after which the departments met in their rooms for papers and discussions. In the evening a meeting of the Bradford Mechanics' Institute was held in St. George's Hall, Lord Brougham presiding. After the meeting his lordship distributed the prizes and certificates in connection with the Mechanics' Institute and the Society of Arts, as well as the prizes offered by Mr. Cassell. There were 548 papers and essays sent in, nearly all of which were written by working men, and some few by working women. A conversational meeting of delegates from Chambers of Commerce and similar bodies was also held in the saloon of the Hall. On Thursday Mr. Monckton Milnes, M.P., delivered in St. George's Hall an address on the Punishment and Prevention of Crime, and the Reformation of Criminals, after which the departments met in their rooms for papers and discussions. In section B. Miss Jessie Parkes read a paper on the market for educated female labour. Another by Miss Jessie Boucherette, on the industrial employment of women, was read by the Secretary. The two ladies lamented the present condition of educated women in regard to employment, and urged the claims of governesses, &c., on society. In the evening a meeting of the working-classes was held in St. George's Hall; the Mayor of Bradford presiding. Yesterday (Friday) the Right Hon. W. Cowper, M.P., was to deliver in St. George's Hall an address on Public Health, after which the departments were to meet in their rooms as usual for papers and discussions, and the Social Economy Department was to receive a report from the Trades' Societies' Committee, and discuss this subject. In the evening there was to be a soirée for members and associates in St. George's Hall. To-day (Saturday) Sir James Kay Shuttleworth is to deliver, in St. George's Hall, an address on Social Economy; after which the concluding meeting of the members and associates will take place, and reports will be received and resolutions passed. During the week excursions have been made to the Low Moor Ironworks and to Saltaire, the great spinning and manufacturing establishments of Mr. Titus Salt, M.P. Other manufacturing and mercantile establishments have also been open to members and associates during their stay; and the Exchange News Room, the Bradford Library, the Mechanics' Institute news and reading-rooms, and the Young Men's Christian Association's news-room have been free to members and associates. A large dining-hall was also erected, adjoining St. George's Hall, for the convenience of visitors. The numbers of papers sent to the general secretary with a view to their being read before the departments was about 250. The following is an extract from Lord Shaftesbury's opening address:—

"On the subject of education we all believe that we know something, and can add something to the general information. This, if not precisely accurate, is at least a healthy sign, as contrasted with past days, when many were indifferent, and not a few adverse to the education of the people. A very great advance has been made of late years, in the sense of our duty, the acquisition of experience, and the application of principles. Had not the country been induced, some years ago, to look the evil in the face, and do its best in the encounter, it would, by this time, have attained gigantic and irresistible proportions, and we should, I verily believe, have been a prey to superstition, brutality, and violence. In discussing education, we are apt to be indefinite, and, unknowingly, regard it in different points of view,—sometimes it is moral, sometimes intellectual, sometimes both. But they are very diverse. The intellectual, so to speak, can be given anywhere, and, with some increase of difficulty, even in mature age; the moral, with very few exceptions, can be given in its perfection only at home, and in the very earliest years. The intellectual training of a child may be so lost as to require in later life a renewed course of discipline and study; but the moral, long forgotten and despised, may be revived in an hour of fear or suffering, in the sudden recollection perhaps of the very words of some dying mother, and in an instant turn the hardest heart to thoughts of purity and peace. If this be so, we see the sacred importance of the homes of England, and we have a proof that the education of the people demands its preliminaries and accompaniments, and needs something more than a certain amount of subjects, and the best system of imparting them. We are frequently startled in courts of justice and reports of inspectors by revelations of ignorance: and it is wholesome that we should be so. But let us observe, by way of explanation, that though in many districts there are schools enough and teachers enough, very many children are never sent to them, and except under compulsion by law (which God forbid) never will be. that there are yet many trades and businesses in which the children, who may be counted by thousands, are, by the excess and nature of their toil, excluded from all hope or possibility of education, or even of repose—a state of things destructive alike of their souls and bodies. I appeal to the clergy, teachers, ministers of all denominations, whether in their laborious and earnest career they do not undergo almost daily mortification in the ignorance and neglect of those who, years before, were the pride and joy of their hearts! And can we wonder at it? Taken at early ages from school, these boys and girls are launched into work, removed from domestic or any other guidance. One or two here and there may possess such an indomitable love of knowledge as to give their vacant hours, unaided, to the increase of their stores. Most of them yield to the indomitable love of pleasure; while a few may be ready to accept the proffered help of those who might enable them to 'redeem the time.' Hence the necessity (however feeble as yet may be the means) of evening classes in the agricultural and manufacturing districts. This subject demands far more discussion and experiments. The thing is prodigiously valuable, and prodigiously difficult, and the man who will popularise and perfect it will be as great a benefactor in his generation as the inventors of Sunday and ragged schools. The same may be said of industrial teaching. Its principle has never, so far as I know, been disputed; but wise men differ widely as to the mode, character, and extent of its application. I myself have seen a little of it, and I am disposed to regard it as very beneficial indeed to all classes, and as making the boys real proficients in one department of labour, such as turning, shoemaking, carpentering (for they may never follow the trade they have learned), but as teaching them good habits of industry, and showing them that it is both lucrative and honourable. But these classes are more easy of adaptation to females, because everything that they learn in it, washing, sewing, or cooking, must be of use to them, as wives and mothers, in after-life. And here I may express a passing wish that, while the attention be withdrawn from the boys a little may be given to the girls. They are sadly overlooked in our remedial and preventive systems; and yet women are the mainstay and protectors of social life. At this moment the cry is that the children remain under bad mothers and governesses. But then comes the time when the poorer sort go out into service, and mingle with the world. Then begins the principal danger. Utterly inexperienced, frank in appetite and passion, with all the wildness of youthful liberty, they are surrounded by every form of allurement. Depend upon it—surely I may speak without fear of contradiction—that temptation is vice and licentiousness in its manifold and various phases, makes tenfold, ay, fifty-fold more victims than all the poverty and ignorance put together. It would be useless to enumerate the sources of temptation. I name but a few—money left carelessly about; goods recklessly exposed in shop windows; low theatres; fairs; low company; betting houses; gin palaces with mansions for the head and the youngest daughter a ministering angel; the euphonious term for receivers of stolen goods, with the certainty of prompt payment for the things stolen; and for a class somewhat higher casinos, betting clubs, low races, and the like. Now, none but those who have seen them, heard them, and, as it were, felt them, can estimate the fatal power they exercise over all, and especially the young. This is the state of things—I do not pretend to say how it can be amended; but it is right that you should know it. Here, however, a question arises as to when education may be supposed to terminate. Is it bound with the period of school, or may it not, in one sense, be said to go on through the whole of life? If so, then let us endeavour to meet one difficulty by another—establish counteracting attractions. They may be comparatively feeble, but you will save some. There are lectures grave, gay, lively, and severe; unions for mutual improvement; here many of the members may commence, or recommence, the study of the first elements, may fasten on the subject they like best, and pursue it with all the zeal and delight that belong to a natural, and not a forced undertaking; proving, in the issue, that the attention which a man gives to himself is ever the most lasting and the most effective. There are reading rooms, coffee rooms, Young Men's Christian Associations, lending libraries, and penny banks. It is well to classify trades and callings; the effect is good, for it gives them a corporate spirit and self-respect. I will mention but the one last founded, the Society for Improving the Condition of Cabmen. Here is a class (I am speaking of the metropolis) consisting, with their helpers, of some 15,000 persons,—a class hitherto very little known, much reviled, and, as it always the case, pronounced incurable. Well, we have established head cabs in several districts, provided rooms, libraries, and all the necessary adjuncts, left the members to raise, in great measure, their own funds, name their own committees, and manage their own affairs. The movement has been received with much favour; and the wives especially, short as has been the time, are loud in their gratitude and joy. That these things have contributed to educate the people—if education may be regarded as the means of fitting them for daily life—is manifested by the results we now constantly see. Mr. Cassell, the eminent publisher, offered prizes for the best essays by working men on specified subjects. I had the honour to be the judge of those on sanitary matters and social economy. A great number was passed under review, and few things have ever impressed me more than the good sense, sound morality, and practical knowledge exhibited by the writers. Again, we formed a penny bank to collect the employer's gleanings of 60 ragged schools. The collections in one year alone amounted to 200*l*. Was nothing done here, to teach order, thrift, management, to thousands of the community; and how to substitute the solid savings bank for the tommy shop and the beer house? But so many wise, good, and earnest people of both sexes are engaged on this subject, that we need not fear any want of attention to it. It is of unspeakable importance for the present, for the future, for internal peace, for external security—and the time is coming fast when, Great Britain will require that, to sustain her power, her position, nay, even her independence—there be not, in body or mind, one feeble person among her tribes."

Hull.—A fire broke out on Thursday morning in the Theatre Royal of this town, and spread with such rapidity that the entire building, including the wardrobe and other property, was destroyed. The theatre was insured but not the wardrobe. This is the second fire which has occurred in it within a few weeks.

Nottingham.—A shocking attempt at murder was made a few days since in this town. A man named Lamb armed himself with a brace of pistols and endeavoured to shoot his wife, because, he subsequently said, "she had done him an injury." She ran away and obtained the assistance of five policemen. Lamb fired twice on the men, but was eventually captured. The magistrates have committed the prisoner for trial.

Plymouth.—The new steam frigate Orlando, of 51 guns and 1000 horse power, made two trial trips last week to test her machinery and speed. On her first trial last month her average speed was 13.2 knots per hour, which was less than had been expected from her build and engines; and as her screw had been made rather too large for the aperture in which it had to work, there was not sufficient room for the water driven forward by the screw's rotation to escape, so that the result was a succession of vibrations throughout the ship, causing the masts to jump and the rigging and spars to oscillate to an extent dangerous to the men employed on them. To remedy this troubling motion the angles of the screw were reduced, and about 15 cwt. of metal cut off, while the trim of the ship was altered by shifting the position of some of the guns. In this condition she started for a renewed trial on Wednesday of last week. As she passed through the Sound she became an object of great interest to the crews of the ships belonging to the Channel fleet, and of the Dutch, Turkish, and Brazilian ships of war at anchor there. On nearing the Western Channel, when additional steam was put on, most disagreeable evidence of the continuance of the former vibrating tendency was given, and the result of the trials gave only 12.9 knots, instead of 13.2. The condition of the ship therefore, instead of advancing, has actually retrograded since the alterations, a fact which took every one on board by surprise. The engines worked beautifully, and the steering of the ship was perfectly under control. On Friday a third trial took place, the trim of the ship having been again altered by replacing the guns in their old positions. This alteration appeared to have decreased the vibration, and the mean speed obtained was 13.16 knots, the maximum being 13.43. As a result of all the trials the speed of the Orlando may now fairly be put at 13 knots.—The American ship Quebec, 660 tons, of New Orleans, from Bordeaux for Shields, ran on the Eddystone Rocks at 5 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon. Her jibboom end was within 10 feet of the south west kitchen window of the lighthouse, the window being 70 feet high. At half past 9 the ship slipped off the rocks, and the crew who had abandoned her returned, and with the help of a pilot boat attempted to beach her on the Cornish coast, but the sand ballast choked the pumps, and she sank one mile S.S.W. of Downderry Preventive Station, where she will be covered at high water.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of the steamship Express, on the Corbeire Rocks, Jersey, on the 20th ult., was opened in this town on Wednesday, and is still in progress. The body of Mr. Bursell, of Kenilworth, one of the passengers drowned in the wreck, has been found floating between Jersey and Guernsey. An inquest was held at Jersey on Thursday, when a verdict was returned attributing culpable negligence to Mr. Mabb, who was in command of the vessel at the time of the wreck.

SPILSBY.—Measures are in progress to promote the erection of a monument to the late Sir John Franklin in this town, in which the gallant Arctic hero was born.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—On Saturday night a man named John Reynolds had been drinking at Conley, near this town, in company with six other dog-fanciers and prize-fighters, when they were joined by a youth, aged 18, named Thomas Wilkes, a puddler. Not having had sufficient ale when the house closed for the night, they arranged that each should contribute 6*d.* in order to have a "regular fudging" of drink in a field close by. After the sixpences were subscribed, they were unable to get any publican, it being half-past 12 o'clock, to sell them any ale. Wilkes then asked for a return of his 6*d.*, which Reynolds refused, saying it should all be spent on the Sunday afternoon on the Beacon. Thereupon Wilkes rushed at Reynolds, and stabbed him to the heart with a knife. Death immediately ensued; and on apprehending Wilkes, the knife, a formidable weapon used for cutting up horses, was found hidden behind a cupboard and covered with blood. There seems to be something more in the matter than simply the 6*d.* Reynolds has been living with a woman, who appears to have wrought an influence over the lad, who ultimately conceived a passion for her, and became jealous of Reynolds. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, who has been committed for trial.

WORCESTER.—Mrs. Harris, the wife of an artist engaged at the Porcelain Works in this city, threw herself and her two children into the Severn last week in consequence of a quarrel with her husband. Only one body, that of the eldest child, has been recovered, but it is expected that the mother and infant were carried some distance down the river by the flood water. It appears from the evidence given before the magistrates that the poor woman had been shamefully treated by her husband and his relatives, and that, driven almost to madness by their cruelty, she had declared her determination to drown herself and her children. The husband has been charged nominally with assaulting his wife, and has been remanded for the present.

MANIFESTO IN FAVOUR OF NATIONAL EDUCATION.—An important declaration has been published by members of the Established Church in support of the National system of education. It states that though the schools are not used as instruments of proselytism or to force religious instruction on any children who entertain conscientious objections to receiving it, careful religious instruction is given to Church children in the Holy Scriptures, and ample opportunities are afforded by the National Board for doing so. The document is signed by the Earls of Antrim and Desart, Viscount Monck, the Bishop of Down and Connor, Lord Clermont, the Deans of Elphin and Dromore, General Chesney, four ex-Fellows of Trinity College, several influential clergymen, and a long list of deputy-lieutenants and magistrates.

THE EDUCATION QUESTION.—The Carlow papers mention as the first fruits of the recent pastoral of the Roman Catholic prelates, that the schoolmaster at Carlow who has hitherto acted under the National Board has been dismissed, and the school placed under the management of the Christian Brothers. The national school books have been laid aside, and books and catechisms published, permissu superiorum, have been introduced in their stead, thus blotting out the National Board from the map of Carlow.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRELATES.—Another monster pastoral from Archbishop Cullen was read on Sunday in all the Roman Catholic chapels in Dublin. This fresh manifesto is of extraordinary length, and occupies about four columns of the journals which give it publicity. The topics on which it touches are national education, proselytising, the perilous position of the Popedom, and abuse of the revolutionary party in Italy. The following is an abstract of the document:—

"Though living in an age of boasted liberality and progress, we have often to witness acts of bigotry and illiberality scarcely ever equalled in the worst of times." There is an illustration of this state of things to the management of an hospital lately established in Dublin called the Adelaide Hospital, "the managers of which have destroyed the intrinsic merit of their work by enacting rules insulting to the religion of the great majority of the people of Ireland and of the Christian world, and calculated to deprive poor Catholics, who are invited to enter the hospital, of all the spiritual comforts provided for them by their holy church." "The managers of this institution have," it says, "thought fit to prevent the entrance into it of any Catholic priest, thus preventing all Catholic patients admitted therein from receiving the last sacraments and the other consolations of their holy religion. It might be said in justification of the rule that all patients were aware of its existence, and would not enter the hospital if they were unwilling to submit to it. But this statement was far from being satisfactory. Might it not happen that a stranger or a person taken suddenly ill, might be carried to the hospital, and be subjected to the operation of a rule of which he never heard? And if such a person at the approach of death asked for the assistance of a priest, was it to be pretended that his pious wishes were to be refused, or that the rule prohibiting him to receive the rites of the Catholic Church should be justified?" It then comments at some length on the conduct of the British press in reference to the recent pastoral address of the Catholic bishops, "explaining to Catholics their duties in regard to the education of their children." "All that the bishops required was, that a Catholic education on Catholic principles, Catholic masters, and the use of Catholic books, should be guaranteed to Catholic children; and that the bishops themselves should not be debarred from exercising the powers given by Christ when he said, 'Go and teach all nations.'" The treatment of Roman Catholics in Ireland as regarded education is then contrasted with the treatment of Protestants in the Roman Catholic countries of Belgium, Bavaria, France, and Austria. When the Protestants of Austria asked for separate schools, it says, "No clamour was raised upon the subject, and the good Catholic Emperor, yielding to the wishes of his Protestant subjects, freely granted all they could desire." The fullest liberty was granted to them to educate their children in their own religion; and even when the schools had been built by the State, none but Protestant masters could be employed for the education of Protestant children. "In the schools for the poor the fullest liberty of practising their religion must be given, and the unchristian warfare carried on against the cross, the emblem of redemption, must be given up; the class books, mingling religion with knowledge, must be of a character quite different from those at present in use, which are tinged with a spirit of Protestantism derived from their Protestant compilers, and utterly ignore the doctrines and practices of the Catholic Church." It then remarks on the temporal power of the Pope in Italy. It praises Cardinal Antonelli, attacks Lord Malmesbury, Lord Loftus, Sir J. Hudson, and other British diplomatists for interfering with the Pope, and stigmatises Lord Shaftesbury as a Pharisee for his subscription for Italy. Sardinia is described as "a country which, 12 years ago, was happy and flourishing, is now almost reduced to a state of utter destitution and bankruptcy, and groaning under a fearful despotism." As to the complaints that the people of the Pope's States are dissatisfied, that foreign troops are employed to keep them in obedience, and that misery, poverty, and crime abounds, it says that "it is necessary to recollect that no human institution is free from defects, and no Government can render all its subjects rich, happy, and contented. Political economists and enthusiastic statesmen sometimes promise to bring back the golden age, and to banish misery from this world. But their schemes are mere delusions. This earth is only a place of exile and banishment, where man's lot is to suffer." "Even in the greatest and best-governed States there are restless spirits seeking for changes, which frequently only aggravate their miseries, and mutinies, and seditions, and rebellions spring up from time to time. Even the British empire is not exempt from such evils, and very lately it has been considered expedient to repress them in India by fire and sword, by destroying and pillaging great cities, and even by blowing unfortunate soldiers to pieces from the mouth of cannon. The Pope has never found it necessary to have recourse to such violent measures, and his paternal heart would never sanction them. But if great and powerful States cannot always satisfy all their subjects, is it just to pretend that the Sovereign of a small territory, and comparatively weak, should succeed in so arduous an undertaking? Undoubtedly there are poor in the Pope's States, but there is none of that squalid and degrading poverty which you see in London and the great cities of England, and we never heard of millions of his subjects dying of famine or having been turned out by exterminating agents to perish of want on the high roads. There are crimes of course, in the Pope's States, but yet you do not hear of continual child murdering, nor of systematic poisoning, nor do you witness that degrading and scandalous exhibition of immorality which renders it impossible for a stranger to pass through many British cities without being shocked and horrified. Unhappily, too, there is some discontent in a part of the Papal territory; but it is not general, and does not extend to any considerable portion of the inhabitants; and what is more, it owes its origin to foreign influence and to the intrigues and emissaries of secret and Bible societies, and frequently to English money." The pastoral concludes as follows:—"In order to obtain the object of our prayers, you will exhort your pious flocks, rev. brethren, to say five 'Hail Marys' each day, after their night or morning prayers, for the safety of the Head of the Church. I grant them 40 days' indulgence each time they do so. You will also say the collect for the Pope, 'Pro Papa,' at every mass, omitting the collect actually said, until further orders."

THE PHŒNIX CONSPIRACY.—On Friday evening Daniel O'Sullivan, of Ardgroom, who was convicted at the recent assizes, was released from Mountjoy prison.

STOPPAGE OF NAVAN FAIR.—The priests have again succeeded in stopping one of the best of the Irish monthly fairs—the fair of Navan. Great preparations had been made for holding it on the day appointed, but from an early hour in the morning, and before the arrival of any cattle, a body of labourers was engaged with picks and spades, digging over the surface of the green, with a view of preventing any stock standing on it; at the same time offering no illegal opposition to the holding of the fair, as they ceased working when the day advanced. A number of intending purchasers arrived by the special train, but seeing what was going on they immediately returned to Drogheda.

THE DOON MURDER.—The chances of the discovery of Mr Crowe's murderers seem to be as remote as ever. The O'Briens, after having undergone a protracted incarceration, and after three or four committals and re-committals, were on Friday night discharged from the County Gaol, no evidence having been offered on which the authorities could send them to trial.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION BY A CLERGYMAN.—On Tuesday the magistrates of Ballinrobe were engaged in inquiring into two summonses, the first charging the Rev. R. Goodison, a Protestant clergyman, with threatening to shoot the Rev. Mr. Lavelle, of Partry; the second charging Father Lavelle with using threatening language to Mr. Goodison, a dispute having arisen between them on the subject of proselytism. After hearing evidence at great length, the Court decided in the first case to send it for trial at the next assizes, and in the second against Father Lavelle, that it be dismissed without prejudice. Mr. Goodison was admitted to bail. Another case against Father Lavelle was dismissed on the merits.

THE MURDER OF MR. JESSOP.—Two men named Cregh and Manion have been arrested near Clare, in the King's County, on the charge of being implicated in the murder of Mr. Thomas Jessop. They were seized in bed, and on the bolster being raised a pair of pistols, capped and loaded, a bullet mould, and powder and shot were discovered. The prisoners were evidently prepared for resistance, but the police proceeded so cautiously that a scuffle did not take place.

THE SCOTTISH EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—At the meeting of the annual synod of the bishops of this church, held at Edinburgh last week, a presentment was made against the Bishop of Brechin for teaching unsound doctrine on the question of the Eucharist. In particular, it was charged that the bishop taught and maintained, contrary to the 21st Article, "that the Eucharistic sacrifice is the same substantially with that of the cross," and had declared that "no words of man can strengthen the tremendous and absolute identity of the two sacrifices." Several other charges of a similar kind were made against him, and he was allowed three months to prepare and lodge with the clerk of court his answer to the presentment, which is forthwith to be communicated to the parties; and the synod is to meet on the 7th of February next to hear parties in the case.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH.—Sir David Brewster has decided on accepting the Principalship of the University of Edinburgh, which the Town Council had unanimously offered him. This acceptance vacates the Principalship of St. Andrew's.

THE RECENT ACCIDENT ON THE SOUTH COAST.—The coroner's inquest in this case terminated on Friday, when the jury returned the following verdict:—

"That the explosion was caused by an excess of steam pressure beyond that to which the steam valve was screwed down, but there is no evidence to show how such increased pressure was obtained. The jury recommend that every locomotive engine should be provided with a locked-up safety valve beyond the control of the driver, in addition to the valves now in use, and that some regulation should be prescribed for ascertaining with more exactness than at present the weight to be taken by engines on railway goods trains."

Obituary.

The Countess Dowager of Listowel died on the 2d inst at her residence in Eaton Square, in her 81st year. She was the second daughter of the late Mr. John Latham, and married in 1812 the first Earl of Listowel, great grandfather of the present peer.

Rear-Admiral Bowyer died on the 8th inst. at Southampton, in his 70th year. He entered the navy in 1803, and was present in Sir Richard Strachan's action in 1805, and at the taking of the Dutch West India Islands in 1807. He was afterwards employed in active operations on the coast of Spain, and was present at the capture of Vigo, and at the defence of Cadiz. He subsequently served on the coast of Africa, in the Baltic, the Brazils, and various parts of South America. In 1848 he was appointed inspecting commander in the Coast Guard, and was promoted to post rank in 1850, becoming a retired Rear-Admiral in 1855. He received a medal for his services in Sir Richard Strachan's action.

Sir George Goodman, formerly M.P. for Leeds, died at his seat at Roundhay, near that town, on Thursday morning. He was a magistrate for the West Riding, and was the first mayor of Leeds under the Municipal Corporations Act in 1836. He was re-elected in 1846, 1850, and 1851, in which year he received the honour of knighthood. While in office as Mayor in 1852 he was returned to Parliament for the borough as the colleague of the Right Hon. M. T. Baines. On the dissolution in 1857 he retired in consequence of failing health, and from that period he was seldom able to appear in public. Some years back he was prominent in all political and philanthropic movements. He was a warm advocate of free trade, and was a decided Liberal in politics.

Mr. Robert Stephenson, M.P., the eminent engineer, died on Wednesday at his residence in Gloucester Square, after a long illness, having survived his friend and competitor Mr. Brunel somewhat less than a month. He was the eldest son of the late Mr George Stephenson, the renowned civil engineer and locomotive manufacturer, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was born in 1803 at Wilmington. In 1822 he was sent to Edinburgh University, and in the following year commenced his apprenticeship as an engineer under his father at Newcastle. He remained two years in this situation, at the end of which he set out upon an expedition to explore the gold and silver mines of Columbia and Venezuela. On his return to England in 1828 the subject of railways was beginning to receive considerable attention, and a reward of 500*l.* had been offered for the best locomotive, which should consume its own smoke, weigh no more than 6 tons, with its complement of water, and draw a train of 20 tons at the rate of 10 miles an hour. This prize was won by Mr. Stephenson, and the consequence was a large increase of the business of the engine factory at Newcastle. In 1833 the London and Birmingham railroad was commenced under his sole supervision. After a few years had elapsed Mr. Stephenson and Mr. Brunel became conspicuous as the two champions in the long-pending "battle of the gauges," Mr. Stephenson advocating the "narrow" gauge, and Mr. Brunel the "broad" gauge, as affording the more safe and expeditious means of travelling on railways. As leader of the narrow-gauge interest Mr. Stephenson lived to see his principle carried out in all the main lines throughout the United Kingdom. In addition to the London and Birmingham, he constructed the Blackwall, Norfolk, Aylesbury, and numerous other lines; and was engineer to the North Western, Midland, Eastern Counties, and several other railways. One of his great undertakings was the tubular railway bridge over the Conway. But even that passes almost into insignificance when compared with the Britannia tubular bridge across the Menai Straits, on which his chief reputation will always rest. It is truly called "a wonderful monument of human ingenuity," in which almost insuperable difficulties were overcome, with fewer disappointments from want of forethought or accurate calculations, and attended by a less number of accidents, than any undertaking of far less importance or magnitude. Mr. Stephenson was consulted by the Belgian Government on the best system of railroad lines to be adopted in that country, and was decorated by King Leopold for his services; and in 1846 he visited Norway for a similar purpose. He also assisted the late Mr. Brunel greatly by his experience and advice during the protracted operations in launching the Great Eastern. Mr. Stephenson was first returned to Parliament in 1847 for Whitby, in Yorkshire, in the Conservative interest, and represented that borough in the two following Parliaments. He generally supported Lord Derby and his policy, but on the occasion of Mr. Roebuck's celebrated motion in January, 1855, which led to the dissolution of Lord Aberdeen's Administration, he voted with the minority. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society, and was connected with many other learned and scientific bodies. He married in 1829 Miss Frances Sanderson, only daughter of Mr. John Sanderson, of the City of London, who died in 1842 without leaving any family.

Wills.—The will of the Hon. John Kennedy has been sworn under 70,000*l.*; the Hon. Lady Lumley, 35,000*l.*; Lieut.-Gen. Kemm, 9000*l.*; Mr. Thomas Henry Smith, of Bermondsey, 80,000*l.*; Mr. William Edward Russell, brewer and maltster, of Gravesend, 18,000*l.*

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Oct. 10.

The number of Beasts is smaller than on Monday last; consequently trade has recovered from Thursday's depression. There are a very few more Sheep; the demand is good, and on the average prices are better. Good Calves are dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 1270 Beasts, 6000 Sheep, and 81 Calves; from Scotland, 50 Beasts; from Ireland, 560; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 100, and 2200 from the northern and midland counties.

Beasts, 4590; Sheep & Lambs, 23,940; Calves, 400; Pigs, 126.

Thursday, Oct. 13.

The number of Beasts is very small, consequently they are readily disposed of at advanced rates. The supply of Sheep is about the same as of late. Trade is brisk, and some choicest qualities are rather dearer. Good Calves are in demand at higher prices. Our foreign supply consists of 46 Beasts, 830 Sheep, and 31 Calves. The number of Milch Cows is 117.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Oct. 10.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and met a quick sale (partly for Yorkshire) at an advance of 1s. per qr. upon the prices of this day se'nnight. The business transacted in foreign was not large, nevertheless full prices were obtained, and French and Russian qualities must be written 1s. per qr. dearer. For finest malting and grinding Barley there is a good demand at late rates; inferior malting is difficult of sale. Beans and Peas bring last week's prices. The Oat trade is slow at a decline of 6d. per qr. The top price of town-made Flour is unaltered, but Norfolk is held for rather more money.

Friday, Oct. 14.

The weather during the past week has been very wet, with variable wind, chiefly easterly; to-day fine. The Wheat trade was not active, although particularly firm, and in the majority of markets good qualities of new English were written 1s. per qr. dearer, a similar advance being obtained on the general descriptions of foreign. Barley has fully maintained its former rates, and in some instances 1s. per qr. improvement has been obtained. Business in Beans, Peas, and Oats was heavy, and their late value barely maintained. In several of the chief markets of the kingdom Flour has advanced about 1s. per sack. This week's arrivals from Southern Europe off the coast show a considerable falling off in the supplies from this quarter. The sales include Berdansk Wheat at 45s., Marianopoli at 45s. 9d., and Taganrog Ghirka at 43s. 6d. to 44s. 6d. per 492 lbs.; Ibrail Maize at 26s. to 27s. per 480 lbs.; Galatz at 29s. 3d. and Odessa at 28s. 9d. to 29s. 6d., each per 492 lbs.; Odessa Barley at 22s. 6d. to 23s. 6d., and Bessarabian at 21s. per 400 lbs. The arrivals of English grain this week are moderate. There was a very thin attendance at to-day's market. Monday's prices for English Wheat were well supported, and the same may be said of foreign, for which, however, the inquiry was limited. Barley sells freely at Monday's quotations. Beans and Peas are unaltered in value. For Oats there is an improved demand at the prices lately current.

Liverpool, Tuesday, Oct. 11.—We had a fair attendance of millers at our Corn Exchange this morning, and holders remained firm at the improvement established yesterday; buyers, however, acted cautiously. Wheat may be quoted about 2d. per cental, and Flour 6d. to 1s. per sack dearer than on Friday. Indian Corn steady at full prices, but demand slow. Oats and Oatmeal sluggish. Egyptian Beans, Peas, and Barley maintain full prices. The market closed steady, but without activity.

Friday, Oct. 14.—Grain market slow, with limited attendance of buyers. The quotations generally are at Tuesday's prices. Wheat in moderate demand; Flour quiet; Beans and Indian Corn steady, and other articles only in retail inquiry.

FRY AND SONS' CHOCOLATES AND COCOAS.—Victoria Chocolate, Bon Bons, Soluble Cocoa, &c., in great variety. These delicious beverages are now sold at very moderate prices, and many of them are highly economical.

FRY'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA is an article of unexceptionable quality. FRY'S SOLUBLE COCOA, in Hexagon packets, and FRY'S PEARL COCOA, are strongly recommended.

FRY AND SONS, MANUFACTURERS TO THE QUEEN.

Liebig, the celebrated Chemist, asserts that nitrogen is essential to the healthy action of the bile, and the growth, sustenance, and invigoration of the body. No stronger recommendation of Cocoa and Chocolate can therefore be given than the following statement:—Caffeine and Theine each contain only about 29 per cent., whilst Theobromine (or essence of Cocoa) contains upwards of 35 per cent. of nitrogen.

THE CYCLOPÆDIA of ANATOMY and PHYSIOLOGY. Edited by ROBERT B. TODD, M.D., F.R.S., &c., Physician to King's College Hospital.

"Not only does the latter part of the work bring its contents up to the latest date of our knowledge, but the number and grouping of the articles have permitted some of the more recent to modify and complete the unavoidable deficiencies of the earlier ones on the same or kindred subjects. ....It brings together a larger amount of information, is more carefully constructed, and more profusely illustrated, than any similar Dictionary or Cyclopædia hitherto published. Most of its materials are to a great extent inaccessible even to the scientific public; and many of its parts (we allude especially to its beautiful Essays on Comparative Anatomy) are still practically otherwise unpublished. Others of its articles are the choicest productions or studies of their several authors; who wrote little but what they had verified, and cared still less for that dangerous smoothness which sometimes beguiles the reader into a fancied knowledge of the subjects, and thus makes the fortune of the book at his expense. Lastly, most of the articles are singularly free from the vice of book-making: so much so, that the learning and historical research many of them involve would be little suspected by any one unacquainted with the subjects. ....While we may certainly feel proud that researches so toilsome and costly as many incorporated in this work should have been undertaken and carried out (like the whole efforts of British science) without any help from the Government or the public, and by the unaided efforts of individuals themselves, we cannot but express some obligations to the eminent firm by whom this truly national work has been finally completed and set before the public. Indeed we will go further, and add that they are strictly entitled not only to gratitude, but to a speedy sale of the whole impression of the book. ....Writers of Physiological Essays will, it is hoped, take it as a friendly hint if we suggest that, before rushing into print with new and brilliant discoveries, they look into the pages of what we must, for years to come, regard as the text-book of British Physiology..... The publishers are quite entitled to expect a large and rapid sale for what is as incomparably the best, as it certainly is the cheapest, scientific work of the day—a work indispensable to the Physiologist and scarcely less so to the Physician."—Medico-Chirurgical Review, Oct.

WHITE AND SOUND TEETH are indispensable to personal attraction and to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food. ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of oriental ingredients, is of inestimable value in improving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath sweet and pure. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a pearl-like whiteness. As the most efficient and fragant aromatic purifier of the breath, teeth, and gums ever known, ROWLANDS' Odonto has for a long series of years occupied a distinguished place at the toilets of the sovereigns and the nobility throughout Europe: while the general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is universally held.—Price, 2*s.* 9*d.* per box. CAUTION.—The words "ROWLANDS' Odonto" are on the Label, and "A ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved on the Government stamp affixed on each box.—Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

News of the Week.

THE Treaty of Peace between France and Austria was signed at Zurich on Monday by the Plenipotentiaries of the two Powers, and now awaits the ratification of the respective Governments. It is based upon the provisions of the Convention of Villafranca, and contains little beyond them except the settlement of the Lombard debt, on account of which Sardinia is to pay the sum of ten millions sterling to Austria, in addition to the sum of two millions and a half to France in re-imbursement of her advances during the war. It provides of course for the cession of Lombardy to France, with the exception of Mantua, Peschiera, and as far as the frontier line fixed by a special commission, the limit of which is already known; and it declares that the EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH transfers the ceded portions of Lombardy to the KING OF SARDINIA. It states that the rights of the Grand Duke of TUSCANY, the Duke of MODENA, and the Duke of PARMA are expressly reserved by the contracting Powers, and that the "tranquillity of the Church and the power of the HOLY FATHER" are to be insured by the two Emperors uniting their efforts in order to induce the POPE to carry out a reform in the administration of his States. The treaty also pledges the Emperors to "assist with all their power" in the formation of a Confederation of all the Italian States, with a Federal army to watch over the defence of the interior and exterior of Italy. Venetia, which will remain under the rule of Austria, is to form a part of this Confederation, and to participate in the rights and obligations of the Federal Treaty. All persons who took part in the late war are to be secured from attack either in their person or their property, and are to be allowed to remain unmolested in either country, the new Government undertaking to respect their rights in regard to pensions and invested property. The Treaty concludes with a stipulation that it shall be signed and ratified, and the ratifications exchanged at Zurich within 15 days. Meanwhile the EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH has received the deputations of Tuscany, Parma, and Modena, and is said to have assured them that though he will endeavour, in the spirit of the Treaty, to secure the return of the exiled Sovereigns, he will not employ force or permit force to be employed by any other Power to effect their restoration.

A despatch from Madrid announces that Morocco has agreed to satisfy the demands of Spain, and that an immediate settlement of all the questions at issue between the two Powers may be anticipated.

THE QUEEN AT LOCH KATRINE.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and Princesses Alice and Helena left Edinburgh on Friday morning for Loch Katrine to open the new Glasgow Waterworks. The day was dull, with frequent rain, and the beautiful scenery of the district was half enveloped in the mountain mists, but the Royal party nevertheless seemed greatly to enjoy the visit. The ceremony of opening the aqueduct which is to convey the water of Loch Katrine to Glasgow, a distance of 37 miles, passed off well in presence of a large concourse of spectators, though it rained very fiercely except during the performance of the ceremony. Her Majesty reached the tunnel upon the Loch a little after 2 o'clock, accompanied by the Duke of Newcastle, and was received by the Lord Provost and magistrates of Glasgow, the Dukes of Montrose and Atholl, the Earl of Mansfield, &c. The Secretary to the Water Commission read an address from the Corporation, to which the Queen made the following reply:—

"I accept with great satisfaction your loyal and affectionate address, and thank you sincerely for the expression of your attachment to my throne and person, and for the cordial welcome with which you have received me. It is with much gratification that I avail myself of this opportunity of inaugurating a work which, both in its conception and its execution, reflects so much credit upon its promoters, and is calculated to improve the health and comfort of the vast population which is rapidly increasing round the great centre of manufacturing interest in Scotland. Such a work is worthy of the spirit of enterprise and the philanthropy of Glasgow, and I trust that it will be blessed with complete success. I desire that you will convey to the great community which you represent my earnest wishes for their continued prosperity and happiness."

THE QUEEN AT BANGOR.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family arrived at Penrhyn Castle, near Bangor, on Saturday afternoon. At Bangor station Colonel the Hon. Douglas Pennant was in attendance to receive her Majesty, who on alighting entered the carriage of her host, and proceeded, amid the cheers of the inhabitants, through the town of Bangor to Penrhyn, where the Queen was received by Lady Louisa Douglas Pennant and a family circle at half-past 6 o'clock. A small party was invited to meet her Majesty in the evening. A grand display of fireworks took place on the summit of one of the adjacent mountains after dark; the shipping in the Penrhyn docks exhibited blue lights, and the town of Bangor was illuminated. On Sunday morning, though the weather was very unfavourable, her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince Arthur and the Princesses, walked in the grounds adjacent to the castle. At 11 o'clock the Queen and the Royal family attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle; the Bishop of Bangor preached the sermon. In the afternoon the Prince Consort, accompanied by Col. Pennant, visited the Penrhyn slate quarries, and returned through the model village of Llandegai, where his Royal Highness was joined by her Majesty, who, although the afternoon was very wet and disagreeable, had driven over from the castle in an open pony phaeton with Lady Louisa Pennant to see the place. The Queen and the Prince returned to the castle at half-past 5 o'clock. In the evening there was a dinner party at the castle. After dinner a choral society, composed of young men and boys employed upon the Colonel's slate works, and numbering more than 100 voices, attended at the castle and sang various pieces of sacred music. On Monday morning the Queen was up early, and took a walk in the grounds with the Princesses and Prince Arthur. At half-past 8 the Prince Consort went by special train to Holyhead and inspected the Great Eastern, returning afterwards to the castle. At 10 o'clock, accompanied by Lady Louisa Douglas Pennant and the company staying at the castle, her Majesty again went out into the grounds and planted an oak sapling in a prominent position upon the lawn; Prince Arthur at the same time planting a young cedar. Soon after 11 the Queen, Prince Consort, and Royal family left the castle for Bangor, and there took the train for Windsor, travelling by the Chester and Holyhead and London and North-Western Railways, and stopping at Stafford half an hour for refreshment. At Willesden the train passed on to the South-Western Junction line, over which the Royal party travelled to Windsor, the whole journey of 254 miles having been performed in 7 hours and three-quarters.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO WINDSOR.—The Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince Arthur, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, and Princess Louisa, arrived at Windsor Castle on Wednesday evening. Prince Leopold and Princess Beatrice had previously arrived from Osborne. On Tuesday the Queen and Prince Consort walked in the Home Park, accompanied by Prince Arthur and the Princesses Alice, Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice. On Wednesday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, drove in the Home Park. The Prince Consort rode on horseback. On Thursday the Queen, with Prince Arthur and Princess Beatrice, drove out in a carriage-and-four. The Prince Consort came to London by a special train of the Great Western Railway, and visited the South Kensington Museum, returning to Windsor in the afternoon. The Queen will hold a Privy Council this afternoon at Windsor Castle.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE CONSORT TO THE GREAT EASTERN.—The expected visit of her Majesty to the Great Eastern on Monday did not take place. The Prince Consort, however, accompanied by the Duke of Newcastle, Admiral Sir George Seymour, and Colonel Ponsonby, paid an early visit to the ship in Holyhead harbour on Monday. On arriving at the pier-head he was received by Mr. Campbell, the chairman, and Mr. Bold, managing director, by whom he was conducted on board a small steamer, which immediately put off for the ship. After steaming round the vessel, the vast proportions of which were observed to great advantage as she lay at anchor within the breakwater, only a short distance from her Majesty's ship Hastings, the Prince was received on board the Great Eastern by Captain Harrison and the other officers of the ship. Ascending to the deck, near the stern of the vessel, he was first conducted to the steering house, where the mode of working the rudder was pointed out. From the stern, the Prince walked along the deck to the bows of the ship, and viewed her from the forecastle. The main saloon, the ladies' saloon, and cabins were next visited, after which his Royal Highness descended into the paddle engine-room, where he devoted some time to a close examination of the machinery. From the paddle engine-room he proceeded through the watertight tunnel to the screw engine-room, and remained there a considerable period, making various inquiries into the action of the engines. He subsequently examined the auxiliary steam-engine, and, after looking into the boiler-rooms and other compartments of the ship, again ascended to the deck. The Prince was now shown the captain's cabin, after which he ascended the bridge, and inspected the telegraphs by which the machinery and steering apparatus are worked. He then mounted the paddle-boxes, and took a final survey of the ship from that point. The Prince thanked Mr. Campbell and Mr. Bold, as well as Captain Harrison, for the pleasure afforded him by his visit, and, having excused himself from partaking of a déjeûner that had been prepared, returned to the small steamer, and, under a salute from the Hastings, proceeded to the pier-head, where a special train was in readiness to re-convey him to Bangor.

VISIT OF PRINCE NAPOLEON TO THE GREAT EASTERN.—On Tuesday morning Prince Napoleon, attended by a numerous suite, arrived at Holyhead in the French steamer Dauphin, and paid a visit to the Great Eastern. His Imperial Highness examined the ship minutely and afterwards breakfasted with Captain Harrison, remaining on board from 8 A.M. till half past 11. After leaving the Great Eastern, the Prince paid a visit to a gunboat and a despatch boat lying in the harbour; and after inspecting the breakwater, proceeded in the afternoon to Liverpool, where he arrived on Wednesday morning. On landing, the Prince proceeded by train to Manchester, where, it was understood, he went to procure some horses for his stud. He returned to Liverpool in the evening and embarked in the Dauphin on his return to France.

THE PRINCE OF WALES arrived at Buckingham Palace on Friday evening from Holyrood Palace. His Royal Highness attended Divine service on Sunday in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Prince left London on Monday for Oxford, to commence his studies at the university. On his arrival at Frewen Hall, the residence prepared for him in that city, an address was presented to his Royal Highness by the Mayor and Corporation. Shortly afterwards the Prince proceeded to Christ Church, accompanied by the Dean, and was entered on the College books. He then proceeded to the Vice-Chancellor's lodgings, where he was matriculated with the usual ceremonies.

PRINCE ALFRED has arrived at Smyrna in the Euryalus, and is about to visit Metelin, Salonica, the Greek Archipelago, and Constantinople, the Sultan having issued a firman for the passage of the frigate through the Dardanelles.

THE CABINET.—Cabinet Councils were held on Saturday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury.

GOVERNORSHIP OF THE CAPE.—A deputation of gentlemen interested in the Cape colony had an interview with the Duke of Newcastle, as Secretary of State for the Colonies, on Thursday, to express, on their own behalf and on that of all classes in the colony, their desire that Sir George Grey should be reappointed Governor. The result of the interview has not officially transpired, but it is understood that Sir George Grey will be reappointed.

KNIGHTHOOD.—The Queen has conferred the honour of knighthood on the Right Hon. John Melville, Lord Provost of Edinburgh. Her Majesty has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom to James Carter, Esq., Chief Justice of New Brunswick.

THE ARMY.—Lieutenant-General Sir William M. G. Colebrooke, C.B., has been appointed Colonel Commandant of a Brigade of Royal Artillery, in the room of the late General Evelegh.

THE CHANNEL FLEET.—Rear-Admiral Elliott hoisted his flag (blue at the mizen) last week, on board the screw steamship Hero, in Plymouth Sound, and took command of the Channel fleet, consisting of the Hero, 91; Aboukir, 90; Algiers, 91; Trafalgar, 91; Donegal, 101; Mersey, 40; Melpomene, 50; and Emerald, 51. The fleet afterwards left the port for a cruise, and anchored in Cork harbour on Saturday.

VOLUNTEER CORPS.—The following circular has been addressed by the Secretary for War to the Lord-Lieutenants of counties announcing an increase in the per centage of arms to be granted in future to Rifle Volunteer Corps:—

"War Office, Oct. 11.

"My Lord,—I have the honour to inform you that her Majesty's Government have determined to issue immediately to Rifle Volunteer Corps an additional supply of long Enfield rifles (pattern 1853), to the extent of 25 per cent. on the effective strength of the corps. This supply will raise the aggregate issue to 50 per cent. on the effective strength of the force; and I have to request that you will be good enough to communicate this decision of the Government to the commanding officers of the various corps in your county, who should at once forward the prescribed requisitions to this office for such portion of the supply as they may be entitled to under the regulations. At a later period I shall be prepared to issue a third instalment of arms of the same pattern as the 50 per cent now granted. And I hope to be in a position, in the course of next summer, to supply the short rifle with sword bayonet, to a limited extent, in exchange for the long one at present issued. I have the honour to add that the amount of ammunition for effective members to be issued at cost price, on the requisition of the commanding officer, is raised from 100 rounds ball, 60 rounds blank, 176 percussion caps, and 20 ditto for snapping practice per man, as laid down in the memorandum of 13th July, to 200 rounds ball, 120 rounds blank, 352 percussion caps, and 40 ditto for snapping practice per man.—I have, &c.,

"SIDNEY HERBERT."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of Monday announced that the Treaty of Peace was signed on that day at Zurich by the Plenipotentiaries of Austria and France. The following is an analysis of its principal articles:—

"France returns to Austria the Austrian steamers seized during the war, but on which judgment has not been passed, &c. Austria gives up Lombardy, with the exception of Mantua, Peschiera, and as far as the frontier line fixed by a special commission (the limit of which is already known). The Emperor of the French declares that he transfers these portions of Lombardy to the King of Sardinia. The employés of Piedmont and Austria are to have the option of remaining in the service of the two Governments, and of transferring within a year their goods to Piedmont, and vice versâ; retaining, however, their right to any property left behind them when they move their domicile from Austria to Sardinia, or from Sardinia to Austria. The pensions acquired by persons in Lombardy are to be respected and paid by the new Government to those entitled to them, and, in those cases where it is so stipulated, to the widows and children of those pensioned. The settlement of the debt is the subject of two articles, one of which is an additional agreement for the mode of payment. According to these articles, Piedmont is to pay to Austria 40 millions of florins, and is besides to be responsible for three fifths of the debt of the Monte Lombardo-Venetian. (Altogether the debt transferred to Sardinia amounts to 250 millions of francs.) The religious establishments in Lombardy are to have the liberty to dispose freely of their private and landed property, if the possession of such property is incompatible with the laws of the new Government, and Austria undertakes to restore the securities and deposits of private persons placed in the public establishments belonging to Austria. Desiring that the tranquillity of the Church and the power of the Holy Father should be insured, and being convinced that this end could not be obtained in a more effective manner than by a system suited to the wants of the populations and by reforms, the necessity of which has been already recognised by the Sovereign Pontiff, the two contracting parties will unite their efforts in order that a reform in the Administration of the States of the Church should be carried out by his Holiness. The territorial limits of the independent States of Italy which did not take part in the last war could be changed only with the assent of the other Powers of Europe which took part in forming, and guaranteed the existence of, these States. The rights of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, the Duke of Modena, and the Duke of Parma, are expressly reserved by the high contracting Powers. The two Emperors will assist with all their power in the formation of a Confederation of all the States of Italy, the object of which will be the preservation of the independence and integrity of Italy, which will insure the development of their moral and material interests, and will watch over the defence of the interior and exterior of Italy by means of a Federal army. Venetia, which will remain under the rule of the Emperor of Austria, will form a part of this confederation, and will participate in the rights and in the obligations of the federal treaty, the clauses of which will be established by the representatives of all the States of Italy. Persons who took part in the late events are not to be attacked either in their person or their property, and are to remain unmolested in the two countries; and Austria is to be obliged to free from military service the soldiers belonging to the territory which she gives up. The present treaty is to be signed and ratified, and the ratification exchanged at Zurich within 15 days."

The Pays, in announcing the conclusion of the treaty between France and Austria, adds that the Plenipotentiaries will sign the two other treaties in a few days. Some formalities in the Chancellerie are, it says, the only cause of delay, the three Powers being agreed upon all points of the treaty, and the decision of the King of the Belgians on the settlement of the debt of Lombardy having arrived at Zurich. It is also announced that the questions not settled at the Conferences will be submitted to a Congress, at which all the European Catholic Powers will be represented. The Emperor on Sunday received the deputations of Tuscany, Parma, and Modena, but the report that his Majesty refused to grant an audience to a deputation from Bologna is not correct, as there is no such deputation in Paris. It is said that his Majesty told the deputations that he would not permit force to be employed to secure the restoration of the Sovereigns of Central Italy from any quarter whatsoever; and that all the deputies were well satisfied with their reception. The Pays says that the Court will go to Compiègne on the 1st of November, and mentions a report that during the sojourn of the Emperor and the Empress there the Emperor of Austria and the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia will pay a visit to their Majesties. General Dabormida, the Sardinian Minister for Foreign Affairs, arrived in Paris on Friday and had an interview with the Emperor. He had an interview with Count Walewski on Sunday, and another on Tuesday. It is said that he will proceed to London in the course of a few days. Rear-Admiral Dupony has left for London on a special mission, in order to study the methods followed in manufacturing engines for the navy. The report that France claims 300,000,000 fr. as indemnity of war from Piedmont is said to be without foundation. The French Government, however, having made advances to Piedmont before and during the war to the amount of 60,000,000 fr. in arms, provisions, and money, now claim only reimbursement of that sum. Reports of some changes in the Ministry are current, and Count Walewski and the Duke of Padua are mentioned as being likely to retire. Count Kisseleff, the Russian Ambassador, had an audience of the Emperor on Saturday, and took his departure on Sunday for Warsaw. The Count and Countess of Montemolin (Don Carlos de Bourbon) have arrived in Paris, and are staying at the Hôtel du Rhin, where they occupy the same apartments which Prince Napoleon Bonaparte, deputy to the Constituent Assembly, inhabited in 1848. The Cardinal Archbishop of Lyons, and the Bishops of Soissons, Moulins, Angers, Verdun, Chartres, and Vannes, have published pastoral letters in defence of the temporal power of the Pope; and the Bishop of Luçon has written a letter to the same effect to the Archbishop of Bordeaux. The clergy of Aix also, headed by their Archbishop, have signed an address to the Pope. In order to counteract the effect of these "protests" the Government has forbidden the Univers, the Ultramontane organ, to continue their publication in its columns. The Moniteur publishes a decree extending the powers and the sphere of action of the Prefect of the Seine.

SPAIN.—A despatch from Madrid of the 17th states that the Government has declared to the Cortes that, before the time granted to Morocco to satisfy the demands of Spain had expired, it had received information that Morocco would give the satisfaction demanded. Spain immediately demanded guarantees from Morocco that peace should not in future be disturbed, and conceded a further delay, so that an immediate settlement may be expected. The debates on the question of the indemnity for Church property are still proceeding in the Cortes. Grisi and Mario have been hissed off the stage of the Opera at Madrid. The opera was Norma, and the uproar in the house was indescribable. A case, resembling that of the Mortara family at Rome, has occurred at Denia, near Alicante. Mrs. Graham, the wife of an English Protestant gentleman, having been prematurely confined of a six months' child, the Spanish surgeon who attended the accouchement, and who is of course a Roman Catholic, seeing that the child would die, baptised it "in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." The child soon afterwards died and was buried in the Protestant cemetery, after which the priest of the parish, with the sanction of the Archbishop of Valencia, demanded the exhumation of the body in order that it might be dealt with according to the rites of the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Graham, finding that he could get no redress from the Vice-Consul or the Spanish authorities, applied to the British consul at Alicante, who brought the case before Mr. Buchanan, the British Minister at Madrid. Mr. Buchanan immediately addressed to the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs a formal remonstrance against the proceedings of the ecclesiastical authorities in the matter. Lord John Russell has approved the steps taken by Mr. Buchanan for the protection of Mr. Graham, and has instructed him to use every endeavour to secure him from molestation on the part of the ecclesiastical authorities.

SWITZERLAND.—The delay which has occurred in the signature of the second treaty was caused by the difficulties respecting the amount of the debt of Lombardy to be borne by Sardinia. Austria, it is said, proposed Holland as arbitrator of the Lombard debt. France however declined this proposition, as the Dutch Government might evince a certain bias on account of the great number of holders of Austrian stock in Holland. It is also stated that Austria before accepting the arbitration of a third Power for the settlement of the debt of Lombardy, demanded that the maximum and the minimum of the debt of Lombardy should be settled. The Federal Council has bought the Austrian steamers on the Lago Maggiore.

BELGIUM.—The Cardinal Archbishop of Malines, Primate of Belgium, has published a pastoral letter to the clergy and faithful of his diocese, denouncing the attacks made on the temporal power of the Pope.

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday, the representatives of the four kingdoms, and of the Grand Duchies of Hesse and Mecklenburg, and the Duchy of Nassau, made a proposal for a revision of the federal military system.

AUSTRIA.—The Emperor of Austria is about to proceed to Warsaw to meet the Emperor of Russia on the 23d inst. M. de Balabine, the Russian Ambassador at Vienna, has already left for Warsaw. Letters from Hungary say that the whole country is again politically agitated. The Calvinists belonging to the superintendency on the other side of the Theiss have followed the example recently given by their Lutheran brethren, and requested the Emperor to suspend his patent of the 1st September. Baron Hubner, Minister of Police, has left Vienna for Pesth. The dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church in Austria are not disposed to be outdone by the French bishops in their demonstrations for the Pope. Cardinal Rauscher, Archbishop of Vienna, has taken the initiative by addressing to all the bishops of his diocese a pastoral letter, to be read in all the churches of his diocese. The prelate describes in the darkest colours the scenes of desolation and disorder which he declares can now be witnessed in Romagna, and the avowed object of which, he asserts, is to despoil the Holy Father of the patrimony of the Apostles. The clergy are directed to offer up public prayers in all the churches to implore the Divine protection for the Sovereign Pontiff, and for the integral preservation of the temporal power transmitted to him by his predecessors.

PRUSSIA.—The Prince Regent and Prince Frederick William, accompanied by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. von Schleinitz, left Berlin on Tuesday evening for Breslau, to meet the Emperor of Russia. All the Ministers have returned to Berlin except Prince Hohenzollern and the Minister of War, and Cabinet Councils have been held daily. It is rumoured that a modification of the Ministry is not improbable, as the Cabinet is not unanimous respecting certain Bills to be brought before the Chambers next session. The Government is about to send the Thetis frigate and corvettes Frauenlob and Arcona to China and Japan. A Councillor of State is to go with the expedition, with authority to conclude treaties with China, Japan, and Siam. When this is done one of the corvettes is to remain at Yedo with a resident agent.

RUSSIA.—The papers announce the arrival of Schamyl at St. Petersburg on the 8th inst., by railway from Moscow. The celebrated Imaum of the Caucasus was accompanied by his son and four murides. He alighted at the Znamensky Hotel, facing the station; but the time of his arrival not being known there were few persons assembled to see him. A few hours after his arrival he drove out in an open carriage, and paid visits to the principal military authorities. He then drove along the principal quays and squares. He will remain a few days at St. Petersburg, and it is said he will then join his wife and son at Kalouga.

BADEN.—The Margrave William of Baden died on the 10th inst. He was born in 1792, and was uncle of the Grand Duke.

ITALY.—Accounts from Parma state that justice continues to be energetically carried out, and that some new arrests have taken place. The municipality has determined on the destruction of the column on which the head of Colonel Anviti was placed. The National Guard and all classes of the townspeople have signed an address of thanks and adhesion to the Dictator Farini for the energetic measures he has taken. General Ribotti has issued a proclamation forbidding any one not belonging to the army to wear a military dress. The King of Sardinia arrived at Genoa on Saturday amid the enthusiastic cheers of the people. The Dowager Empress of Russia arrived there on the same day, and was conducted by his Majesty to the Royal palace. The Empress left on the 16th for Nice. From Florence we learn that the Grand Duke has written to his partisans, to abstain from every attempt in favour of the re-establishment of his dynasty. The Provisional Government has diminished the tax on salt. The Argo steam corvette, of the Tuscan navy, hoisted the Sardinian flag on arriving at Spezzia. The Duke de Grammont, French Ambassador, continues to hold conferences with the Pope at Castel Gandolfo. It is said that His Holiness, acting in concert with the Emperor of the French, will address a manifesto to the inhabitants of the States of the Church.

TURKEY.—Accounts from Constantinople to the 15th inst. state that two of the chief conspirators have died at Kulely. Sir Henry Rawlinson, English Minister to the Persian Court, has been received by the Sultan, and afterwards took his departure for Teheran. A vessel with a number of Circassian emigrants on board, has been wrecked, and 203 persons lost their lives. The following note has been addressed to the Sublime Porte by the representatives of the six Powers that signed the Treaty of Paris. It is stated that the document was received with undisguised ill humour by Fuad Pacha, and the only reply made to the six dragomans who presented it was, "We acknowledge the receipt of the paper you have brought." It was even thought that the Porte would avoid sending any reply.

"The representatives of the Powers which, while guaranteeing the maintenance and the integrity of the Ottoman Empire, testified a particular interest in its prosperity, feel it their duty, under the present grave circumstances, to call the earnest attention of the Porte to the political and financial condition of the country. Europe has marked out an important place for Turkey in her midst, but she was well aware that an external guarantee would not suffice to realise her wishes if the Power thus strengthened from without did not exert itself, and if its internal organisation was not promoted by the gradual and continued introduction of reforms, the principles of which have been solemnly and liberally admitted by his Majesty the Sultan. So great a task cannot doubtless be performed in a day; but its furtherance brooks no delay; and in the intermediary state through which the empire is passing between the ruins of a defunct system, and the still incomplete materials of a new one, a continual and incessant impulse is necessary to urge on the laggers, to compel all to work for the common good. Now, the representatives, as undersigned, regret to state, without pointing out the cause, that this impulse does not manifest itself in a manner to attain the object at which the Sublime Porte itself must aim. The unsettled feeling which prevails in the public mind in the different classes of the empire will not subside until the majority of the nation can clearly foresee in a proximate future an epoch where it will enjoy security resulting from the normal movement of a society satisfied with itself, peacefully occupied with the development of its resources, and governed by an administration attentive to its moral as well as to its material wants; the declared enemy of abuses, especially economical and prudent in the outlay of the public revenue. The fulfilment of these general conditions of the prosperity of States is independent of the differences of religion and of race. The question to be resolved is that of the establishment of a Government under which all the subjects of his Majesty the Sultan, Mussulmans or Christians, instead of suffering analogous evils, will enjoy similar advantages."

MOROCCO.—Advices from Morocco state that the Emperor, having put to flight his adversaries, has made a triumphal entry into Mequinez. The Emperor has granted freedom of trade to the inhabitants.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The Bombay mail has arrived with accounts from that Presidency to the 27th Sept., and from Hong Kong to the 24th August. Central India is still unsettled. The frontier districts of Nepaul are still occupied by the Nana and his followers. The Waghers are still in insurrection. A force is to be sent against them. Mr. Ward, the American Minister, has been courteously received by the Chinese authorities, and has entered Pekin, where he was to exchange the ratified treaties. The Chinese authorities are said to have been very polite and condescending, and asserted that the Government was prepared and anxious to receive the Ministers of England and France in a friendly manner. Meanwhile the Indian Government had been applied to for 15,000 troops. Her Majesty's 67th and 99th are under orders for China. General Mouravieff, the Russian Governor of Eastern Siberia, has reached the Peiho, and is to be followed by four gun-boats. The General immediately despatched special messengers to the Russian Minister at Pekin; his presence excited some surprise. The Russians appeared to have a perfect understanding with the Chinese authorities. Order had been re-established at Shanghai, and confidence among the respectable portion of the Chinese community.

BORNEO.—The retributive expedition had returned to Sarawak, after inflicting severe punishment on the Kanowit people, for the treacherous murder of Messrs. Fox and Steele. The principals had been executed, with 14 other Fostmen. About 200 Dyaks also were killed, who had taken up a position above Kanowit.

AUSTRALIA.—The Yorkshire from Melbourne was off Plymouth on Thursday. She left Port Phillip Heads Aug. 2, and brings 210 passengers and 10,000 ounces of gold.

UNITED STATES.—Another filibustering expedition under Walker set sail in the beginning of the month from New Orleans for Nicagarua, but the whole party was arrested on the 7th inst. at the South-west Pass by the United States' Marshal, assisted by the United States' Artillery. They peaceably surrendered.— A despatch from Washington of the 4th inst. states that Lord Lyons had a protracted interview with the Secretary of State on the 1st. It says:—

"The English Government has not yet made known its views respecting the San Juan affair. Until that is done, of course, the Administration will not move in the matter. The next arrival from Europe will probably bring something from her Majesty's Government in regard to the matter."

Several private despatches had been received at the War Department from General Scott, dated at Key West, where the steamship had put in for the purpose of forwarding them. The old General was in excellent health. Despatches of great importance had been telegraphed to him in reply. The election in Georgia had resulted in Governor Brown's re-election by fully 15,000 majority. Senator Frederic and Judge Terry had fought a duel at San Francisco, and the judge received a wound in the throat, which was supposed to be mortal.—The All England Eleven commenced a match with Twenty-two of the United States at Hoboken, New York, on the 3d inst., and completely defeated the American players, who were delighted and astonished at the skill of the English players.

CANADA.—Accounts from Montreal state that a movement is commencing for a repeal of the union, and for the formation of a confederation of several States to be cut out of the existing provinces of Canada. The idea has been favourably received by the public press.

Public Addresses.

SIR JOHN PAKINGTON last week, in returning thanks for the Navy at Worcester, spoke as follows with respect to China:—

"He did not consider that he should be justified on that occasion in making any references to party politics, but he believed there was no set of politicians in England that did not feel that the prosperity of the British navy was essential to the prosperity of the country. It was therefore the duty of all parties and of all Governments to take care that that great arm of our strength should not be weakened or impaired. As reference had been made by the chairman to the unfortunate affair at the mouth of the Peiho, he thought it impossible that he could, in acknowledging the toast, pass it over altogether. They would recollect that the policy of England with respect to China became not long ago the subject of a great party struggle; but he hoped that would not be the case now. Whatever might have been the cause of the great and unfortunate disaster—for it would be folly to deny that it was a great disaster—whether or not mistakes had been committed, and if so, by whom—however that might be, he hoped the British public would consider these as matters of comparatively no importance; and he hoped that instead of our policy with respect to China being, as had been heretofore, the subject of party struggles, all parties and the great mass of the British public would be of opinion that any defeat of British arms was a thing that must be redressed. We could not afford to have our prestige impaired nor our honour doubted, and he believed that the general feeling of the public would be that this unfortunate reverse must in some way or other be redressed. Before he sat down he desired to do justice to those brave men who fought at the Peiho. Many of them were personally known to him, and he was proud to be able to call Admiral Hope his friend. He had had the honour of appointing him to the command in the Chinese Seas, and he had selected him solely because he was well known as a man of great ability, and an officer of great experience and skill. It was unnecessary for him to add that he was also a man of the most undoubted bravery, who had been doubly unfortunate in that engagement in suffering what to a British officer was the most painful of all things, defeat, and also in being himself personally wounded. He had had the pleasure of receiving several letters from Admiral Hope since the affair, and he was happy to say that the gallant officer was just recovering from his wounds; and he hoped he would be able to prove hereafter to the world that he was what every man in the British navy knew him to be—a distinguished ornament to the service."

LORD BROUGHAM on Saturday presided at the annual soirée of the Halifax Mechanics' Institution, and made the following remarks on the domestic education of women and the advantages of penny banks:—

"What has most attracted my attention in the report which has been read was, first, the great number of the working classes who profit by this institution. It is not confined to one order of society—not confined to those above the working classes; but the working men form about three-fifths, or one-half, of those actually in attendance in the institution. But that is not all. I find there are lessons given adapted to the circumstances of the people; and I particularly noticed that sewing is taught the females. There cannot be a better thing than to teach girls sewing—not, however, to exclude other things, such as history, reading, writing, a little geography, and I have no objection to a little French. But the great thing is to teach women that which will make them good housewives, good mothers of families, good wives of working men—that which will make homes of working men more comfortable than ale-houses. Now this is much neglected in all institutions of this kind. I have complained of it. I complained of it at Bradford; but that which is done here sets a noble example to other places. Now, though three-fifths is a large proportion of the working classes to attend this institution, I have a word to say upon the penny savings bank. It is evidently most successful and useful, and though great numbers of persons belong to this institution between 700 and 800 I think more members might be furnished by the working population of Halifax, though three-fifths is a very satisfactory proportion. I wish to have that which is greatest, and therefore better, and the advice which I ventured to give at Bradford—where the institution is very flourishing—to a committee of the working classes who belong to this institute, that they should canvass their brethren to join with them in this great and good work, I give now. It is for their own interests, and society benefits by it, for that which benefits individuals benefits society; but it is chiefly on the ground of their doing that for their own individual advantage that they should become members of this institution. It was a most delightful thing, that account which the vice-president gave of the penny savings bank in connection with this institute, and there cannot be a more useful branch of your educational system. It is, as was justly observed in the report, a method of, I will not say of teaching people provident habits, but of encouraging them. I asked the mayor what the population of Halifax is. You may say I should know what it is; but I have seen such augmentations in the different towns since I last was among my friends in Yorkshire—such increase as from 110,000 to 160,000 in Bradford. At Sheffield I thought it might be 120,000, though it is more than 160,000. Therefore, I could not tell the number at Halifax; so I asked the mayor, who said it was about 40,000. Let me tell you that 3000 is a very fair proportion of provident persons depositors in your savings bank, because I calculate there are great numbers in every community in good circumstances, and who therefore do not deposit, and to whom a savings bank is of no practical use; then there may be a few more deductions to make, and then reckoning, as is usual, five persons to a family, you have really 15,000 persons, or their representatives, as depositors in your savings bank, and that is nearly one half your whole population, deducting the sort of persons I have referred to. Still I hope that the number will be increased, and the provident habits will be encouraged in those who possess them, and will thus be better imparted to those who have them not. The practical men at the bar, and those who ought to be practical men in Parliament, and those who should be practical men out of Parliament, have a dislike to mere speechification, as it is sometimes called—that is, speaking for mere speaking sake, unless we have some purpose to serve, or some point to which to direct the attention of the hearers, and therefore it is I have singled out these two or three several heads of an important subject, and have troubled you with my remarks upon them."

The EARL OF SHAFTESBURY also attended the meeting at Halifax, and spoke as follows:—

"He endorsed all that the noble chairman had said on the subject of mechanics' institutes and penny banks. He came to Yorkshire and found the mechanics' institutions more prosperous, he thought, than in any other part of the country. He confessed that some years ago, before he was aware of the value of mechanics' institutes, he looked upon them with the greatest possible alarm, and the names of Brougham and Baines were as terrible to him as Gog and Magog to a Chinese. Little did he think at that time that the day would come when he should hear himself spoken of in words of kindness and high eulogium by those two gentlemen on the platform of the Halifax Mechanics' Institution. God speed mechanics' institutions. He liked very much the good sense contained in the report, and was glad there was none of the declamatory stuff about literature. The first consideration with the working man should be to get his family into good order, to have his wages right and correct, to pay his debts and have something to spare, and then come to the mechanics' institute and improve his mind to the utmost extent. He was delighted to hear that classes had been formed for women. He believed this was nearly peculiar to the mechanics' institute at Halifax, and it showed the greatest possible wisdom. It was a matter of vital importance that attention should be given to the education of women; in fact their proper training was a matter of deeper importance than the culture even of the men. Anything that made home attractive was of more value than the thousand Acts of Parliament to put down 10,000 possible evils. He next referred to the penny savings bank, designating it as one of the greatest discoveries of modern times; because if they estimated a discovery, not by its magnitude but beneficial influence on mankind, then these banks must be ranked among the greatest blessings enjoyed by the country. He might say that his visits to this part of the country during the last few days had been a source of the greatest gratification. He was astonished at the progress which had been made. He saw great mills on every side, and handsome residences; he heard of the greatest attention being manifested by the various classes towards each other, most satisfactory to one's feelings, calculated to allay all fears, and to fill the mind with hope; and when he looked on all this, he said with the psalmist, 'Peace be within your walls, and prosperity within your palaces.' But when he turned to these Yorkshire people themselves, he felt a satisfaction and joy which he could not express. Their honest faces, their rough, racy dialect, their hearty shake of the hand, made his heart bound within; and led him to thank God that he ever knew a Yorkshireman. He had not language to express what he felt when he recalled how they had turned to advantage every privilege given them in times gone by; and how, by the measure then granted them, they had shown that concessions to the people were capable of producing untold good. Often when engaged on that great question many persons in both Yorkshire and Lancashire said, 'Only let this measure be passed, and we will never give any annoyance to Government again.' They never had, and he would venture to say that in no part of her Majesty's dominions was there so much peace, loyalty, and affection to the Government as in the great counties of Lancashire and Yorkshire—and it was a source of infinite delight to see the amicable relationship existing between master and employed. When he went amongst the men he rejoiced to hear words of kindness come from the men to their masters; and when he went amongst the masters he heard the kindest expressions about the men. Wherever he went he found feelings of kindness and affection, and they all agreed that the measure which was passed a short time ago was doing great good to the men and no harm to the masters. This was a state of things which every Englishman must rejoice over, and every patriot feel assured by, and every Christian contemplate with gladness. Truly was it said a nation divided against itself cannot stand, and the converse must be equally true that a people of one mind and one heart shall, by the blessing of God never fall."

MR. WALTER, M.P., at a meeting of the East Berks Agricultural Society, at Maidenhead, made the following remarks on trade combinations and benefit societies:—

"They saw a most formidable struggle now in London of labourers in various classes against their employers. He thought that such organisations tended to encourage the idea that the labourer was not the servant of the master, but a sort of abstract quantity, and people began to feel that men were not bound to their masters by any tie of duty, respect, or obligation, but were as public servants, one man's to-day and another man's to-morrow, and might come to look to the people to maintain them, instead of looking to their masters for rewards. His opinion was that such a state of things was dangerous to encourage, and that it would lead to consequences which they could not but deplore. It must lead to the humiliation of the self-respect of one class or the other. In either case the result must be injurious. He hoped it would not be considered that he was wanting in endeavours to encourage the labourers. He believed that the true way to encourage the labourer was by improving his dwelling-place, by giving him a better cottage, by encouraging garden cultivation, by finding him proper schools; and he would mention another institution which might be made extremely useful to his encouragement—that was, by giving proper direction and tone to that common and much-abused institution, called the Benefit Society. From the report just published by the Registrar-General it would be found that the great majority of these institutions were no better than Drinking Clubs. He spoke from a knowledge of the subject and an investigation into the matter. He would say that, as a general rule, the majority of these clubs were no better than drinking clubs. He would give them some figures. Out of 27,000 societies of this kind registered since the constitution of them, nearly 7000 had become bankrupt. He was not decrying benefit societies. He had set one on foot in his own parish, but on the express condition that it should not be a drinking society. If they only considered for one moment the cost and expense which were entailed upon the labourers by the foolish and improvident manner in which these societies were conducted they would find that the labourers spent in a most useless manner ten times as much as was given to them by any agricultural association."

SIR RICHARD BETHELL M.P., the Attorney-General, at the inauguration of the winter session of the Wolverhampton Young Men's Christian Institute, spoke as follows on Christianity:—

"He heartily wished the time had come when all denominations would agree that there was ample field on their common Christianity on which to base a system of national education without the necessity of interfering in the smallest degree with particular feelings or tenets of belief, or peculiar forms of worship. There were undoubtedly in Christianity a variety of sects and denominations; but these were, he believed, permitted to exist for the wise purpose of awakening each other by generous rivalry and noble emulation. Yet, as far as they could, they were endeavouring to frustrate that end when they made the existence of these distinct denominations the reason why they should not concur in teaching the truths which were universally believed and accepted by all. Christianity was lifted above all other religions, past and present, to ensure even success in life. Apart from the virtues of temperance, industry, and sobriety, which it inculcated in common with other systems, Christianity had taught men that all misfortunes, all vicissitudes, had their objects, their particular end, and their beneficial influence on the mind, when regarded in a Christian spirit. Again, the great distinction between Christian and heathen morality consisted in this—that the Christian was taught to love his neighbour; his great rule of conduct was that of love and mutual affection—not looking for reciprocation in return, but pure, simple, mutual love and mutual benevolence. Looking back on his own life, he found that all the success which had attended his career was owing not to any particular ability, but in the great majority of instances to the benefit he had derived from a feeling in his favour whenever he had been fortunate enough to have it in his power to confer any advantage or any favour upon others. With respect to the studies of the members of the Institute, he would remark that there was a great advantage in studying history from a Christian point of view. They had all heard lately of the love of, and a desire for, peace which existed, and they all knew there could be no permanent prosperity without it; but the unfortunate thing was that children were educated from their earliest years in the love and glory of war, and to believe that the slaughtering of their fellow creatures constituted the acme of human reputation. They never heard the high appellation of hero applied to such men as Watt—to men who had been the benefactors of some great and important benefit to the whole human race, on the contrary, that title was exclusively reserved for those who had been most fortunate in exterminating, in murdering, and in destroying the greatest number of the human race. The world was now suffering from the fact that there existed in Europe unquiet spirits who believed that the greatest glory was to be found in a warlike reputation. He traced that in a great degree to the unfortunate circumstance that our histories, and the greater part of our poetry, had been written on that false principle, and that we dedicated so much of our time to the moral contemplation of the history of barbarous heathen nations, all of whom believed in war as a real source and fount of glory; and accordingly the youthful mind was brought up in the conviction that military glory, military reputation, military renown, were the surest passports to distinction, and the best means of having their names permanently preserved in the history of their country. It was very difficult, no doubt, to eradicate this feeling from the public mind; indeed, it could only be so eradicated by the erroneous impressions which history conveyed being corrected when history was taught and read in a Christian point of view."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

FUNERAL OF MR. ROBERT STEPHENSON, M.P.—The funeral of this eminent engineer took place yesterday, by permission of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in Westminster Abbey. The procession, which consisted of the hearse, 12 mourning coaches, and the private carriages of those officially present on the occasion, left Gloucester Square at half-past 10 o'clock, and proceeded by special permission of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge through Hyde Park, entering at Victoria Gate in the Bayswater Road, passing thence along the circular road by the Serpentine, and out by Apsley House. It then crossed to Grosvenor Place, and proceeded by Victoria Street to Dean's Yard, where it was met by the Dean, the dignitaries of the Abbey, and the past presidents, vice-presidents, and council of the Institution of Civil Engineers, attended by the secretary and assistant-secretary. The chief mourner was the nephew and heir of the deceased, Mr. George Robert Stephenson. The pall bearers were the Marquis of Chandos, Sir Roderick Murchison, Mr. G. C. Glyn, M.P., Mr. Chapman, of Whitby; Mr. Beale, M.P., and Mr. Joseph Locke, M.P. A long train of mourners, chiefly composed of men eminent in railway engineering or science, and the Mayors of several northern boroughs wearing their chains and robes, followed the coffin, and completely filled the space not occupied by the clergy and the choir. Nearly the whole of the service was chanted, the Dean reading the rest with deep feeling and emphasis. Admission to the Abbey was only obtained by tickets, upwards of 2000 of which were issued, and from a glance at the number of persons present there appeared to be little doubt that all who received tickets availed themselves of the privilege. The spot selected for the grave was very near the centre of the nave, and was situated between those of Mr. Telford, the constructor of the Menai Bridge, and Dr. Bell, the founder of the Madras system of education.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—At a meeting of the directors held on board the ship, at Holyhead, on Wednesday afternoon, the date of departure for America was postponed sine die, and orders were given that all money paid for passages to the United States should be returned. It is now almost certain that the ship will not cross the Atlantic this year. It is understood that she will remain at Holyhead about 10 days longer, and will then proceed to Southampton. Mr. William Patterson, of Bristol, the builder of the Great Western, Great Britain, Royal Charter, and other celebrated ocean steamers, was summoned by telegraph to Holyhead last week for the purpose of surveying the ship in conjunction with the representatives of the Board of Trade.

THE STRIKE IN THE BUILDING TRADE.—According to an official return issued by the Central Association of Master Builders, the total number of men who had resumed work under the declaration up to Saturday, the 15th inst., was 11,692; and the total number of men who have resumed in establishments adopting a shop-rule containing the spirit of the declaration is 2335.

THE FRANKLIN RELICS.—On Saturday the collection of relics of the Franklin expedition, brought home by Captain M'Clintock, was exhibited at a private view at the United Service Institution in Whitehall Yard; and arrangements will shortly be made for the admission of the public to see them under certain restrictions. The following is a correct list of the relics:—

Case 1. A dip circle and box, a sextant, part of telescope, found at Point Victory; bundle of common brimstone matches. Case 2. One ensign—found on King William Island. Case 3. Part of the rim of a strong copper case, one piece of iron hoop, two pieces of flat iron, one iron hook bolt, one piece of sheet copper—Nautical Island. The tie of a black silk handkerchief, belonging, it is supposed, to one of the stewards, and found with the skeleton; part of a blue waistcoat, cloth, with several silk buttons, piece of cotton shirt, coloured, silk covered buttons, cloth, and brush—found round a skeleton nine miles east of Cape Herschell. Case 4. Five watches, 11 silver spoons, seven forks—found in the boat. Case 5. One bead purse, one pocket compass, cover of Testament, two spectacle glasses, one tin case with spectacles, one part of scissors, and Government paper, soap, one snoodle line rolled in leather, part of grass cigar case, awl, clasp knife, one pair of goggles, one brass shot case, two brass hooks and strap, one brass hook, one forceps, one seal with Freemasons' arms, one piece of sealing wax, one gold band, one gold thread, cherry tree pipe stem, gimlet, table knives, pencil-case, German silver stopper of pocket flask; brass match-box, small tin cylinder, two medicine bottles full, piece of canvas—in the boat. Case 6. Water bottle and Royal Marine shako, plate, pair of goggles, palm gauze veil, piece of handkerchief, clay pipe bowl, boot lace, ball of worsted, housewives, pieces of copper—from the boat. Case 7. Shot cases, flannel, cartridge shot charges in kid gloves, percussion caps, stanchions, piece of canvas, blank cartridge, port fire, bristles, waxed thread, telescope glass, bullets, copper nails, shot, glove, knife cases, wood button—from the boat. Case 8. Books, pieces of covers, part of the "Vicar of Wakefield," cover of Family Prayer, part of Bible, part of Testament, ditto Bible, "Christian Melodies," two pieces, French Testament and covers, part of Testament, covers, part of covers, part of Bible, ditto, ditto, ditto, ditto—from the boat. Case 9. Knives made by natives, knife handles, files, and arrows. Case 10. Silver spoon, ditto forks, piece of gold watch chain, silver gilt ornamental work, five buttons, handle of dessert knife and part of razor, scraps of wood—found in a deserted snow hut. Case 11. Metal lid of powder case, two eye pieces of sextant tubes, bung stay, brass screw, part of pair of steel spectacles, bones of salt pork, six or eight packages of needles, two pike heads, two pieces of china (blue and white), the record case, a two-foot rule, one button, two joints of a cleaning rod of a gun, one piece of brass curtain rod. Case 12. Portable cooking apparatus, tea canister—found at Northern Cairn and Point Victory. On the table loose. Two fowling pieces loaded, three pieces of wood, three Esquimaux bows, the medicine chest, block and hoop pieces of canvas, one pemmican, one spear, one paddle.

THE MORTARA CASE.—The efforts of Sir Moses Montefiore and the deputies of the British Jews having proved ineffectual in obtaining the restoration of the child Mortara to its parents, the following protest has been drawn up and signed by several hundred noblemen and gentlemen, including the three archbishops, 19 bishops, 26 peers, 34 members of the House of Commons and other persons of rank and influence, and a copy of it forwarded to the French Ambassador:—

"Whereas a Jewish child, Edgar Mortara, son of Momolo Mortara, late of Bologna, in Italy, was, on the 24th June, 1858, forcibly seized and taken from his parents, by order of the Cardinal Viale Prela, Archbishop of Bologna and Legate of Pope Pius IX.: And whereas the ground of the said seizure was, that the said child Edgar Mortara, had been secretly baptised by a Roman Catholic maidservant six years previously, being then of the age of 12 months: And whereas the said child was, by order of the said Cardinal Legate, conveyed by night, under an escort of Gendarmes, to the Convent of San Pietro in Vincoli at Rome, and is there detained contrary to the wish, and notwithstanding the protestations of his parents: And whereas the Government of France has in vain urged the Court of Rome to restore the said child to his parents: And whereas Sir Moses Montefiore, Bart., at the request of the deputies of the British Jews, made on the 22d December, 1858, went to Rome in their name, to present a memorial to the Pope, signed by the whole of the said deputies, asking for the liberation of the said child Edgar Mortara; and whereas the Pope refused even to see Sir Moses Montefiore; and Cardinal Antonelli, Minister of State, has declared to Sir Moses Montefiore that the Roman Government will not release the child: and whereas it is a dishonour to Christianity in the eyes of the Jews among all nations that the seizure and detention of the said child, Edgar Mortara, should be supposed to be consistent with the principles of the Christian religion:—Now we, the undersigned British Christians, do hereby protest and declare that the proceedings of the Pope of Rome in taking away the Jewish child Edgar Mortara from his parents, and educating him, contrary to his parents' will, in the Roman Catholic faith, are repulsive to the instincts of humanity, and in violation of parental rights and authority, as recognised in the laws and usages of all civilised nations, and, above all, in direct opposition to the spirit and precepts of the Christian religion."

THE RELIGIOUS DISSENSIONS IN ST. GEORGE'S EAST.—At the Westminster Sessions yesterday, John Petersen was placed at the bar on an indictment charging him with inciting to riot in the Mission Chapel in Wellclose Square. The case had not proceeded far when the Assistant Judge recommended the withdrawal of the prosecution, and the suggestion was immediately acted upon.

EMBANKMENT OF THE THAMES.—At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works the following resolution was adopted on the motion of Mr. F. Doulton:

"That the consideration of the propriety of constructing a Thames embankment in conjunction with the low level sewer on the north side of the Thames be referred to the Main Drainage Committee, and that they be authorised to confer with her Majesty's Government on the mode in which the cost of such embankment might be defrayed, and with the Thames Conservancy Board and the Board of Admiralty."

LONDON MECHANICS' INSTITUTE.—It is announced that the efforts of the Donation Fund Committee have at length proved successful, and that the lease of the institution has been purchased for 3500*l.*; 2000*l.* have been collected and 1500*l.* borrowed on mortgage. The institution is thus relieved of the payment of the heavy annual rental of 200*l.*

NUISANCES ON BOW COMMON.—On Friday and Saturday Mr. Yardley was engaged for several hours each day at the Thames Police Court, in hearing evidence and the arguments of counsel and solicitors on a summons against Mr. Croll, of the Metropolitan Alum Works, Bow Common Lane, Bromley, for an alleged nuisance. The summons stated that in and upon the premises of Mr. Croll noxious gases were copiously evolved from the evaporating pits and ammoniacal liquor tanks, constituting a nuisance injurious to health. Mr. Croll was called upon to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to remove the nuisance and carry on his trade without being injurious to the health of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. The prosecution was instituted by the Poplar District Board of Works. The case has been several times before the court, and adjournments have taken place to enable Mr. Croll to carry on the scientific operation of converting ammoniacal liquor, the refuse of gas works, into alum in a less offensive manner. The nuisance was described some time ago as a fearful one, and much greater than all the other nuisances on Bow Common combined. Various alterations and improvements, suggested by the magistrate, who made a personal visit to the premises in July last; Dr. Ansell and Dr. Ellison, medical officers of health; Mr. Fulcher, sanitary inspector of the district; and by Mr. Croll himself, have been carried out. The parochial authorities and the inhabitants in the vicinity, however, contend that a nuisance still exists, and attended in large numbers both on Friday and Saturday to maintain that position. Dr. Ansell declared that the vapour from the alum-works had tarnished the brass taps in a public-house 200 yards off, and that he tracked the scent fully half a mile, to Mr. Croll's premises; and another professional witness said that he recognised the scent at 40 yards' distance from the establishment, followed it right into the works, and noticed the vapour itself ascending from the liquor-tanks—a "deleterious and fetid gas, dangerous both to health and comfort." Mr. Croll, on the other hand, brought forward scientific men of great eminence to prove that the process, as at present carried on, was not prejudicial to the health of the inhabitants, and that the noxious effluvia formerly complained of no longer existed. It was also contended that Bow Common was full of nuisances, including ammoniacal works, extensive chemical works, and manure establishments of all kinds, working up stale blood, fish, and night soil, and that the bad smells on the Common did not come from the alum-works only. Mr. Croll, it was said, had invested 20,000*l.* at least in an ingenious and useful process, and had expended large sums for the purpose of rendering the manufacture as inoffensive as possible. Mr. Yardley, in summing up the whole case, said the frequent discussions of it had been productive of much good. The question was now narrowed into this—was there a sufficient amount of sulphuretted hydrogen to injure health and be a nuisance? The importance of the case all must admit. He felt in a great degree the responsibility of disposing of cases of this public importance, and should feel more if he did not know there was an appeal open to either party to a superior court. It ought to be recollected that Mr. Croll, who was a man of great scientific attainments, was utilising an article hitherto worthless, the gas liquor, and converting it by an ingenious process into alum. These were valuable results from a liquor considered dangerous and useless before. He believed it was Mr. Croll's interest to convince his neighbours that he was anxious to carry on his works without being offensive. The Poplar Board of Works and their officers had done their duty, and if they did not like to adopt his judgment they could proceed to investigate the case before another court. He declined to make the order asked for and dismissed the summons, declining to make an order for costs.

THE WRECKS OF 1858.—The annual wreck register has just been published by the Board of Trade. It states that 1555 lives were rescued in 1858 by lifeboats, other boats, and ships, and by the rocket and mortar apparatus, and that out of 1895 lives in equal peril from shipwreck, 340 only were lost, the average number of lives lost during the past seven years, including the number in 1858, being 745. The number of wrecks was about the average, namely, 869, while the number of collisions was above the average of the last six or seven years—301. 172 vessels were lost from stress of weather, 58 from defects in ships or equipments, including charts and compasses; and 69 from various other causes more or less avoidable. 10,902 persons have been saved from shipwreck by lifeboats and other means since the establishment of the National Lifeboat Institution; 28,061*l.* have been expended by it on lifeboat establishments; and 11,651*l.*, besides gold and silver medals, for saving life, have been voted. Many new lifeboats are yet needed on the coast. On the coast of Scotland there is a sad want of lifeboats. Along that coast a large portion of our trade with the Baltic, Greenland, Archangel, Davis's Strait, and much of that with Canada and United States is carried on, while in addition to this traffic the Scotch coast is remarkable for its great herring fishery. Peterhead has 250 fishing-boats; Fraserburgh and Buckie more than 400; and further north, off the coast of Caithness, there are more than 1200 boats manned by 6000 persons. In consequence of the frequent calamities to these boats in recent years the National Lifeboat Institution has made an urgent appeal to the Scotch people generally for assistance to station additional lifeboats on their coast, but the appeal has met with little response. The following statement shows the loss of vessels on different parts of the coast:—East coast, Dungeness to Pentland Frith, 514; west coast, Land's End to Greenock, 304; south coast, Land's End to Dungeness, 89; Irish coast, 168; Scilly Islands, 14; Lundy Island, 15; Isle of Man, 6; Northern Isles, Orkney, &c., 60; total, 1170. A large number of the vessels lost were under 50 tons burden—199 out of the whole 1170; but the class of vessels whose tonnage is between 100 and 300 tons has suffered most, 467 vessels of the former having been lost; 352 vessels between 50 and 100 tons were also lost; 96 between 300 and 600; 28 between 600 and 900; 23 between 900 and 1200; and 5 above 1200.

THE LATE FIRE IN BUCKLERSBURY.—On Tuesday Mr. Serjeant Payne and a jury assembled in Guildhall, to inquire into the cause of a fire which had occurred at the Paraffin Light Company's premises, 19, Bucklersbury, on the night of the 7th inst. Evidence having been taken as to the origin and progress of the fire, and the nature of the paraffin oil, the jury returned a verdict that the fire was accidental, coupled with an expression of opinion that there was great neglect and a thorough absence of the necessary precautions, and that paraffin oil, when stored in such large quantities, is of a character dangerous to the immediate neighbourhood. Mr. T. Atkinson said the suggestion of the jury would be attended to, and that in future the company would only keep small quantities on the premises for immediate use.

FORGERIES AND FRAUDS.—A series of somewhat ingenious forgeries was brought to light at the London Joint-Stock Bank on Tuesday, by the presentation of four or five cheques for small amounts, which had been paid away to newspapers for advertising, the persons paying them making use of advertisements of well-known firms cut from other papers, and obtaining the difference between the charge for advertising and the amount of the cheque. Thus one of the cheques had been paid to the publisher of the Builder for two insertions of an advertisement of Messrs. Edwin Smith & Co., auctioneers; the cheque, which was drawn for 6*l.*, apparently bearing the signature of the firm, though Messrs. Smith do not keep an account at the bank. It appears that a few days since a written request was presented at the bank, as from a customer, for a small cheque-book, and as it was apparently in his handwriting, a book with 50 cheques was issued to the bearer of the note, and this book is now made use of for the purposes of fraud. The cheques however, not being drawn in the names of customers of the bank, can neither affect them nor the bank itself. Already four of these cheques are known to have been uttered, but in one case the change was not obtained, it having been presented in Birchin Lane, almost within a stone's throw of the bank itself. Sir James Duke, as one of the directors of the Bank, called at Guildhall on Tuesday, to give notice of this forgery, when Alderman Copeland, who was present, said it was extraordinary with what perseverance certain systems of fraud were carried on. It was only last year he was very successful in breaking up a very extensive gang of swindlers, whose principal trade was potatoes. He thought he had effectually put an end to the potato fraud; but he was mistaken, as a letter had recently been addressed to his bailiff at Stoke-upon-Trent, requesting him to send a sack of potatoes to Arthur Whittet & Co., 24, Manchester Street, King's Cross, with lowest price and quantity, promising, if the sample suited, to take a quantity and remit a receipt. Alderman Copeland said that on receipt of that letter he wrote for references, but the only answer he received was that cash would be paid on delivery, no notice whatever being taken about the question of reference. He sent his clerk to the address in the letter, and he there found several persons regaling themselves over their pipes with brandy and water, and he had no doubt dividing the plunder obtained from other parties. Had he not made these inquiries he should probably have had to reckon himself among the potato victims.

The Stepney Inquest.—The Bishop of London has caused formal notice to be served on the Rev. James Bonwell, incumbent of St. Philip's, Stepney, of his Lordship's intention to issue a commission under the provisions of the Church Discipline Act, for inquiring into the grounds of the scandal existing against him in reference to the recent inquest. The commission will be addressed to Dr. Twiss, the Vicar-General; Archdeacon Hale; Rev. Canon Dale, Vicar of St. Pancras; Rev. J. E. Kempe, Rector of St. James's, Westminster; and the Rev. W. G. Humphry, Vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's official report states that the number of deaths in the week which ended Saturday, October 15, was only 902. This return compared with the average number obtained from corresponding weeks in 10 previous years, raised in proportion to increase of population, is less than the estimated number by about 200, a result indicating that the present state of health in London is comparatively good. During the week the births of 822 boys and 805 girls, in all 1627 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1543.

Provincial.

Abingdon.—At the Berkshire quarter sessions on Tuesday the Earl of Abingdon moved that the resolution adopted at the January sessions for abolishing Abingdon Gaol and transferring the prisoners to the model prison at Reading be rescinded. Sir R. Throckmorton seconded the motion. The Hon E. Bouverie, M.P., said that they had not yet complied with the Act of Parliament in reference to the necessary resolution for selling the gaol, for though the notice of motion had been duly given at Easter, the motion itself had been overlooked at the Midsummer sessions. They could therefore at present do nothing with reference to closing the gaol. He therefore moved that a committee be appointed to inquire into the matter and report to a future session as to the best course to be adopted. After a long discussion the Earl of Abingdon withdrew his motion, and the amendment of Mr. Bouverie was made a substantive motion, and carried unanimously. The committee was arranged to consist of the chairman of each division of petty sessions in the county, so that each district might be fairly represented.

Berwick.—On Monday week a riot of a singular nature took place at Spittal, at the mouth of the Tweed. The night had set in so thick at sea that the fishermen, who compose the great majority of the inhabitants of the place, were unable to go out in their boats, and being unwilling to lose their time, the whole population, male and female, turned out and proceeded on a salmon poaching expedition in the Tweed. The river bailiffs interfered, and a conflict ensued between them and the fishermen, in which the latter were victorious, for they not only succeeded in driving the bailiffs away, but captured and sunk their boat. A scene of great confusion ensued, and order was not restored till a very late hour. Great difficulty will be experienced in recognising the ringleaders in the riot, for in order to escape detection, they had put on the dresses of their wives.

Bradford.—At the concluding General Meeting of the Social Science Association on Saturday, a report was read stating that the number of members at the meeting was 397, and the associates 645, transferable tickets 324, making a total of 1366. The number of papers read was 175—viz., in the Jurisprudence section, 22; Education, 38; Punishment and Reformation, 27; Public Health, 30; Social Economy, 50; the remaining 8 having been read at special meetings. The report further stated that an invitation having been received to hold their next meeting at Glasgow, the invitation had been accepted, and the next meeting would be held at Glasgow accordingly.

Cambridge.—At a meeting of the Town Council on Thursday week it was agreed, with one dissentient only, to present a petition in favour of the abolition of flogging in the army and navy.

Chatham.—After a considerable interval since the last instance of military flogging in this garrison, the punishment of the lash was again resorted to on Monday morning on a soldier named Norton, belonging to the Connaught Rangers, who has recently returned home wounded from India, and was attached to the Invalid Depôt, awaiting the order for his discharge from the service. The crime for which he was sentenced to this punishment was the serious military offence of striking a non-commissioned officer in the execution of his duty. The prisoner served with the Connaught Rangers in the Crimea, and is decorated with the Crimean medal with three clasps. He subsequently proceeded with his corps to India, and served during the Indian campaign against the rebels until invalided home, having received two wounds. On the evening of the 7th inst. he was walking through the streets of Chatham, when he saw Sergeant Gavin, 31st Regiment, belonging to the garrison military police, giving some directions respecting a disturbance with the military in one of the streets, when the prisoner, without having received the slightest provocation, deliberately walked up to the sergeant and struck him a violent blow with his fist before the whole of the men on guard, being under the impression that, as he was to be discharged from the invalid depôt on the following day, he should escape the consequences of his crime. He was, however, brought to trial by court-martial, when it was ascertained that his character since he had been in the service had been very bad, that he had been several times tried by court-martial for various offences, and had once before been flogged for assaulting a non-commissioned officer. The Court, under these circumstances, sentenced him to receive 50 lashes, and to be imprisoned for 168 days.

Chester.—A maniac called John Stubbs, who was some years back found concealed in Buckingham Palace with dangerous weapons, has escaped from Cheshire Lunatic Asylum, where he has been confined since the discovery of his settlement. It is stated that on Monday week, on hearing some one speaking of the Queen's visit to Bangor, he became fearfully excited, and made two desperate attempts to escape, which were frustrated. On Thursday night, however, he succeeded in breaking out of the asylum, and was traced as far as Upton, near Chester, but as yet has eluded capture.

Colchester.—On Thursday the 13th inst. a fire broke out in the kitchen of the sergeants' mess of the 9th Battalion, situated in the E range of huts. As the building was composed entirely of weather boarding the flames spread with such rapidity that several of the surrounding buildings were in great danger, and once or twice ignited. By the exertions however of the troops in camp the fire was confined to the kitchen, which was entirely destroyed.

Durham.—The scheme of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the re-endowment of the see of Durham with real estates has been approved and ratified by her Majesty in Council. By this plan the Bishop of Durham will, in right of his see, be put in possession in fee simple of real estate sufficient to secure him a clear annual income of the amount appointed by the 6th and 7th William IV., cap. 77, to be enjoyed by the Bishop of Durham and his successors, instead of deriving his income from annual money payments made by the Commissioners. Petitions to Parliament have been numerously signed in North Shields and other parts of South Northumberland, praying that any scheme brought forward by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the alienation of a portion of the revenues of the diocese to other dioceses should not be sanctioned until proper provision is made for the spiritual wants of the dense populations in the manufacturing, maritime, and mining districts of the county. The population of South Northumberland is very much on the increase, more especially in the Great Hartley steam coal field and on the shores of the Tyne; and a very inadequate provision is made from the revenues of the Church for the maintenance of religion in those parts.

Ely.—A considerable sum has been raised for the restoration of the octagon and lantern of Ely Cathedral as a memorial of the late Dean Peacock. Mr. G. G. Scott has prepared a design, the execution of which will involve an expenditure of 5000*l.* Towards this sum the Dean and Chapter of Ely have subscribed 1000*l.*; the Marquis of Bristol, 100*l.*; the present Dean, Dr. Goodwin, 100*l.*; Rev. Chancellor Sparke, 200*l.*; Rev. Canon Sparke, 200*l.*; Rev. Canon Selwyn, 100*l.*; Rev. Professor Thompson, 50*l.*; Mrs. Peacock, 100*l.*; Mr. L'Estrange, 100*l.*; Mr. Beresford Hope, 50*l.*; the Earl of Hardwicke, 25*l.*; Archdeacon Yorke, 25*l.*; Archdeacon Musgrave, 20*l.*; Lord Macaulay, 10*l.*; Mr. Selwyn, M.P., 50*l.*, &c. In all about 2500*l.* has been collected at present.

Exeter.—A vigorous church-rate contest has recently been carried on in the parish of St. Sidwell's, and ended in the refusal of the rate by a majority of 6, the numbers being—for the rate, 384; against, 390. The Bishop of Exeter has lately sanctioned the establishment of a community of women desirous of devoting themselves exclusively to works of piety and charity under the name of "Sisters of Charity" or "Deaconesses." No perpetual vows are to be taken. A period of probation will first have to be passed, during which it will be allowable to leave at any time. After this an engagement to the society will be made for a period not exceeding five years, renewable at the expiration of that term. The new society is to be established in the vicarage of Buckland Monachorum, near Tavistock, till its growth has enabled it to obtain suitable premises of its own.

Eynsham.—The Commission appointed by the Bishop of Oxford to inquire into the allegations made by the churchwardens of this parish against the vicar gave judgment on Friday, to the effect that there was not sufficient primâ facie ground for instituting proceedings against the Rev. W. S. Bricknell, so far as respects his having read the prayers in the pulpit instead of the reading-desk, inasmuch as he had proved his desire to resume the use of the reading-desk as soon as the adjacent walls, lately erected, should cease to emit dampness. Also that there was not sufficient ground for instituting proceedings against him, for having permitted the reading-desk to be desecrated by a number of bricks placed there, inasmuch as they were intended to prevent the chafing dish, used for drying the place, from injuring the wood of the desk, and moreover that it was the duty of the churchwardens to see that the bricks were removed. But the Commissioners expressed their unanimous opinion that there were sufficient grounds for instituting proceedings against the vicar for reading the Communion service from the pulpit, instead of from the north side of the Communion table, in contumacious disregard of the admonition and order delivered to him by the Bishop. His lordship has since given a decision on the report of the Commissioners, from which the following are extracts:—

"On the subject of the first two charges—on which you are substantially acquitted—I need only say that I strongly advise the adoption of the Archdeacon's recommendation, that the reading-desk be advanced further from the wall, the dampness of which has prevented your using the desk. As to the remaining charges, I am glad to find that on the Sundays on which the Lord's Supper is actually administered, the whole Communion service is read from the appointed place; and further, from your own evidence, that this has been your ordinary custom since your ordination, only interrupted at Eynsham from your wish to be made perfectly audible. After the examination of the whole matter by four able and impartial commissioners, and with their conclusion that there is in the conformation of your church no sufficient reason to neglect the rubrical injunction, you will, I trust, see it to be your duty to give a full and fair trial of your power of making yourself audible from the Communion table every Sunday. Should your parishioners generally find, upon that trial, that the great object of their hearing the service is defeated, you will find me ready to leave you, as in very special cases I have left others, to use your own discretion in the matter."

Holyhead.—On Wednesday evening the directors of the London and North-Western Railway Company gave a grand banquet at Holyhead to the directors of the Great Ship Company and a large party of invited guests, to celebrate the arrival of the Great Eastern steam-ship at that port. The entertainment took place in a pavilion erected in the garden at the rear of the Royal Hotel, accommodation being afforded for about 150 guests. The company arrived at Holyhead early on Wednesday, and most of them availed themselves in the course of the day of the invitation of the directors to view the great ship, for which purpose a special steamer was provided. The banquet was presided over by the Marquis of Chandos, and speeches were delivered by the Bishop of Bangor; Mr. Campbell, chairman of the Great Eastern Company; Sir John Pakington; the Chancellor of the Exchequer; Mr. Hinckes, Governor of Barbadoes; the Hon. Mr. Ross, President of the Executive Council of Canada; Capt. Harrison; the Hon. W. O. Stanley, M.P.; Lord Clarence Paget, Secretary to the Admiralty, and Sir Richard Bulkeley, M.P.

Kingston.—On Thursday week a man called Fulker, a wheelwright, 27 years of age, was found dead in the back yard of the premises in which he worked. There were several wounds upon his forehead, inflicted apparently by an axe, which was lying near him; and there was also a punctured wound in the stomach, 3 inches in depth, caused by a chisel, which, as well as a wooden mallet, was also lying near the body. The axe and mallet were stained with blood, and portions of human hair adhered to them. The injuries were of such a peculiar character as at first almost to preclude the idea of their having been inflicted by the deceased, but the evidence at the inquest on Saturday left no doubt that he had been for some time in a desponding state and that he had inflicted all the wounds upon himself. The jury returned a verdict of Temporary Insanity.

Liverpool.—A rather numerous party of cotton buyers sailed for New York on Tuesday in the Persia, to concert measures with the most respectable houses in the United States for putting an end to the system of adulterating that article, which has of late years been resorted to upon a constantly increasing scale. Sand is the ingredient chiefly used, and New Orleans is said to have disgraced itself more than any other port. It appears that the adulteration is from 30 to 50 per cent. on the weight of the bales.

Mansfield.—It is reported that Newstead Abbey, the residence of the late Colonel Wildman, together with the estate, exceeding 3000 acres in extent, will shortly be brought to the hammer in one lot. The late owner purchased the estate in 1818 for 94,000*l.*, and since that period expended very large sums of money in improving it, so that independent of the great increase which has taken place in the value of landed property during the last few years, there is every reason to expect that it will fetch a very high price.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The celebrated Walls-end coal field on the Tyne, from which the main supply of household coal to the metropolis was formerly derived, has to a considerable extent become exhausted, and a large supply of what is known as best Walls-end is now sent from the Wear. The pits at Walls-end, Willington, and Percy Main, on the Northumberland side of the Tyne, and at Jarrow and Hebburn, on the Durham side, are closed, most of them having been drained out by water. On Saturday week Gosforth and Coxlodge collieries, in the Walls-end district, were offered for sale by auction in this town by order of the Court of Chancery. Gosforth was first put up, the price fixed being 16,000*l.*, the valuation named in the prospectus. It appears that the household coal in this colliery is nearly exhausted, the quantity remaining being estimated to last only a year or two. The pit is, however, valuable on account of its proximity to other important collieries in the neighbourhood, such as Killingworth, where the same seam of coal is working at a great angle to the dip—and adjoining the great main dyke—which in Gosforth Colliery is worked to the rise. For Coxlodge Colliery, Mr. Bower, of Leeds, offered 20,000*l.*; but, as this was below the sum named by the Court of Chancery, the colliery was withdrawn. A private negotiation then commenced in an adjoining room, and it was afterwards announced that Mr. Bower had become the purchaser.

NORTH TAWTON.—A few days since six children belonging to different families in this town were poisoned by eating coloured sweetmeats, called birds' nests, which they had purchased during the recent fair of a confectioner called Ryan. One of the children narrowly escaped death, and the lives of the others were probably saved by the copious vomiting which the sweetmeats produced. On inquiry the police ascertained that Ryan had purchased the articles of a confectioner called Sherry, of St. Thomas, near Exeter; and a large quantity of colouring matter called "smalts" and "chrome" was found at Sherry's shop. On Tuesday Sherry was charged before the Exeter magistrates with having unlawfully sold sweetmeats containing poison "with intent to cause bodily injury to her Majesty's subjects," and was remanded in order that an analysis might be made.

NORWICH.—Efforts appear to be making to promote a religious revival in the eastern counties. Special prayer meetings have been held at Chelmsford and Bury St. Edmund's; and St. Andrew's Hall in this city has also been the scene of a similar gathering.

OXFORD.—The ceremony of consecrating the new chapel of Exeter College took place on Tuesday. There was a large gathering of persons connected in different ways with the College, among whom were the Bishops of Exeter and Oxford, Sir John Coleridge, the Regius Professor of Divinity, the Principal of Magdalen Hall, Dr. Sewell, the Rev. Ernest Hawkins, Archdeacon Hony, Mr. Gilbert Scott the architect, and between 200 and 300 others. The services commenced at 10 o'clock, when the consecration service and morning prayers were read. At 12 the holy communion was administered, and a sermon preached by the Bishop of Oxford. At 3 o'clock there was a collation in the College Hall, after which several toasts were given and speeches made. Those delivered by the Bishop of Exeter, Visitor of the College, the Bishop of Oxford, Sir John Coleridge, and the Rector of the College were vehemently applauded. The ceremonies of the day concluded with the evening prayers, when a sermon was preached by Dr. Sewell, Warden of Radley and Fellow of the College. The appearance of the chapel was very magnificent, and it will certainly add to the already high fame of the architect, Mr. Scott. Nothing can exceed the beauty of the stone carving, and the ornamental work in wood and iron was much admired by all. At present there are only three painted windows, one in memory of the late rector, two others in memory of two former fellows. These windows are extremely beautiful, and were painted by Clayton and Bell.

READING.—The new fair recently held in this town for the sale of hops was attended by growers from Surrey, Kent, Hampshire, and other districts; the quantity of hops on sale numbering between 1000 and 1500 pockets. At the close of the fair, the mayor of the town thanked the growers and merchants for supporting it, and the merchants agreed to a vote of thanks to the corporation for the accommodation afforded. The London merchants are said to have been particularly satisfied with the result of the fair, and the leading men declared their intention of supporting it.

RIPON.—The Bishop of Ripon has addressed a pastoral letter to the parochial clergy in his diocess, suggesting that to-morrow, the 23d inst., be regarded as a day of special thanksgiving throughout the diocess for the late harvest.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The new Military Hospital at Netley is rapidly approaching completion. The structure occupies 10 acres of ground, is nearly a quarter of a mile in length, as large as the Crystal Palace, and six times as large as Guy's Hospital. The building is in the decorated Italian style, four stories high, 216 feet wide, with a dome-shaped campanile rising above it to the height of 150 feet, and two main wings, each of three stories, 600 feet long and 70 feet high; each floor or story having 12 wards, 10 of which are intended to accommodate 9 and two of them 16 patients. The sum of 200,000*l.* has already been expended in the construction of this hospital, and it is expected that as much more will be required to finish the undertaking and lay out the 193 acres of ground attached to it with gardens and terraces for the use of the patients. The hospital when complete will accommodate between 1000 and 2000 patients, and will surpass in all respects any other institution of the kind in the world.

STAFFORD.—On Monday Sandon Hall in this county, the seat of the Earl of Harrowby, was the scene of a very interesting event. A gold medal, struck at the suggestion of Prince Adam Czartoryski, by a national subscription raised in Poland and among the Polish refugees in honour of the late Lord Dudley Stuart, the well-known champion of the Polish cause, was presented to Lord Harrowby by a deputation from the Polish Association. The medal was originally intended for the Countess of Harrowby, the sister of Lord Dudley Stuart, but in consequence of her recent death, it was presented to her husband. The presentation took place in the part of the Hall called "The Polish Vestibule," which is ornamented with the tapestry presented by the ladies of Poland to Lord Dudley Stuart, by various other reminiscences of Polish gratitude, the bust of Prince Czartoryski, and the portraits of other illustrious Polish patriots.

STAPLEHURST.—A few days ago a family named Penfold, consisting of a man and wife and six children, living in this neighbourhood, were taken suddenly ill. A medical man was called in, but was unable to relieve them, and one child died, then a second, and a third, and subsequently the mother. The husband and the other children were then removed to the union, and have since been gradually recovering. The wife of a man named Cook residing in the next house was also taken ill, and as it was thought that the disease was infectious, Cook's family were removed from the house, which was thoroughly cleansed. They then returned, when the family were again taken suddenly ill, with symptoms similar to those observed in the case of the Penfolds. On inquiries being made it was found that the water used for cooking had been taken from a tub at the back door of the two houses, which had previously been used for sheep-dipping composition and had impregnated the water, thus causing the death of four persons, and placing in jeopardy the lives of several others.

STOCKPORT.—The advowson of Stockport, which has long been in the market without a buyer, has been purchased from Lord Vernon by Mr. Stephen Symonds, of the firm of Symonds, Cunliffe, & Co., calico printers, of Handforth. It includes the perpetual right of presentation to the rectory of St. Mary's, valued at 1400*l.* per annum; the rectory of St. Thomas's, valued at 830*l.* per annum; Chadkirk Chapel, valued at 100*l.* per annum; St. John's, Dukinfield, valued at 320*l.* per annum; St. George's, Hyde, valued at 200*l.* per annum; and Marple, valued at 150*l.* per annum; making a total of 3000*l.* per annum. The purchase money is said to have been about 12,000*l.* It is understood that the rectory of St. Mary's is intended for one of Mr. Symonds's three sons, at the death of the present rector.

WEST BROMWICH.—The convict Worsey, who was condemned to death at the last assizes for the murder of his wife in this town, was removed last week from the county gaol to Millbank Prison, where he will undergo the commuted sentence of penal servitude for life.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—A fortnight ago a young man, named George Kilby, a screw-wrench maker, residing and working in a court off Brickkiln Street, in this town, was found dead in his workshop about midday, under extraordinary circumstances. The body was lying across the shop, with the head pushed under the work-bench into a box half full of iron filings, the neck pressed upon the sharp end of the box, and the hands in the trousers' pockets. At the inquest held on the body evidence was adduced which went to show that deceased, who was a very sober and religious young man, had for a long time been cruelly ill-treated by the father. Great excitement was created in the neighbourhood, and the neighbours were unanimous in attributing the death of the youth to his father. The post mortem examination showed that death had been caused by suffocation from the pressure of the throat upon the edge of the filing box. The jury were, however, dissatisfied, and the inquest was thrice adjourned, in order to enable the police to make further inquiries. The fourth sitting took place on Monday, when several new witnesses having deposed to the cruelty with which the young man was treated, the jury found the father guilty of Wilful Murder, and he was committed for trial. The prisoner and his wife have a very respectable appearance for people of their station in life, which is that of a small manufacturer.

WORCESTER.—All doubts as to the fate of Mrs. Harris, who was supposed to have been drowned in the Severn with her two children, have been removed by the discovery of her body about a mile below Worcester. The body of the infant has not yet been found.

YARMOUTH.—At the annual dinner given by the Mayor of this town last week one of the guests was Captain Lemosey, of the French aviso Galilee, now lying off the coast. One of the toasts proposed by the Mayor was the health of the Emperor Napoleon III., and Captain Lemosey, in responding to the toast, reciprocated the desire expressed that England and France might long remain united. The two nations were in close alliance during the Russian war, and he was glad there was as good a prospect of their being united in the Chinese war. For his own part he could see no reason for hatred, but on the contrary many for friendship. The captain's observations were warmly applauded, and were endorsed by Mr. Howes, M.P., Sir E. Lacon, M.P., and Sir H. J. Stracey, M.P., who afterwards addressed the company. The latter baronet said that an adequate force had not been sent up the Pei-ho on the occasion of the late disaster in that river, and he hoped that in the new alliance with France, of which he was glad to hear the French officer speak so warmly, a well-organised expedition would be despatched.

THE LORD LIEUTENANT ON THE EDUCATION QUESTION.—At a meeting of the Senate of the Queen's University held on Friday in St. Patrick's Hall, Dublin Castle, for the purpose of conferring degrees, the Earl of Carlisle made the following remarks on mixed education:—

"I learn with increasing pleasure that the proportion of different religious communions among the students at the colleges continues to be what it might be expected and wished. The Vice-Chancellor has himself entered upon the general and most important considerations connected with this [illegible]. Thoroughly unwilling as I should be to introduce into the precincts, usually set apart to social festivity, at this moment to the furtherance of polite, useful, and liberal learning, any subject or any syllable that could tend to excite dissension or promote discord, yet there are periods when a frank avowal of opinion is due from any seat of authority or centre of influence. I do, then, continue to think it most desirable that in our great imperial community, where its citizens are to play united parts, and discharge united functions—in short, an united life—the preparation for it should be united and learned in an united education. Such, surely, should be the case with respect to the trades and professions which are to build up and perpetuate our united wealth—to the sciences which are to mould our united wisdom—to the arts which are to constitute our united enjoyment. I feel profoundly, at the same time, that all that we gather under the name of religion is of so paramount, so subtle, so ethereal a nature, that it can properly require to be imparted as something at once separate and separate, which may repel all interference foreign to it, and be communicated by no organs and ministrations but those exclusively and distinctly its own. While I, therefore, earnestly but wish that the education which is general and that which is secular should be united, I as readily admit that what is expressly religious and mainly spiritual should be separate. I will yield to none in respectful deference to the clergy of the respective communions in their appropriate spheres; but assuredly to none whatever of them can I ever—either in public or private capacity—concede the right of denying to the laity, of which I am myself a member, the full power of acting upon the decisions of their own conscience, and of regulating the education of their own children. I have never closed my observations I have been called upon to make on these occasions without specially addressing a few short words to the young persons I see before me. You are the main actors and principal objects in the proceedings which will here terminate. As to all the elders here assembled, myself amongst the number, we must feel that the pursuits in which we are severally engaged, and the cares which occupy us, are mainly carried on in behalf of the generation which is to follow us. Your presence here witnesses that your careers hitherto have attained a certain amount of success; let your subsequent careers exhibit a diligent pursuit of excellence in your several spheres of action, an honest desire to apply your own faculties and opportunities to the benefit of your fellow men, a pervading consecration of your lives to the God who gave them. We introduce you into a splendid arena—the service of your and noble country: may you live to see it, may you contribute to make it yet greater, nobler, worthier than you found it."

MEETING OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRELATES.—A second conference of the Roman Catholic bishops commenced its sittings on Wednesday, and continued in deliberation until an advanced hour in the day. It is understood that the prelates were engaged in discussing the affairs of the Irish College at Paris and of the "Catholic" University of Ireland. They resumed their deliberations on Thursday.

DR. M'HALE AND LORD PALMERSTON.—Dr. M'Hale has addressed a letter to Lord Palmerston, in which he says that the Roman Catholics of Ireland revere the Roman Pontiff "as the successor of St. Peter, and the Vicar of Christ on earth, and will therefore show themselves ready not only to defend his spiritual authority over the entire world, but likewise to assert his temporal as well as his spiritual power throughout the range of his own dominions. They look upon that temporal power, full, entire, and uncontrolled, to be essential to the free exercise of his spiritual authority; nor shall they ever be content to see the Holy Father placed in a subordinate and dependent position that could create a suspicion that his acts for regulating the spiritual interests of the church might be elicited or controlled by the preponderating influence of France, or Germany, or Naples, or any other secular power."

STATUE TO GENERAL NEILL.—The inauguration of the statue in honour of the late Brigadier Neill took place on the 11th inst. in Wellington Square, Ayr, in the presence of the Earl of Eglinton, Viscount Ingestre, Major Gordon, aide-de-camp to General Neill, and other distinguished persons. The figure is of colossal size, 10 feet high, and stands upon a pedestal of Peterhead granite 12 feet high.

THE EDINBURGH ANNUITY TAX.—Orders have been issued by the Crown Office for the apprehension of several of the parties who assaulted the sheriff's officers in the collection of the annuity tax on the 17th ult. On Saturday week the city officers, aided by the police, made another attempt to arrest Mr. Hunter the confectioner for non-payment of the tax. Mr. Hunter was absent at the time, but Peacock, his foreman, was taken into custody and conveyed to the office of the Procurator Fiscal, where he was afterwards liberated on finding bail for 30*l.* The charge against Mr. Hunter and his foreman is that of assault and deforcement of officers in the execution of their duty.

THE SCOTCH BAKERS AND SUNDAY WORK.—Some of the master bakers of Arbroath have published a declaration that no work shall in future be done in their premises on the Lord's Day, and have made an earnest appeal to the Christian community of the town to neighbourhood "that they will not tempt them to depart from this resolution by requiring new bread too early in the week."

WRECK OF A STEAMER.—On Saturday week during a dense fog the Duke of Richmond steamer, while on her passage from Caithness to Aberdeen, went on shore 4 miles to the northward of the latter port, and has since become a total wreck. No lives were lost.

THE CHOLERA AT WICK.—The John o'Groat Journal states that since Wednesday, the 12th inst., there have been six deaths on the Wick side of the river, and that there are two serious cases in Pulteney Town. The total number of deaths since the appearance of the disease is 21.

ACCIDENT ON THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN.—On Thursday evening the 13th, as the London train was shunting into the Oxford station, the pin which secures the screw of the points over which it was passing suddenly broke, and three of the carriages were consequently thrown off the rails and fell on their side with a great crash. The passengers were got out of the carriages as speedily as possible, but no one was very seriously injured, and most of them were able to walk away from the station.

ACCIDENT ON THE MIDLAND.—A collision took place on the 12th inst. near the Sheffield station, by the passenger train running into a siding. Alderman John Maw, of Doncaster, one of the injured passengers, died on Friday evening, and the Rev. J. A. Moon, of Stannington, is in a precarious state from concussion of the brain. Robt. Wilcockson, the pointsman, has been apprehended on a charge of causing the accident by neglect.

Obituary.

GENERAL THE EARL OF WESTMORELAND, G.C.B., G.C.H., Colonel of the 56th Regiment, died on Sunday evening at Apthorpe House, Northamptonshire, after a short illness, in his 76th year. His lordship, John Fane, 11th Earl of Westmorland and Baron Burghersh, in the peerage of England, was only son of the 10th Earl, by his first marriage with the only daughter and heir of Mr Robert Child, the opulent banker of Fleet Street. He was born in 1784, and married in 1811 the youngest daughter of the third Earl of Mornington, by whom he leaves two sons and a daughter. His lordship eminently distinguished himself both in the military and diplomatic services for more than half a century. He entered the army in 1803, and became Captain in the 23d Welsh Fusiliers in 1805, when he was appointed Aide-de-Camp to General Don on the expedition to Hanover. In 1806 and 1807 he served in Sicily as Assistant-Adjutant-General, and during his employment in the Mediterranean accompanied Admiral Duckworth's fleet, and was present in the action of the passage of the Dardanelles and the destruction of the Turkish fleet, the actions before Constantinople, at the island of Prota, and at the repassage of the fleet through the Dardanelles. His lordship afterwards served in Egypt under General Wauchope, as Assistant-Adjutant-General, and took part at the first storming of Rosetta, in the retreat, and subsequently in the second attack and siege of that place with the force commanded by General Stewart. In 1808 he joined the army in Portugal as Assistant-Adjutant-General in the army commanded by Sir Arthur Wellesley, and was present at the battles of Roleia and Vimiera. In the following year he acted as extra aide-de-camp to Lord Wellington, and was present at the battle of Talavera. In 1810 he served with the 3d Dragoon Guards in the campaign in Portugal, including the retreat to Torres Vedras, battle of Busaco, and advance to Santarem. In 1813 he proceeded to the head-quarters of the allied armies, under Prince Schwarzenberg, in Germany, accredited as Military Commissioner. He served at the siege of Huninguen, and the campaign of 1814 in France, including the taking of Langres, and the battles of La Rothière and Brienne, capture of Troyes, affairs of Morman and Nangis, in front of Bray, defence of Troyes when attacked by Bonaparte, the battle of Bar-sur-Aube, the subsequent affair upon the Barce, recapture of Troyes, battles of Arcis-sur-Aube and of Fere Champenoise, the advance upon, battle, and capture of Paris. In 1814 he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Florence, and served with the Austrian army in the campaign against Naples in 1815, including the battles of Tolentino and Macerata, and signed, in conjunction with Marshal Bianchi, the Convention of Caza Lanza, by which the kingdom of Naples was restored to its legitimate sovereign. He was appointed a Privy Councillor in 1822, and in 1827 he went on a special mission to the Court of Naples to congratulate Francis I. on his accession to the throne. When the late Sir Robert Peel came into office, in 1841, his lordship was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Berlin, where he continued resident Minister till 1851, when he was transferred to Vienna. During his residence at Berlin he acted as mediator between the Danish and Prussian plenipotentiaries in the Schleswig-Holstein affair, and signed with them the treaty of peace between Prussia and Denmark in 1850. During his residence as Minister at Vienna he was unremittingly engaged in the negotiations connected with the Turkish question, and was one of the special plenipotentiaries at the conferences of 1855. In November of the same year he retired on his diplomatic pension, but in the following autumn he was appointed to convey her Majesty's congratulations to the King of the Belgians on the 25th anniversary of his accession to the throne, on which occasion King Leopold conferred on him, by a Royal decree, the Grand Cross of the Order of Leopold, but he did not obtain the Queen's permission to wear it, as it was not given for military services. In 1846, his lordship was nominated a Grand Cross of the Bath, having previously been made a Knight Commander of the order. He was also a Knight Grand Cross of the Guelphic Order of Hanover; Grand Cross of the Red Eagle of Prussia; Henri le Lion of Brunswick; St. Ferdinand and St. Januarius of Naples, and San Joseph of Tuscany; and Knight of Maria Theresa of Austria. His lordship is succeeded in the title and estates by his eldest surviving son, Lieut.-Colonel Lord Burghersh, formerly aide de camp to Lord Hardinge in the Punjaub, and to Lord Raglan in the Crimea, who was born in 1825, and married the second daughter of the Earl Howe.

THE HON JOHN WILLIAM FORTESCUE died at Camacha, Madeira, on the 25th ult., after a long illness, in his 40th year. He was the second son of Earl Fortescue, by his first marriage with Lady Susan Ryder, eldest daughter of the late Earl of Harrowby. He was for some years in the 7th Regiment of Fusiliers, and was for a time aide-de-camp to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. In 1845 he was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the East Devon Militia, but he resigned the following year, from different health. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Devon, and represented Barnstaple from 1847 to 1852.

SIR THOMAS TASSELL GRANT, K.C.B. and F.R.S., late Controller of the Victualling and Transport Service in the Admiralty, died on the 15th inst. at his residence, Chester Terrace, Regent's Park, aged 64. He entered the civil service at the Admiralty 47 years ago, and after passing through several grades was in 1838 appointed superintendent at the Clarence Victualling Yard, Gosport. While holding that office he applied his mind to several much-needed improvements in connection with the naval service. In 1839 he devised the steam machinery for the manufacture of biscuit, which has been generally adopted in Government establishments and has effected a saving to the country of £40,000 a year. In recognition of the value of this invention the sum of £5000 was voted by Parliament, and medals presented to him by the King of the French and the Society of Arts. He afterwards constructed a new hide-roy, a feathering paddle wheel, and the patent fuel which bears his name, and which is largely used in the steam marine. As far back as 1834 he proposed a plan of distilling fresh water from the sea; but it was only 10 or 12 years ago that the authorities became alive to the importance of the invention, which he had by that time perfected. The apparatus for effecting this purpose is either connected with the ordinary ship's galley, or (in the case of a steam-vessel) with the boilers of the ship. By this invention the sanitary and moral condition of the navy has been greatly advanced, and it has been described as the greatest benefit ever conferred on the sailor. In 1850 he was appointed Controller of the Victualling and Transport service, which office he held during the Crimean war, when the value of his invention was severely tested. Under the unexampled pressure cast by the war on his department his health gave way, and early last year he was obliged to relinquish his post, when her Majesty conferred upon him the distinction of K.C.B.

MR. FREDERIC CAVENDISH CHARLES CASTLE NORTON, attaché to the English Embassy at Paris, eldest son of the Hon. George and Mrs. Norton, died at his lodgings in Paris on the 14th inst. Mr. Norton entered the diplomatic service in 1847 as attaché to the Legation at Lisbon. He was afterwards attached to the Legations of Naples and Brussels, and in 1851 was appointed second paid attaché at Paris. He had been for some months in a very weak state of health, and had just attained his 30th year.

MAJOR-GENERAL TOWERS died on the 13th inst. at Catlodge, Inverness-shire, in his 63d year, after many years of suffering. He entered the army as a cornet in the 7th Hussars in 1813, and served in that distinguished corps during the Waterloo campaign. He was placed on half-pay in August, 1816, and attained the rank of Major-General in 1858.

REAR-ADMIRAL HOLT died on the 9th inst. at 2, Suffolk Place, aged 69 years. He was midshipman of the Minerva, and served in her boats at the capture of two gun boats on the coast of Spain, in 1806, for which he was gazetted. He served also in the Surveillante, and commanded a rocket boat at Copenhagen in 1807. He became a Lieutenant in 1810, and participated in a variety of services in the Mediterranean. He was present in the San Josef at the capture of Genoa in 1814; was senior lieutenant of the Hussar, and severely wounded while in action, in the boats of that ship, with a horde of pirates on the coast of Cuba in 1824, for which he was promoted to the rank of commander. He became captain in 1838, and rear-admiral on the reserved half-pay list in 1857.

COLONEL NEILL, Deputy-Adjutant-General of Victoria, was killed at Melbourne by a fall from his horse on the 10th of July. He was the second and only surviving son of the late Lieut.-Colonel Smith Neill, of Barnwell and Swindridgemuir, Ayrshire. He entered the army in 1823, and served with the 40th Foot throughout the operations in Candahar and Affghanistan in 1841 and 1842, for which he received a medal. He became a colonel in 1858, and was appointed deputy-adjutant-general in Australia in 1855.

WILLS.—The will of Earl Cathcart, G.C.B., has been sworn under 5000*l.* personalty in the United Kingdom; the Hon J. G. C. Fox-Strangways, of Brickworth House, Wilts, 20,000*l.*; Mr. Brunel, C.E., 90,000*l.*

Miscellaneous.

COOKING FOR THE ARMY.—Some interesting experiments have recently been made at Woolwich, and in Hyde Park, for the purpose of testing the efficiency of a travelling cooking apparatus, invented by Captain Grant, of the Royal Engineers. The object of the invention is to supply an amount of food cooked by the various processes of baking, stewing, steaming, &c., to an army in the field, and under circumstances when it would be impossible to supply rations by the ordinary means. For the purpose of practically testing the invention the batteries of garrison and field artillery, numbering about 1200 non-commissioned officers and men, were recently marched to Dartford Heath, accompanied by the band of the Royal Artillery, a baggage train, and several waggons fitted with Captain Grant's apparatus. On arriving at the heath a large number of military tents were pitched, and shortly afterwards the whole of the troops were served out with rations, consisting of baked meats, soups, vegetables, &c., which were cooked in an excellent manner by means of Captain Grant's invention. The apparatus is fixed to an ordinary four-wheeled ordnance waggon, which is drawn by two or more horses, as circumstances may require, and the operation of cooking is carried on during transit. A furnace at the extreme end of the apparatus heats the water of a boiler, the steam from which is the power which performs the various modes of cooking—by means of communicating with the various compartments—consisting of oven, stewpans, &c., and a large steamer affixed to the top of the oven for the purpose of cooking vegetables. Each apparatus is calculated to provide food for about 200 men, with a very small amount of fuel. The boiler contains about 120 gallons of water, and the steam is got up in about 10 minutes, proving satisfactorily that an army in the field may be supplied with proper rations even during the most rapid march. A separate apparatus on the same principle, but constructed only for making soup, was also tested with success.

BIRTHS.—On the 14th inst. at Cumberland Lodge, Old Windsor, the Countess of MOUNT CHARLES, of a daughter—14th inst. at Laverstoke House, Hants, the Lady CHARLOTTE PORTAL, of a daughter—17th inst. at 6, Portland Place, Lady LAURA PALMER, of a son—20th Aug., at Camoodpore, East Indies, the Hon. METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Oct. 17.

There is a considerable increase in the supply of Beasts, but trade is about as good as on Monday last. Some inferior descriptions do not meet with quite so ready a sale. The number of Sheep is not much larger, and late prices are fully supported. Good Calves are rather dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 1340 Beasts, 5650 Sheep, and 70 Calves; from Scotland, 100 Beasts; from Ireland, 600; and 2800 from the northern and midland counties.

THURSDAY, Oct. 20.

Our trade to-day is by no means brisk for Beasts, although we cannot quote lower rates. Good Sheep are scarce, and Monday's prices are fully maintained. In a few instances a slight advance has been realised. Calves are in demand, and on the average dearer. Our foreign supply consists of 80 Beasts, 740 Sheep, and 56 Calves. The number of Milch Cows is 119.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 17.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small; the bulk of it being of very poor quality its value is unaltered from this day se'nnight, and a tolerable clearance was effected. The attendance was not large, and having a considerable arrival of foreign Wheat (much of which went to the millers direct) the demand was restricted, and in the little business transacted the extreme rates of last week with difficulty obtained. Barley brings fully last week's prices, with a good demand for the finest qualities. New Beans are 1s. per qr. cheaper. Peas are unaltered in value, but white boilers are less inquired for than of late. The Oat trade is dull, and new qualities are rather cheaper. Country Flour is held for a trifle more money.

FRIDAY, Oct. 21.

Much rain fell in the beginning of the week, with a dull atmosphere and easterly winds; yesterday S.W. and fine with a lower temperature, rain last night, to-day fine and cold. Since this day se'nnight the Wheat trade has been heavy throughout the kingdom, caused in some degree by the tenacity of holders, who refuse to accept of lower terms, in which perhaps they are justified by the continued and for the present prospective absence of important importations of Flour from either France or America. No change of moment has occurred in the value of spring corn or Flour. In floating cargoes off the coast sales have been to a fair extent, including Taganrog Ghirka Wheat at 44s. to 44s. 6d. and 45s, Odessa Ghirka at 43s. 6d., and Berdiansk at 45s. 3d., all per 492 lbs.; Odessa Maize at 30s. 3d., Galatz at 30s. 6d., both per 492 lbs.; Foxanian at 29s. 7½d., Ibrail at 28s. 9d. to 29s., both per 480 lbs.; Bourgos Barley at 22s., Ibrail at 22s., and Odessa at 24s, all per 400 lbs.; Odessa Rye at 27s. and Egyptian Beans at 32s 6d. per qr. imp. The arrivals of Barley (English and foreign) this week have been good, of all other grain moderate. The attendance at to-day's market was smaller than for some time past. The little English Wheat fresh up or left over from the previous market days was cleared off at Monday's quotations. In foreign very little business was transacted, and its value remains nominally the same. Barley, Beans, and Peas are unaltered in value. The Oat trade is firm, and good qualities are generally held for a trifling advance.

LIVERPOOL, Tuesday, October 18.—We had a fair attendance of millers and dealers at our Corn Exchange this morning, but they did not appear much inclined to do business. Wheat was little dealt in, and though previous prices were generally asked, the turn was certainly in favour of buyers. Flour had a slow sale at the rates of last market. The business in Indian Corn was confined to retail requirements, without change in value. Oats sluggish; Oatmeal in fair request at rather more money. Beans advanced 6d. to 1s. per quarter, and Barley 1d. per 60 lbs. Peas without alteration. The market was very slow throughout.

FRIDAY, Oct. 21.—Grain market steady, with a fair attendance. Wheat and Flour in good demand at slightly improved rates. Oatmeal somewhat dearer. Beans and Indian Corn in good request at full rates. Other articles unaltered.

IRON FENCING AND HURDLES.

HILL AND SMITH'S Patent Continuous IRON FENCE is adapted for every variety of situation, and is much superior to, and cheaper than, Iron Hurdles of equal strength.

Many miles of this Fence have been erected on the London and North-Western Railway between Camden Town and Bletchley. The Patent principle is applied to Iron Hurdles, whereby their strength is much increased and the cost reduced.

Illustrated Priced Catalogues will be sent on application to HILL & SMITH, Brierly Hill Iron Works, near Dudley; or 40, Broad Street Buildings, City, London, E.C.; or 23, Enoch Square, Glasgow, where specimens may be seen; or to Mr. B. SAMUELSON, 75, Cannon Street West, London, E.C.

PAINTS OF ALL COLOURS, mixed ready for use from 5*s.* 6*d.* per gal., will cover 54 sq. yds. Superior MANURES, equal to Guano, from 5*s.* 6*d.* per cwt. Efficacious SHEEP WASH, 1*s.* 6*d.* per gal. Patent CART GREASE, 10*s.* per cwt. PORTLAND CEMENT WASH for outside of buildings, prevents greenness and vegetation, also absorption of wet, 1*s.* 6*d.* per gal. Genuine COLZA OIL, 3*s.* 10*d.* per gal. The PEOPLE'S LIGHT LAMPS, 2*s.* PETROLEUM OIL, 3*s.* per gal.—G. SPILLS, Colour and Oil Works, Saint George Street, London Docks, E.

GRADUATED SERIES OF ENGLISH READING-BOOKS.

Now ready, in fcp. 8vo, price 2*s.* 6*d.* bound in cloth,

THE GRADUATED SERIES OF READING LESSON BOOKS, for all Classes of English Schools; Book the FOURTH, being the first in order of publication.

As the title implies, a leading feature of the Graduated Series is the graduation of the difficulty of the lessons; with reference, not only to verbal and grammatical peculiarities, but also to the general mental capacity requisite to understand and appreciate the topics treated and the information conveyed. The element of attractiveness has, for obvious reasons, been considered indispensable in every lesson. A certain continuity in the treatment of topics has also been aimed at throughout; with a view to lead the pupil, by gradations almost imperceptible to a special survey of the chief departments of knowledge, and to a just estimate of their relations and proportions. The THIRD BOOK, price 2*s.*, the SECOND, price 1*s.* 6*d.*, the FIRST, price 1*s.*, and lastly the FIFTH, price 3*s.*, will speedily be published in the above order, completing the Graduated Series of FIVE Reading Lesson Books, in 5 vols, price 10*s.*—The PROSPECTUS of the Series may be had of Messrs. LONGMAN & Co., and all Booksellers.

London: LONGMAN, GREEN, LONGMAN, & ROBERTS.

Now ready, 160 pages, crown 8vo, price 6*d.*,

"This is in reality a Farmer's Book, not merely an Almanack—in which respect it is perfect—but a Handbook and Vade Mecum of everything useful and informational that can in any way be serviceable to the Agriculturist."—Era, Oct. 9, 1859.

THORLEY'S FOOD for CATTLE, as used in her Majesty's Stables; in those of his Royal Highness at the Prince Consort's Farm, Windsor; in the Establishment of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent of Prussia; in the Royal Military Stables of Prussia, by order of his Excellency Lieut.-Gen. Willissen, Head Master of the Horse, is highly efficacious in promoting and sustaining the functions of the Horse in health and vigour. For Milch Cows it is equally valuable, increasing the quantity and improving the quality of Milk. For Beasts nothing can compare with it for feeding quickly. For Sheep, Pigs, and Poultry the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectations.

THORLEY'S FOOD FOR CATTLE contains bitter, saccharine, aromatic, and balsamic properties, essentially necessary to the health of all our domesticated animals. It is purely a vegetable compound, and when the food of Cattle is properly seasoned with it, it gives to the digestive and other functions of animals a healthy action, somewhat similar in character to what is produced by Spring Grass, but without any of the injurious purgative effects of the latter. These aromatic and other properties enhance the flavour and quality of both butcher meat and dairy produce, similar to what Sweet-scented Vernal Grass does in spring.

THORLEY'S FOOD FOR CATTLE can only be had direct from Mr. THORLEY or his accredited Agents. As various spurious imitations are now being sold giving rise to much disappointment, purchasers cannot be too cautious; for although some of those patent foods contain mineral substances, which produce a favourable effect at first, the upshot is ruinous to animal health. To avoid fraud and disappointment of this kind Mr. THORLEY supplies his Food in cases, containing packages, each packet having the signature of JOSEPH THORLEY engraved thereon and containing one feed; and loose in casks, with a one-feed measure, having his signature burnt thereon.

Price of case, containing 448 packages, 56*s.*; and of cask, 448 feeds, 50*s.* Orders to be accompanied by a remittance. Post-office Orders made payable to JOSEPH THORLEY, General Post Office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, E.C.

News of the Week.

THE hopes which were entertained last week of a pacific settlement of the dispute between Spain and Morocco have proved to be unfounded. After Morocco had agreed to satisfy the demands of Spain on all the main points at issue, the negotiations broke down on the question of guarantees. A Council of Ministers, presided over by the QUEEN in person, was held at Madrid on Thursday week, at which war with Morocco was unanimously resolved upon, HER MAJESTY offering to contribute, if necessary, a sum from her civil list, and even to apply her private patrimony towards the expenses of the war. General O'DONNELL has since announced to the Cortes that the Government has withdrawn the Spanish Consul from Tangiers, and has resolved to declare war against Morocco. This declaration was received with great enthusiasm in both Chambers, and it is a proof of the popularity of the war that all political parties in the Cortes and the journals of every shade of opinion have offered their support to the Government. The latest news states that the Spanish Consul has arrived at Algesiras from Tangiers with all his household, and that the declaration of war will be made as soon as the military preparations are completed. Accounts from Paris state that this expedition is encouraged by the French Government, and that the impending war, if not a joint one, will certainly commence with a concerted movement on the part of France and Spain. It appears that while the naval forces of Spain are engaged in bombarding the ports of Morocco, a simultaneous attack will be made by France on the provinces of the interior, in revenge for various outrages committed by certain lawless tribes on the frontier villages of Algeria. In accordance with this arrangement, it is said that, at the request of the Spanish Ambassador, the French Government has placed materials of war at the disposal of Spain, and that the EMPEROR has declared his intention of supporting the operations by making advances to the Government of Madrid similar to those made to Piedmont in the late war.

A meeting has taken place at Ohlau, near Breslau, between the EMPEROR OF RUSSIA and the PRINCE REGENT OF PRUSSIA, to which great importance is attached both in Germany and in France. It was reported in Paris on Thursday that the CZAR and the REGENT agreed at this interview to join England in supporting the annexation of Central Italy to Sardinia, and that, in consequence of this resolution and of fresh assurances which have been received from France, England is now disposed to join the Congress and take part in the final settlement of the Italian question.

A telegraphic despatch in anticipation of the India mail was received yesterday with news from Calcutta to the 23d, and from Hong Kong to the 12th ult. Meetings have been held at Calcutta to protest against the Licensing Bill and to petition Parliament for the establishment of local representative councils in India. Oude continues tranquil, but the Rohillas in the Deccan are still committing acts of brigandage. It is intended to send an expeditionary corps against the bands of robbers in Central India, and against the remaining insurgents in the Terai, and the Governor has despatched 1500 men from Bombay against the rebellious Waghers. The American Minister has returned from Pekin without obtaining the ratification of the treaty at that city, but it was subsequently ratified by commissioners at Pehtang.

From New York we learn that a negro insurrection of an alarming character has taken place at Harper's Ferry. The negroes seized the United States arsenal, and sent cartloads of muskets into Maryland and other Slave States, having previously stopped the railway trains and cut the telegraph wires. The latest news states that the Government was sending troops from various points for the purpose of suppressing the insurrection, and that the object of the outbreak was unknown.

Home News.

THE COURT.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. On Friday the Duke of Somerset and Viscount Palmerston arrived at the castle on a visit. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, drove out in a carriage and four. The Prince Consort went out shooting, accompanied by the Duke of Somerset. On Saturday the Queen held a Privy Council, at which Parliament was ordered to be further prorogued from Thursday, the 27th inst., until Thursday, the 15th December. Lord John Russell, Viscount Palmerston, Viscount Sydney, and Sir G. C. Lewis had audiences of the Queen. Mr. Christie, Minister for Rio de Janeiro, had an audience, and was presented to her Majesty by Lord John Russell. On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince Consort, Prince Arthur, and the Princesses attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle; the Dean of Windsor officiated. On Monday the Queen and Prince Consort, with Prince Arthur, walked in the grounds of the castle. The Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa rode in the riding-house. The Duke de Nemours visited her Majesty. The Countess Blucher, the Earl of Elgin, Viscount Sydney, and the Right Hon. C. P. Villiers arrived on a visit. On Tuesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, walked in the Home Park. In the afternoon the Prince Consort presided at a meeting of the Council of the Horticultural Society, held at the castle. The Earl of Elgin left the castle for London. On Wednesday morning the Queen and Prince Consort walked in the grounds of the castle. His Royal Highness afterwards went to Oxford and visited the Prince of Wales. The Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa rode in the riding-house. The Countess Blucher, Lord Sydney, and the Right Hon. C. P. Villiers left the castle. On Thursday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, rode in the riding-house.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS FREDERICK WILLIAM. — Preparations are making at Windsor Castle for the reception of the Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia and suite, who will arrive at Windsor shortly before the 9th November, for the purpose of being present at the grand banquet to be given on the birthday of the Prince of Wales. The royal visitors will not return to Prussia before the latter end of November, in order to be present at the birthday of the Princess Royal on the 21st of the month.

THE DUCHESS OF KENT left Norris Castle in the Isle of Wight yesterday for Frogmore.

PRINCE NAPOLEON arrived at the Brunswick Hotel, Jermyn Street, on Friday night, and remained in London until Monday, when his Imperial Highness returned to Southampton, and rejoined his steam yacht Le Dauphin. On Wednesday the Prince landed at Portsmouth, and immediately proceeded by the South Coast Railway to Brighton. The Dauphin left Portsmouth on Thursday for Cherbourg, accompanied by a pretty little steam yacht of 8 tons named the Mary, which the Prince purchased at Birkenhead for his private use.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held yesterday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—In accordance with the order of the Privy Council held at Windsor on Saturday, Parliament was on Thursday formally prorogued to Thursday the 15th December. The nomination for Ayrshire took place on Wednesday, when the show of hands was in favour of Mr. Campbell; a poll was demanded for Sir James Fergusson.

THE CHINA EXPEDITION.—It is stated that Colonel Ribourg, chief secretary of Marshal Randon, the French Minister of War, has had a conference with Mr. Sidney Herbert this week on the subject of the combined expedition to China, and that the departure of the expedition is fixed for the first fortnight in February.

MANNING THE NAVY.—The daily papers have published two letters from Admirals Sir Charles Napier and Sir Maurice Berkeley in reference to the manning of the navy and the protection of our coasts. Sir C. Napier, in his letter, expresses his belief that seamen are deterred from entering the navy by the existence of a variety of unredressed grievances, including unnecessary confinement, the discomfort of hulks, infrequent payment, a faulty system of clothing, and lengthened periods of service on foreign stations. He assumes that we are henceforth always to have a Channel fleet, and says that there will always be able seamen enough to man it if the Government can devise the means of obtaining their services, which is in his opinion "purely a money question." He suggests that the Admiralty should keep up a respectable Channel fleet of 10 sail of the line, and man the whole of them with able seamen, reducing by one half the complement of Marines, so that the proportion of blue jackets may be in excess. On the outbreak of war he proposes to turn half of each ship's company over to another ship of the same rate, and fill up with Marines, which would instantly give 20 sail of the line instead of 10, and thereby double our available force, independently of the reserve. The Marines he says could be drawn from the garrisons of our seaports, and their places taken by the Militia, which, "protected by the fleet, would have ample time to be disciplined, and thus in one month the country would be armed to the teeth, and ready to fight any two nations that thought proper to attack us." Sir Maurice Berkeley thinks that the country should not only have a Channel fleet of line of battle ships to sustain the first shock, but should also have a large force of small craft and gunboats to protect the coasts in the event of an unsuccessful action on the part of the Channel fleet. He believes that a large stock of gunboats would form the best defence of the coast, and that it would not be difficult to man them if they were expressly reserved for that particular purpose. He believes that there are no grounds for the popular apprehension in regard to Cherbourg. He considers that port to be admirably adapted to our interests, and thinks that a French fleet stationed there in the event of war with us would soon get into trouble.

THE VICTORIA CROSS.—The Queen has conferred the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officers and privates on account of acts of bravery performed by them in India. Major Charles John Stanley (now) 5th Bengal European Cavalry; Brevet-Capt. Robert Haydon Shebbeare, 60th Bengal Native Infantry; Lieut. Herbert Mackworth Clogstoun, 19th Madras Native Infantry; Lieut. (now Capt.) Andrew Cathcart Bogle, 78th Regiment; Lieut. Harry Hammon Lyster, 7th Bengal Native Infantry; Lieut. Harry North Burke Trymple Prendergast, Madras Engineers; Private Robert Addison, 43d Regiment; and Private Frederick Wilkinson, 3d Bombay European Regiment. Ensign Everard Aloysius Lisle Phillipps, of the 11th Bengal Native Infantry, would have been recommended for the Victoria Cross had he survived.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—Accounts from Paris state that the Spanish expedition against Morocco is encouraged by the French Government, and that the impending attack on Morocco, if not a joint one, will be certainly simultaneous on the part of Spain and France. A despatch from Paris dated Wednesday last states that at the request of M. Mon, the Spanish Ambassador in Paris, Marshal Randon, the Minister of War, has placed materials of war at the disposal of the Spanish Government, and has declared that the Emperor will support the military operations of Spain by advances made in a similar way to those made to Piedmont during the late war in Italy. It is reported that the Emperor will shortly pay a visit to the King of the Belgians. The Queen of Holland arrived at St. Cloud on Tuesday. The Imperial Court will leave for Compiègne on the 31st inst., and will stay there until the 30th of November. There is no foundation for the rumour that the Emperor of Austria is expected at Compiègne. The Grand Duchess Marie of Russia will visit their Majesties during their sojourn at Compiègne. The Emperor gave audience on Sunday to a deputation of the Council of Administration of the Suez Canal Company. Among its members were the president, M. de Lesseps, MM. Elie de Beaumont, Jomard, the Duke of Albufera, the Mayor of Abbeville, M. Arman, of Bordeaux, and several others. The Emperor expressed much interest for the object they had in view, and exhorted them to patience. General Bedeau and Dr. Lausedat have availed themselves of the amnesty and returned to France. The Constitutionnel on Tuesday in an article signed by its principal editor, in reply to the assertions of the English press, that the policy of the Emperor of the French left a state of political incertitude in Europe, states the aim proposed by the Emperor at the beginning of the war, compares it with the advantages gained by the war, and accuses the English journals of inconsistency. It is reported in Paris that the number of the expeditionary force to China has been reduced from 14,000 foot and 1000 horse to less than half that amount. The great cost of transport is mentioned as the cause of this reduction. Admiral Larrieu is about to hoist his flag on board the ship-of-the-line Duguay-Trouin, and to sail for the South Seas. The 10th of next month being the 100th anniversary of the birth of Schiller, the Germans residing at Paris have resolved to celebrate it by a fête.

SPAIN.—Accounts from Madrid state that the reply of Morocco to the guarantees demanded by Spain not being of a satisfactory character, a Council of Ministers, presided over by the Queen, was held on the 20th inst., at which war with Morocco was unanimously resolved on, and that her Majesty offered, if necessary, to give a certain sum from her civil list towards the expenses of the war, and even to make over all her private patrimony. On Friday General O'Donnell announced at the sitting of the Cortes that the Government had ordered its representative at Tangiers to take his departure; and on Saturday he further announced that the Government was about to declare war with Morocco. This declaration was received with great enthusiasm, and all political parties in the Senate and the Congress have since offered their support to the Ministry, and the articles of the newspapers express the same feelings. The Spanish Consul at Tangiers arrived at Algesiras on Wednesday with all his household. Reports had been current that the English Ministry had used very strong language in order to deter Spain from undertaking the expedition, but the Espana on the contrary asserts that nearly all the foreign ministers, including the representative of England, had called on the Minister for Foreign Affairs to express the opinion that the war with Morocco was a just one. It is asserted that the Ministers have stated that they will not have recourse to a loan, and that the floating debt will not be augmented but the taxes increased. Lord John Russell has directed the Under-Secretary of State to send the following despatch to the British Consul at Alicante relative to the recent proceedings of the Spanish ecclesiastical authorities at Denia:—

"I am directed by Lord John Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ult., inclosing a statement received by you from Mr. G. Graham, relative to a demand which had been addressed to him by the parish priest of Denia, n the province of Valencia, requiring him to disinter the body of his child, which had been buried in the Protestant cemetery; and I am to acquaint you that the British Consul at Alicante having, in consequence of the representation made to him by the British Vice-Consul at Denia, brought Mr. Graham's complaint before Mr. Buchanan, the British Minister at Madrid, Mr. Buchanan has addressed to the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs a formal remonstrance against the proceedings of the ecclesiastical authorities in this matter. Lord John Russell has approved of the steps taken by Mr. Buchanan for the protection of Mr. Graham, and has instructed him to use every endeavour to secure that gentleman from molestation on the part of the ecclesiastical authorities."

SWITZERLAND.—Count Colloredo, the Austrian plenipotentiary at Zurich, was attacked with apoplexy on Friday morning. Four physicians were immediately called to his aid, but he could not be restored to consciousness and died on Wednesday morning. A telegraphic despatch from Zurich states that Count Karoly is expected there to take the place of Count Colloredo in the further negotiations.

AUSTRIA.—A Ministerial crisis has occurred at Vienna. Baron von Hübner, Minister of Police, has tendered his resignation, which has been accepted, and Baron Thierry, Ministerial Councillor in the department for Foreign Affairs, has been appointed his successor. The retirement of General and Aide-de-Camp Count Grünne is also announced. It has since been reported that Baron Bruck, the Minister of Finance, has tendered his resignation, and the funds have fallen in consequence. The new Minister of Police has summoned the editors of the different newspapers to his office, and has notified to them in a friendly manner that the Ministerial programme of August last has been modified. The Archduke Albrecht has returned from Warsaw, where he had been sent to arrange a meeting between the Emperors of Russia and Austria. The Emperor of Russia is said to have intimated to the Archduke that he would not touch the Austrian territory, or be able to have an interview with the Emperor of Austria

PRUSSIA AND RUSSIA.—The Prince Regent left Berlin on Sunday morning for Breslau, accompanied by Prince Frederick William, Prince Albrecht, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Minister of War, and many councillors of the Foreign Office, to have an interview with the Emperor of Russia at Ohlau. The Emperor arrived at Breslau on Monday morning, accompanied by the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar and the Prince of Orange. A grand reception took place at the railway station. His Majesty left Breslau on Monday night, and the Prince Regent left on Tuesday morning. A great political bearing is generally attributed to this meeting, and a very general impression prevails that the Czar and the Regent have agreed not to oppose the annexation of Central Italy to Piedmont. A deputation from Tuscany, entrusted with a mission to Prussia and Russia, has had an interview with the Prussian Minister for Foreign Affairs, but the Government journals state that the interview was strictly private and not official, as the Tuscan Government has not been recognised by Prussia. The Berlin police have refused to allow a proposed torchlight procession in honour of the centenary of Schiller.

ITALY.—A despatch from Turin states that the Minister of Justice has tendered his resignation, on account of the Court of Cassation being transferred from Turin to Milan. Several Deputies held a meeting on Tuesday to solicit the Government to accelerate the armaments and to pursue energetically the work of uniting Central Italy. Considerable excitement is said to prevail in Piedmont on account of the conditions of peace, which are considered unsatisfactory. The state of the Duchies is also represented as very alarming, and it is said that Marshal Vaillant has written to the Emperor suggesting their occupation by French troops, or that a civil war will shortly break out. The official Piedmontese Gazette publishes a decree authorising the minister of Finance to contract a loan of 100,000,000fr. by means of alienation of Rentes on the public debt to that amount. Count Rogier, Minister of Belgium, has arrived at Turin. Mazzini has subscribed 200 francs to the Garibaldi fund for purchasing a million of muskets. The Austrians have evacuated five cantons of the district of Gargnano, on the Lago di Garda. The enthusiasm of the inhabitants is very great. The Duchess of Parma has had a funeral service performed at Rappenschwyl, on the occasion of Colonel Anviti's murder. Accounts from the Romagna deny the report that the Bishop of Rimini has been imprisoned, and that the authorities at Pesaro have seized letters from emissaries exciting to rebellion the provinces now held by the Papal troops. It is reported at Turin that some Austrian and Neapolitan steamers have landed troops at Ancona, that both Naples and Austria have despatched troops against the Romagna, and that the Austrian Government has contracted for supplies of provisions, to be delivered within 24 hours after notice, at such places as shall be then indicated. The interview between the Pope and the King of Naples has been adjourned. His Holiness has despatched Monsignore Talbot to the Court of Naples to explain the cause of this adjournment. Conferences have been held between the Pope and the Duke de Gramont, on the subject of which complete secrecy was observed; but it is stated that the ordinances for granting administrative reforms are now ready, and will shortly be made public.

TURKEY.—Advices from Constantinople to the 19th inst. state that four chiefs of the late conspiracy have been condemned to death—namely, Hussein Pasha, a mufti, a colonel, and an individual who was to have killed the Sultan. These condemnations had provoked a ferment among the populace, and direct threats of revenge had mysteriously reached the palace of the Sultan. The executions have consequently been delayed. The Sultan has written a letter to the Ministers reproaching them for allowing the reforms to remain incomplete. Kibrisli Pasha has taken office as Grand Vizier. He was formerly a pupil at the College of Saumur, in France. Modifications of the Cabinet are expected. All the conditions under which Kibrisli Pasha stated that he was willing to enter the Cabinet were accepted. The Montenegrins have begun again to commit great atrocities against the Turks; the members of the commission for the settlement of the boundary question escaped them quite by chance, but have since been obliged to secure their safety by leaving the country. A conspiracy has been discovered at Aleppo, and arrests have taken place. One of the daughters of the Sultan, the bride of Mahmoud Pacha, has recently been confined of a son, who was immediately strangled in accordance with the old State rule in Turkey which guards by the shortest method against the dangers of a disputed succession.

EGYPT.—Accounts from Alexandria to the 19th inst. state that after the Viceroy had communicated to the Consuls the resolution respecting the Suez Canal, they resolved upon notifying to their countrymen who are employed on the works at Suez to leave the place before Nov. 1, the Porte henceforth assuming the responsibility of the undertaking towards Europe.

INDIA.—A telegraphic despatch has been received in anticipation of the Calcutta mail of Sept. 23. The Licensing Bill has been read a second time, and referred to a select committee. Indignation meetings have been held at Calcutta to protest against the Bill, and to petition Parliament to establish local representative councils in India. At the same time the European merchants protest against the necessity of making returns; the native traders protest against taxes altogether, and threaten to close all their shops the day on which the tax is levied. The Governor has despatched 1500 men from Bombay against the rebellious Waghers. The Rohillas in the Deccan continue to commit acts of brigandage. It is intended to send an expeditionary corps against the bands of robbers in Central India, and against the remaining insurgents in the Terai. Oude is tranquil; 300 of the 450 men who had escaped from the prison of Mundleseer have been caught again. The frontier districts of Nepaul are still occupied by the Nana and his followers, but it was reported that the Nana was dying of Terai fever, and that Azim-ulla-Khan was dead. Feroze Shah has had a narrow escape from being captured by a field force under Colonel Nott, which had left Saugor in pursuit of him. Rao Ram Buksh, talookdar of Doondeah Khera, has been captured, and is to be tried for the murder of the few survivors of the Cawnpore massacre who took refuge in the temple. Rajah Jyelall will also be tried as aiding and abetting in the murder of Miss Jackson, Mrs. Green, and others. A Sealkote Faqueer, Hubeeb Shah, has been hanged at the Lahore District Gaol for treason and imposture. He had proclaimed himself the ambassador of the promised prophet, and offered a price for the head of every Christian. His body was afterwards burnt. A meeting has been held at Cawnpore, at which it was resolved that the "Memorial Church" be built on or near the site of the present church of St. John's, which is very near "Wheeler's Intrenchment," the church to be under the care of the Government, and, like all station churches, to be supplied by the chaplains of India, under the direction of the Bishop of Calcutta.

CHINA.—Accounts from Hong Kong to Sept. 12 state that the American Ambassador had returned from Pekin without having obtained the ratification of the treaty at that city. The ratification had taken place by commissioners at Pehtang. The steamer Thebes, which had been hired by the French, was wrecked on the passage between Hong Kong and Turon. Letters from the squadron state that the crews of the various ships are suffering severely from ophthalmia. The Chesapeake is said to have 200 on her sick list from this cause alone, and one of the vessels is named as having the whole of her crew without exception suffering from the same cause. Admiral Hope is stated to be recovering his health, but unable to move across his cabin, and has to be carried whenever necessary to do so.

COCHIN CHINA.—The following unpleasant news appears in the Journal de Débats:—

"Our last accounts from Cochin China announce that Vice-Admiral Rigault de Genouilly and the troops under his command, exhausted by disease and fatigue of every description, which incapacitated them from pursuing their operations, were preparing to abandon Tourane and return to China. The Admiral proposed to retain the position he occupies at Saïgon, and which combines the best conditions of defence and salubrity. Rear-Admiral Page had not yet arrived."

UNITED STATES.—Accounts from New York to the 17th inst. state that a fearful insurrection has taken place at Harper's Ferry. The negroes seized the United States arsenal, and sent cartloads of muskets into Maryland and elsewhere. The railway trains were stopped and the telegraph wires cut. The object of the outbreak was unknown. The Government at the latest accounts were sending troops from several points. The Washington papers state that Lord Lyons has submitted to the American Government a proposition for a settlement of the San Juan difficulty. They say:—

"The paper submitted by Lord Lyons was a proposition for a settlement of the dispute, as the Treaty provides no remedy in case of a disagreement between Boundary Commissioners. The treaty being thus exhausted, the parties are thrown back on first principles, and England now submits a programme for an adjustment of the difficulty, in which she claims the island of San Juan. Secretary Cass has returned his reply to this proposition, declining in the most positive terms to recognise so much as the shadow of title on the part of England to the disputed island. This is the present condition of the question, and it remains for England to take the next step, as we hold possession. This turn in affairs is regarded as very serious by our Government, and the result, whether it be peace or war, depends entirely upon the tenacity with which Great Britain holds to her pretended claim."

The New York papers, alluding to the assistance given by the American Commodore to the British on the Peiho, say that a communication has been received from the British Government, through Lord Lyons, requesting that their acknowledgments may be conveyed to Mr. Ward and Commodore Tatnall, for their friendly conduct at the affair of the Peiho. The recent filibustering expedition appears to have had a most inglorious termination. On their arrest the company claimed that they had only gone down to the South-west Pass on a fishing excursion. The United States' officers, after bringing them up to New Orleans, confined them in a guardhouse where there were no guards, and the followers of Colonel Anderson and Captains Maury, Fayssoux, and Scott deliberately walked off, while these leaders were each held to bail in the sum of 3000 dollars. It was reported that the collector at New Orleans had discovered a secret receptacle in the hold of the steamship Philadelphia containing boxes of muskets, which it is supposed had been shipped at New York. The duel at San Francisco on the 13th ult. was fought between Senator Broderick and Judge Terry, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California. Mr. Broderick fell mortally wounded at the first fire, and Judge Terry has been arrested. The public were highly incensed at the fatal result to Mr. Broderick, and his funeral was the most imposing ever witnessed in San Francisco. The Philadelphia cricket match has resulted in the success of the All Englanders, with only three down in the second innings. Parr was unable to play owing to a blow on his arm. The All Englanders had promised to revisit America next summer.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Accounts from Victoria to the 7th September state that the United States troops on San Juan were throwing up a fortification on the summit of a hill below the Hudson Bay Company's station. The Oregon papers of the 10th publish a reply by General Harney to Governor Douglas's letter of August 30, in which he accepts the Governor's explanation as an apology for his past conduct, but declines to withdraw his troops from San Juan until the pleasure of President Buchanan is known on the subject.

HAYTI.—A conspiracy against the new Government broke out on the 10th September, the first act being the murder of President Geffrard's daughter, who was shot dead with the view of attracting the President to the scene of the crime, and then assassinating him. About 50 of the conspirators have been arrested, and many of them have been found to be persons who aided in the overthrow of the Emperor Soulouque. It was not believed that any great number of them would be condemned to death.

Public Addresses.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, at the banquet given to the Directors of the Great Eastern at Holyhead, spoke as follows on financial affairs:—

"I am quite aware that the office which I have been called upon to hold is one of the deepest interest to you; for upon the manner in which my duties are discharged depends much that belongs to your prosperity, happiness, and comfort. Let me, however, on this, as on every occasion, remind an English company that the manner in which that office is to be discharged itself depends not so much upon the individual who holds it as upon the sentiments that animate the mass of the people. If the mass of the people are disposed to adhere to principles of thrift and economy in the administration of finance, then it is alike the duty and the pleasure of the Finance Minister to become their instrument and organ in giving effect to those principles. But if, on the other hand, whether through an increase of wealth, a long continuance of prosperity, an apprehension of danger, or from whatever other cause, a change passes upon the temper of the public mind, and we find at every turn a prevalence, not of the sentiments which governed the Administrations in succession of the Duke of Wellington, of Earl Grey, of Sir Robert Peel, and of Lord Melbourne—but a disposition to recommend right and left the largest effusion of public money for every object of utility—then, I must tell you, and I must tell the English public, that it is vain to look to a Chancellor of the Exchequer to confront such a tide of feeling. He may do what he can to control it, but this is a country of which it is, in some respects, perhaps the danger—but upon the whole the safety and the glory—that it is governed by its own convictions, and that the manner in which the public wills affairs to be conducted depends not upon the inclinations or the abilities of any individual, but upon the tendencies and the convictions of the people of England themselves, and therefore the person who may fill the office that I hold at this moment is an insignificant item altogether in the administration of your affairs. That which really determines his course and conduct is what is felt by the mass of the people, and what is felt by those enlightened and really governing classes of the community whom I now have the honour to address. Let me say, in a very few words, that in my opinion the position of a public man in England, although it may be one in many respects of care and difficulty (for we have a vast, and perhaps too vast, an empire to administer), but it is in many other respects a position of singular felicity, for we serve a Sovereign whom it is a delight to serve. And if in her we have a noble mistress, we have likewise a noble master in the British nation. I have to propose to you that you should drink 'Prosperity to the trading and manufacturing interests of this country.' That prosperity has little to do with my own personal existence, but it has a great deal to do with my official existence, and the comfort of my official existence, I have lived long enough to know very well, depends upon the condition of those interests. I venture to tell you that the last quarter's revenue presented a return the most satisfactory that we have witnessed for many years, and, if you ask me why, I apprehend that it was in a very great degree owing, mainly owing, to the activity of trade, and that activity of trade was in a very great degree founded upon the great moderation of the prices at which the people are obtaining their provisions. Gentlemen, we have lived in a time of varied and diverse character—a time in which much has occurred that may be of a doubtful character, but in which upon that very account the mind rests with the greater comfort and satisfaction upon all those circumstances that betoken and that demonstrate real progress and advancement in what concerns the interests of mankind, and I do not believe that in the whole history of the world an instance can be found either of an age or of a people, in which it has been graciously conceded to a legislature to do so much for the benefit of the people committed to its charge as has been given to the British Parliament, in the age in which we live, by the changes that it has circumspectly, wisely, but boldly and effectually introduced into the whole of our commercial regulations. I am old enough to recollect when the largest ship that sailed out of Liverpool for a long sea voyage over the Atlantic was about one-fortieth part of the size of the Great Eastern now floating on your waters. It has been said that the age of chivalry is gone; but there is something even of chivalry in the manly resolution in which the projectors of this great scheme have chosen to confront risk and difficulty, and to see whether they cannot achieve something not only greater, but far greater than has been yet dreamt of, through the medium of a ship, on behalf of their country and of mankind, for there cannot be a doubt that if success is to attend that enterprise much will have been achieved both for their country and mankind; as upon the other hand, there cannot be a doubt that if success is to be withheld or to be delayed, even failure in such an undertaking can entail no discredit. Now, there has been comment made upon the treatment by the House of Commons of railway companies, and no doubt that is a subject which the historian will have hereafter to discuss. Some believe that the House of Commons is in fault; some say that the railway companies are in fault. I, for my part, especially at a moment like this, consecrated to festivity, should be exceedingly sorry to imply that anybody is in fault. But, however that may be, there are certain facts on record, and there is this great fact on record, that three or four hundred millions of money have been laid out upon railway enterprise in this country; that the outlay of these three or four hundred millions of money has produced an enormous benefit to every interest in this country, with the exception of one; and, not confined within the bounds of this country, has, on behalf of every country in the world, solved the whole problem of its internal communications, and shown them the way in which they ought to walk; so that, in fact, we have paid the cost of all the errors and the blunders which they must have committed in the endeavour to attain experience for themselves. Inasmuch as that is undeniable—and I must confess that I think it a matter of regret that that being the case the average return on railway capital up to the present moment is so low—I lay no blame upon anybody; but I am firmly convinced that in an enterprise of this kind, novel, and, therefore, necessarily, in one of its aspects, speculative, it would have been much better, not only for the shareholders, but for the country at large, if a more liberal return had been realised upon the capital return laid out than it has been the good or bad fortune of shareholders to receive. Dr. Johnson, I think, says that whatever induces a man to live more in the future and less in the present exalts him in the scale of the creation. If that be so (and I am inclined to believe it is so) the position of the railway shareholder must be an exalted one. The past undoubtedly has not smiled upon him—the present has no extravagant attractions. If he really expects any very great things they must lie in the future; and it is an additional comfort to him, therefore, to know that looking to the future he is by that very fact elevated in the scale of nations. I confess to you that I regret upon another ground the comparative slenderness of the return on railway capital—a fact which is full of curious interest; for I do not believe that there is another like it upon record, namely, of a great social, commercial, economical change introduced into the world by private interest, and without the advantage of a great and immediate premium to the projecture. But, however that may be, I am sorry to say that, in my official capacity, and as one who I am not ashamed to say feels a great interest in the economical administration of public funds, I do think that the lowness of the return upon capital invested in our days has had some not inconsiderable effect in producing a tendency of the public mind, which in this country is in a great degree novel, and which, I do not hesitate to say, is in a great degree mischievous, namely this, that when there is a question of enterprise to be achieved, of some useful object to be attained, immediately and along with the first suggestion there occurs to the mind of the parties an assault upon the public purse. I do not know in what degree I am entitled to ask your sympathy in that matter: but I must confess that I do believe that the principle upon which we have long acted in this country—although we have greatly departed from it of late years—namely, the principle that the assistance of Government should never be had for private enterprise, unless under circumstances of rigid and extreme necessity—is a principle alike sound with regard to finance, with regard to the security of your institutions, with regard to the purity of the public character, and with regard to the maintenance of that spirit of enterprise, of boldness, I will say of daring, which at all times, and alike in peace and in war, has been characteristic of Englishmen. Under these circumstances, I am not prepared to make any distinct answer to the appeal which has been addressed to me on the subject of the liberality of the House of Commons, and the expenditure of money upon harbours. Harbours, no doubt, are exceedingly useful—admirably useful. They serve the most valuable purposes; but with regard to the sources from which the funds are to proceed by which the construction of these harbours all round our coasts is to be provided for, upon that subject I pray your permission to maintain a judicious silence on this occasion. In conclusion I venture to assure you that I have at least this qualification to ask you to drink as a toast the prosperity of the trading and manufacturing interests of this country—that my own life and exertions are cordially devoted to that object—that amidst all the difficulties of politics, amid all the vicissitudes and the disappointments of life, amid all the uncertainties that attend our speculations, I find a comfort and a satisfaction in thinking that it is in our power—if we will sedulously set ourselves about it by a judicious economy, and by enlightened legislation, to do something at least towards raising the condition of the masses of our fellow countrymen, and providing that there shall be some lightening of the burdens which human life entails upon the noble-minded artisans and peasantry of England."

LORD HATHERTON, in his capacity of Lord-Lieutenant of Staffordshire, attended the recent inaugural dinner of the Handsworth Volunteer Riflemen, and spoke as follows on the national defences:—

"I believe it will be found in the next session of Parliament that the main question will be, not 'What do you think of this or that franchise?' but, 'What are your opinions about the defences of the country?' That will be the question of the next few years. I am sure I need not say anything in detail as to the actual condition of our army and navy; but I may cursorily observe with respect to the army, that such is its condition in organisation and substance, and such is its insufficiency of men, that if a sudden quarrel were to take place with our neighbours across the Channel to-morrow, we should not have a single man in the field if our garrisons were supplied in the way they should be. We should require 15,000 men for Plymouth, 10,000 for Portsmouth, and 10,000 for the Isle of Wight; besides these, we should have to man our lines at Chatham, and put smaller military forces into other garrisons, so that when all this was done we should not have a single man to place on the field. It is absolutely necessary that the truth should be spoken. Across the Channel a Government exists of which I say nothing, but of which we all know that secrecy is one of its elements, and that its power is immense. It can man a force, either on land or sea, at the shortest possible notice. We can do nothing of the sort. We can do nothing except by the operation of a Parliamentary vote; the votes once passed cannot be exceeded; and six or nine months may elapse before additions can be made. It is absolutely necessary, therefore, that the people should understand their position, and forego all minor or party considerations for the purpose of giving their representatives authority to do whatever may be necessary in their estimation for the defence of the country. I am old enough to remember when Lord Castlereagh laid it down that at no period could this country ever be safe unless it were able to put to sea at the shortest notice a fleet at least equal to that of any other two Powers. For a very short time a fleet of that description was maintained; but we know how it has dwindled away until at length the country has been excited by alarms, and we are now spending millions in restoring it to its proper position as a steam navy. Now, the navies of the two countries may be equal, but there is one point, I regret to state, in which we are inferior. I believe that France could now put into the Channel a larger fleet, in a shorter period of time, than it is in the power of England to do. Considering the vast resources of this country, the immense foreign possessions it has to defend, our vast wealth at home, and our great population, I say that if any disaster were to be permitted to befall this country by means of its navy it would be the greatest disgrace that ever fell on any country in the history of the world. I believe there is no effort that England is not prepared to make—there is no pecuniary sacrifice we would not submit to—for the purpose of avoiding such a disgrace. Consider what would happen if we had an equally balanced action in the Channel. We might be invaded at every point, and a large army might take the field while we have such inadequate resources to meet it. Or even if our navy sustained disaster and defeat it would not be necessary for France to invade England. We should be already conquered. She could blockade our ports; she could prevent the entrance of food or raw material. If she were mistress of the Channel for a few months she would be mistress of half the world. Therefore it is that the influence of the represented should be brought to bear upon the representative, in order that the House of Commons may see it is your desire that the honour of the country should be protected. Do not let it be supposed that I at all undervalue the volunteer movement. I understand, on the authority of the very best officers—those who have had the largest experience—that, carried on as it is now, it cannot fail to render the most important services to Government in the case of sudden danger. The volunteer artillery will enable Government to dispense with a vast number of troops in our garrisons that must otherwise have been detained; and I believe that, even with the restricted discipline which can only be maintained by solitary companies, yet that connected with regular troops they might be made available in a short time for most important services. This is the opinion of Sir John Burgoyne—a person of the highest authority. But I hope that a good deal more than this may be done. We must have a considerable increase of the army, or the militia must be made more effective. There is no sufficient reason why the old constitutional resource of the ballot, with a modification suiting it to the altered circumstance of the country, may not still be resorted to. I would suggest that an Act of Parliament should direct the lord-lieutenants and the deputy-lieutenants to assemble yearly for the purpose of determining in which parishes the ballot should take effect, and which parishes should be exempted. I would have the latter parishes assessed to their quota of men, and if they declined to raise them by such means as they found available, I would have them assessed to such amount in money as a body of commissioners might declare. As to the permanent expense which must be incurred by the country for the purpose of putting the army and navy on a good footing, I hope the country will be induced to look at the subject in the light which Lord Lyndhurst, shedding on it the last rays of his lengthened wisdom, regarded it last session—as an insurance for the purpose of protecting us from a possible necessity, instead of having to add, by a prolonged struggle, 200,000,000*l.* or 300,000,000*l.* to the national debt."

MR. BLACK, M.P., on Saturday delivered a lecture to the working classes of Edinburgh on wages, trades' unions, and strikes, of which the following is an abstract:—

"Labour and capital are both articles of commerce, and are essential to each other, and capital must necessarily and proportionately share with labour the profits of their united enterprise. There are means by which working men, when the moment was opportune, might obtain higher wages. Instead of organising a determined contest, if workmen were to threaten to leave, or actually to leave their masters, unless their demands were agreed to (but without obstructing or intimidating others), if circumstances warranted a compliance with their terms some masters would agree to them, and others would be obliged to follow their example, as otherwise they would lose their best men. But if already wages had reached their proper level, and masters could not carry on their works with a fair profit if a larger proportion was paid in wages, the resistance to the demand would be so general that the workmen would find it to be their interest to accept the largest wages that could be mutually agreed upon. This would accomplish the same object as a strike in every instance where a strike would have naturally been successful, without the disastrous consequences which uniformly attend these intestine wars. Thus, in the prosperous summer of 1836, the spinners in Glasgow memorialised their masters for a rise in wages, trade being brisk and profits large. The manufacturers were desirous to increase their trade, and there was a competition for workmen. The advance was therefore readily agreed to. But by and by came the commercial crisis of January and February, 1837, and prices fell so much that the masters could not sell with a profit at the advanced rate of wages, and therefore they proposed that their wages should be restored to the former rate, which was from 36*s.* to 26*s.* a-week. The workmen, however, thought that, contrary to the nature of things, wages should be kept up at the same rate in a period of depression as in times of great prosperity. They struck work in a body on the 8th of April, and continued till the 5th of August, a period of 17 weeks, when they unanimously agreed to return to their work on terms lower than those first offered by their masters, after having endured extreme sufferings themselves, and caused wide-spread misery among others through this insane strife, which a knowledge of the laws that regulate wages would have prevented. The number of spinners in Glasgow in 1837 was between 800 and 900; each of these gives employment to a certain number of women and girls, about seven for each spinner—thus about 5000 women were deprived of the means of livelihood through the folly and perverseness of those who ought to have known better. It was calculated that the total loss to Glasgow during this strike was 194,540*l.* No doubt combinations of workmen have been legalised by the Act of 1825, and very properly so. But if workmen may combine to fix prices and resolve upon the conditions on which they will dispose of their labour, even-handed justice requires, and the law provides, that the same rights be accorded to the employers. They may unite to lower the rate of wages and to agree on the conditions on which they will engage workmen. If the workmen may legally have recourse to a strike to compel a rise of wages, or any other concession, the employers may also legally resort to a lock-out to compel a reduction of wages, or an acceptance of any other terms. When I say this, I by no means approve a lock-out. Both may be legal, but very inexpedient, and it is very dangerous for either the one party or the other to exercise this extreme power. It is like the power of the House of Commons to stop the supplies—a power which may be held up in terrorem, but which is never exercised. When such intestine contests occur they are accompanied with most of the evils that attend national wars. The country which is the theatre of the war is devastated, property is destroyed, multitudes of innocent persons suffer, the belligerents on each side endeavour to do as much damage to the other side as possible, disease, and crime, and death, follow in the track of war, and, after disaster has done its worst to both parties, very often, from sheer exhaustion, they patch up a peace which leaves both parties in much the same condition as they were before the beginning of the conflict. Such is the usual course of these unhappy internecine contests, which are as disastrous within their own bounds as the wars of nations within the territories of the belligerents. Both parties strive to destroy the property of the other—the workmen try to reduce the employers to bankruptcy; the employers try to starve the workmen into obedience. Multitudes who take no part in the strike, but desire to remain at peace, are thrown out of employment. Wives and children are reduced to beggary, crime becomes more rampant, and disease and death thin their numbers. This was all painfully illustrated by the great strike of the colliers in Lanarkshire, Renfrew, and Stirling, in 1837. According to Dr. Cleland, the loss inflicted on the innocent inhabitants of Glasgow and the surrounding districts by the increase in the price of coals from the 1st of March to the 1st of November, 1837, was 487,000*l.* The loss sustained by the colliers themselves, from stoppage of wages for 26 weeks, was 78,000*l.* The loss occasioned to others by the strike, although most of them were opposed to it, was 111,000*l.* The total loss was 678,000*l.* As national wars are accompanied with rapine and crime these strikes partake of similar atrocities. The number of persons tried in jury courts in Glasgow in 1837 rose from 114 to 392; the number of fever patients in the Infirmary rose from 269 to 3860; the number of deaths rose from 4647 to 10,888—thus showing that these intestine wars are far more destructive comparatively than the great wars between nations. We have a melancholy instance of the intense suffering which must often be endured by the numerous victims of these strikes in the case of Daniel Locke, a plasterer, who lately committed suicide in London, leaving behind him a paper containing these words:—'The strike! the ruinous strike! God protect my unfortunate family!' The rash act of this unhappy man has been made public, but who can tell how many innocent victims of the pride and folly of others weep in their desolate homes unheeded and unseen? Then again there was the recent attempt to coerce a firm at Coventry, where the workpeople of the firm, who were satisfied with certain proposed changes, were so maltreated and intimidated by the operatives' society that the police had every night for more than a month to escort them from the factory to their own doors. It must also be remembered that strikes invariably have the effect of raising up foreign competition, and of thus inflicting serious injury on the entire trade of the country. The proceedings of combined workmen are now happily unaccompanied by criminal violence and outrage. But it is not by illegal violence alone that personal liberty may be encroached upon; there are other means of intimidation that may be as effectual or even more so. The Pope by the threat of excommunication was able to control the most powerful Sovereigns. A similar threat is one of the most effective instruments in the hands of the committees of the unions. When they order a strike, he would be a bold man who would preach the right of private judgment, and act upon it in opposition to the commands of the secret committee. He would not only be shunned by all his companions, but reproached and denounced as a snob, a knobstick, as unfair, and insulted in other opprobious terms. By cajolery, molestation, and threatening the combined leaders strike a general terror into the whole community. In most of these contests I have no doubt there are many who, in their own minds, are satisfied that they are unnecessary and ruinous, but are as much afraid of stating their convictions and acting upon them as men who live under the nightshade of the Inquisition are afraid of professing their faith in the light of private judgment, lest they should be persecuted for heresy. Most men would rather suffer at once some severe loss than submit to the continued isolation, suspicion, and malignity of their fellows. Where such a system of terrorism prevails there can be no liberty—the best energies of men are cramped, and their rise in life rendered impossible. The liberty of both workmen and their employers is often arrogantly encroached upon by rules imposed by the union. One of these prohibits masters to take a certain number of apprentices, though the boys are sons of workmen, and it is workmen who barbarously doom them to idleness, in order to secure a monopoly of the trade, by preventing an increase of workmen. Another way in which unions encroach on the rights of both masters and men is, their dictation of the manner in which work is to be executed. From the nature of these rules, they appear to be devised by the most idle and unskilful men of the union, as they generally favour these at the expense of the industrious and skilful. For example they insist that the wages shall be uniform; that the man whose work is superior in quality and quantity shall receive no more than the man whose work is inferior and deficient. I have known operative masons, industrious, frugal, and skilful, who, by taking piecework and making extraordinary exertions, gained money enough to enable them to commence as masters, and, by good management, rise to great eminence. Had these men been doomed to the dead level of an average wage, cramped and manacled by trade union rules, they never could have reached their eventual prosperity. The noble workmen, George Stephenson, Telford, and Tredgold, laboured as journeymen at not more than 12*s.* a week. They, by the exercise of their free and unfettered talents, increased the power of the country, and added immensely to its wealth and happiness; had they been fettered and confined by trades' union rules and control they would have died unknown and unhonoured, and Britain would have been deprived of the incalculable benefits resulting from their exertions. The consequence of these frequent interferences between workmen and their employers has been that masters have stimulated men of mechanical genius to invent machines which do the work of hundreds of men, and never combine. But, could the operatives have had their way, the nation would have been deprived of the incalculable benefits which these inventions have conferred upon the community. There would have been no power looms, no spinning-jennies, no steam printing press, no boot-closing machines—in short, almost every invention which has abridged labour and increased the comfort and wealth of the people has met with determined opposition from the operatives. One wonders how sensible men—men calling themselves free-born Britons—have so long submitted to the dictation of this secret tribunal. We are accustomed to laud free national constitutions, but freedom to act in all social relations in such a way as will be most conducive to a man's own happiness, uncontrolled either by prince or priest, or by any committee of his own trade, is the most invaluable of social privileges. Britain has experienced the blessings of free trade, and I hope and believe that our countrymen are determined to resist every attempt to deprive them of this source of national prosperity, and will guard it with the greatest jealousy."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Destructive Gale.—On Wednesday last the metropolis and suburbs were visited by a gale of wind which raged with terrific violence nearly the whole day, and caused the loss of several lives, severe injury to many persons, and great destruction of property. The persons killed were either drowned by being blown into the river or canals, or killed by the fall of tiles and chimneys. Upwards of 60 vessels in the river were damaged, and on some of the railways the covered vans of the goods trains were unroofed, and the drivers and firemen were compelled to tie themselves to their engines. In all parts of the suburbs houses were unroofed, conservatories and greenhouses shattered, trees, shrubs, and even hedges were blown down and uprooted, and the roadways for several miles were strewn with broken branches. The gale was felt with equal violence on the whole range of the western, southern, and eastern coasts, causing excessive destruction of shipping and great loss of life. Nearly 100 vessels were wrecked, and it would fill many columns to give even a brief list of the disasters reported from the outports. The storm appears to have raged with unusual violence at Liverpool, Cardiff, Bristol, Minehead, Burnham, Falmouth, Plymouth, Torquay, Teignmouth, Dawlish, Exeter, Portland, Christchurch, Portsmouth, Brighton, Hastings, Eastbourne, Dover, Yarmouth, Shields, Hartlepool, &c. At most of these places houses were unroofed, and the sea rose so high as to cause great destruction of property in the lower parts of the towns. On the south coast of Devon the turnpike roads were in many places greatly injured by the overflow, and the South Devon railroad was broken in upon by the sea at four different points. On the Chester and Holyhead line also some portions of the rails along the Menai Straits were washed away, and some of the telegraph wires blown down.

Loss of the Royal Charter.—The most lamentable disaster which occurred during the gale of Wednesday was the wreck of this fine iron screw steamer of 2749 tons, belonging to Messrs. Gibbs, Bright & Co., on her voyage home from Australia to Liverpool, with the loss of 469 lives. She sailed from Melbourne on the 26th August, with 388 passengers, and a crew of 112 persons. While the ship was passing Queenstown, on Monday morning, 13 of the passengers landed in a pilot boat. On Tuesday she took on board in St. George's Channel 11 riggers who had been assisting in the working of a ship to Cardiff, and wished to return to Liverpool; so that there were on board at the time of the wreck 498 souls, and of these only 39 were saved. It seems that the ship passed Holyhead on Tuesday evening, and was keeping near the shore of Point Lynas, in the hope of meeting with a pilot when the gale came on. The captain, fearing to run for the Mersey in such a storm, hove-to, and having drifted to Dulas Bay, let go her anchors, keeping her screw working to ease the cables. A rescued passenger states that the vessel rode safely, burning blue lights and rockets, until her masts were cut away, when the screw ceased to work; the cables then parted in quick succession, and she went on the rocks at 2 A.M. on Wednesday, and broke up about 7. The probability is that the wreck fouled the screw. After she struck, a Portuguese sailor swam ashore with a hawser, by which two men were saved, and there was every probability of numbers more reaching land, when the vessel split amidships, and directly afterwards the forward portion divided longitudinally. The sea immediately swept away men, women, and children, and though some few passed by the hawser and some more were washed ashore from different portions of the wreck, the result was that only 39 were saved, and several of these were seriously hurt. Many bodies were subsequently washed ashore, and the rocks were strewed with sovereigns which the passengers had vainly attempted to save. The latest accounts state that the ironwork of the vessel is torn to shreds, the woodwork reduced to chips. The coast is strewed with wool, leather, bedding, and clothing, and the fields above the cliffs are covered with fragments, while the bodies which have been cast ashore are lying in the adjacent church; most of them frightfully mutilated. The bullion chest, which was substantially built of iron and secured to the framing of the ship, and is said to have contained gold to the value of 316,000*l.*, is supposed to have been shattered, from the fact of a gold box having been picked up with the address of a leading banking firm upon it. All the officers perished with the ship, and the last person seen alive on board was Capt. Taylor the commander, who maintained the most rigid order and discipline to the last, and had all the boats in perfect readiness for lowering had circumstances permitted. It was only two days previously, while the ship was off the coast of Ireland, that a sum of money was subscribed for a testimonial to Captain Taylor, and a purse was made up by the lady passengers for the Rev. Mr. Hodge, of East Retford, who zealously discharged the customary religious duties during the voyage, and offered up prayers with the passengers in the crowded saloon of the vessel after she had been driven ashore. The following is a list of the passengers saved:—

W. Moss, Thomas Gundry, H. Carew Taylor, saloon passengers. M. Meaton, second-class; Colin M'Phiel, third-class; John Judge, ditto; William John Ferris, ditto; James M'Capper, ditto; S. Edward Capper, ditto; William Bowden, James Dean, William Russell Bradbury (leg broken), Samuel Grenfell, James Russell, Carl Bartel (maimed), Hagan, John Noon.

The following are among the passengers drowned, but as the list is furnished from recollection by the surviving passengers it is necessarily incomplete:—

Mr., Mrs., and Miss Fowler; Mr., Mrs., Miss Murray, and three children; Mr. Walter Nugent, Mr. Grove, Mr. Molyneux, Mr. Moss, Mr. Tweddale, Mr. Grundy, Mr. M'George, Rev. Mr. Hodge, Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Fenwick and children, Mrs. Bruce, Mr. Gardiner, Mr. Pritchard, Mrs. Hutton, Dr. Hatch, Mr. and Mrs. Pilcher and two children, Mrs. Beams, Dr. Wright, Mr. Emery, Mr. S. J. Henry, M. La Forgue, Mr. Rufford, Mr. Welsh, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Watson, Captain Withers (who had lost a ship on the Feejee Island), Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff and two servants, Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins and four children, Mrs Nahmur (Consul's wife), Mr. and Mrs. Davies, two daughters, and a son, from Tasmania, and a captain who had lost his vessel through a collision with the Red Jacket.

The Builders' Strike.—This contest still continues, accompanied with indications that it is beginning to tell seriously against such of the men as persist in their refusal to resume work. The supplies from the provinces are falling off, and, with the winter setting in, the prospect for the men is very gloomy. The recent returns of the Registrar-General have shown that the mortality among the wives and families of the operatives in the building trades is excessive, and there is too much reason for believing that scores of innocent persons and young children are perishing from sheer want. At a meeting held on Monday night in St. Martin's Hall, Mr. Potter admitted that the dividend paid that day at the Paviours' Arms was smaller than usual, and a resolution was passed appealing to the public for support, the tone of the speakers inducing the impression that they themselves had not confidence in the continuance of pecuniary aid to the extent to which it has hitherto been given them. One of the leading members of the Masons' Society was summoned on Monday to the Clerkenwell Police Office on a charge of inducing a number of men to leave their employment; but some necessary witnesses being absent the hearing of the case was adjourned.

The Great Eastern.—The Lords of the Admiralty have given orders to the authorities of Portsmouth dockyard to lay down moorings for the Great Eastern off Fawley beacon, about four miles down the Southampton-water, where she will have plenty of room to swing freely at all times of tide. The ship is expected to arrive at Southampton from Holyhead early next week, but the impression that Southampton has been fixed on as the port of arrival and departure is incorrect. During the past week the Mayor of Bristol and other official persons connected with that port have been in communication with the directors of the company, with the view of inducing them to make Bristol the head-quarters of the ship. At an interview which took place on Friday Mr. Campbell, the chairman, said they had found that Holyhead was not conveniently situated for making the necessary alterations and that it was now intended to remove the Great Eastern to Southampton, and when she was ready for sea to send her on a trip in the Mediterranean. The question of the port to which she would return would depend entirely upon the result of inquiries as to their relative advantages in the meantime. From the fact of the number of shareholders in Bristol and that district, and the exceedingly favourable report which had been made of the accommodation which could be provided at that port, the Board would be most happy to take the Great Eastern to Bristol on her first return voyage, if, in the mean time, they received satisfactory evidence that Bristol could offer a harbour where she could go with safety, and where she would find those facilities which such a vessel would require.

St. George's in the East.—It appears from a letter read on Thursday at a meeting of the vestry, that the Rev. Mr. King, the rector, leaves to the bishop's decision only two points:—1. The hour of the lecturer's afternoon service. 2. The use of coloured stoles and the chasuble.

Church Rates in the City.—At the Guildhall Police Court on Tuesday, Mr. Tallent, bookseller in Paternoster Row, was summoned before Sir Peter Laurie to show cause why he refused to pay the amount of 17*s.* 6*d.* for a church-rate in the parish of St. Faith the Virgin, under St. Paul's. Mr. Tallent was unable to attend from illness, but his clerk handed in a formal notice from him, stating his objection to the rate, "on account of the Popish practices in the church," and his determination to contest its validity. It appeared from the statements of the churchwarden that the rector of the parish is Mr. Milman, son of the Dean of St. Paul's, who has introduced, at his own expense, the practice of intoning the service, but none of the parishioners attend the church, as they all live out of town. After some discussion Sir Peter Laurie said that they did not want any of the St. George's-in-the-East practices in the City, and Mr. Martin, the chief clerk, said that if the churchwardens would make a rate including only such items as the law recognised as necessary for the decent observance of public worship in the church, then they might come there and enforce their demand, but the application of the rate to other purposes was illegal, and any claim for a rate so applied could not be supported. The summons was then dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the churchwardens being left to their remedy in the Ecclesiastical Court.

The Vernon and Turner Galleries.—Mr. Ruskin has addressed a latter to the Times to relieve himself from any supposed responsibility as to lighting the pictures either of Sir Joshua Reynolds or Turner with gas; "on the contrary," he says, "my experience would lead me to apprehend serious injury to those pictures from such a measure; and it is with profound regret that I have heard of its adoption." He specifies the pictures of Reynolds and Turner because "the combinations of colouring material employed by both these painters are various, and to some extent unknown; and also because the body of their colours shows peculiar liability to crack and to detach itself from the canvas."

British Museum.—The Count de Salis has presented to the Museum his well-known collection of coins, consisting of 14 cabinets, containing altogether 7000 coins. The count, who has devoted many years of his life to the formation of this collection at an expense of about 5000*l.*, has offered his gratuitous services to the trustees to assist in arranging the collection.

Early Snow.—Accounts from the provinces state that on Friday night and Saturday snow fell in the North Riding of Yorkshire, on the hills and coast of Northumberland, in Lancashire, Cheshire, Somersetshire, Gloucestershire, and parts of Breconshire.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's weekly return states that the deaths in the week ending Saturday, Oct. 22, were 910, a number which is nearly the same as that of the previous week, but less (if allowance is made for increase of population) by about 200 than the average return for the third week of October in the 10 years 1849-58. During the week the births of 872 boys and 918 girls, in all 1790 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1533.

Provincial.

Bristol.—Lord Redesdale has addressed a letter to the Poor Law Board questioning the legal and moral right of the Bristol board of guardians to hire out female pauper orphans in a silk mill, at a long distance from the city. It appears that in June last 12 girls were hired to Mr. Smith, silk-throwster, of Blockley, in the Shipton-on-Stour Union, of which Lord Redesdale is the chairman. On this coming to his lordship's knowledge, he wrote to the Poor Law Board questioning the power of the guardians to hire the orphans under their charge to any such service. After dwelling upon the dangers to which the children are subjected by this "sort of infant slave trade," his lordship charges the Bristol guardians with merely considering the pecuniary saving to the union, instead of the good to the children.

Chatham.—The screw line-of-battle ship Irresistible, 80 guns, was launched on Thursday from this dockyard in the presence of many thousand persons, and is to be immediately supplied with her machinery and be got ready for sea. Another line-of-battle ship, to be called the Royal Oak, of 91 guns, is to be laid down on the same slip.

LIVERPOOL.—In consequence of the opposition of a large number of buyers in the Liverpool corn market to the use of the cental for all kinds of grain, a general meeting of the Corn Association was held on the 12th inst., at which two resolutions were proposed, by way of bringing the matter to a final issue. The first proposed simply to rescind the resolution of the 1st of February last establishing the cental as the common weight of the market. This was passed by a large majority. The second came from the original opponents of the cental, and proposed a return to the old system. But this was at once negatived by a large majority. The result therefore was simply to release the members from any pledge to use the cental, and to leave all free to act as they might deem fit. Hence the use of the cental is now very generally abandoned, except for wheat.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—A very solemn and impressive spectacle was presented by the northern towns on Friday, on the occasion of the funeral of Mr. Robert Stephenson in Westminster Abbey. Funeral chimes pealed from the belfries of the parish churches, and with scarcely an exception all the vessels in the Tyne and Wear, and in the Northumberland and Tyne Docks, and in the Sunderland South Dock and Monkwearmouth Dock, had their flags half mast high. At noon, the shops, merchants' offices, banks, and other places of business were closed, and trade ceased in all the busy thoroughfares of Newcastle. About 11 o'clock a long procession of workmen from the factory of Messrs. Stephenson & Co. walked in procession to St. Nicholas Church, where Divine service was performed, the sacred edifice being quite crowded, and a very solemn feeling pervaded the whole assembly. Mr. Stephenson has bequeathed to the Newcastle Infirmary a legacy of 10,000*l.*; to the Literary and Philosophical Society, Newcastle, 7000*l.*; the North of England Mining Institution at Newcastle, 2000*l.*; the Institution of Civil Engineers, 2000*l.*; the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 2000*l.*; and the Society for Providing Additional Curates in Populous Places, 2000*l.*; making a total of 25,000*l.*

PLYMOUTH.—The wreck of a large steamer of foreign build was seen floating off the Bolt Head last week, and has since been washed ashore on the Cornish coast. Captain Eden, R.N., of Plymouth dockyard, immediately proceeded to inspect it; and from his report, which has been forwarded to Lloyd's, it appears that the wreck is that of some foreign steamer which had apparently blown up, and had not been long in the water.

SHEFFIELD.—Two more outrages, attributed to trade disputes, were perpetrated in this town last week. The first case occurred at the house of Mr. James Robinson, an extensive brick manufacturer. A small stone bottle, filled with powder, hobnails, and fragments of glass, and having a lighted fuse attached, was thrown into one of his bedrooms at 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning. Fortunately, owing to the violence with which it was thrown, the bottle broke, scattering the contents before the powder ignited, and consequently no serious damage resulted. During the last two years Mr. Robinson has had a large quantity of unburnt bricks destroyed, a pig killed, a donkey poisoned, and a valuable cow stabbed. All these outrages he attributes to his persisting in employing non-union as well as union men. The victim of the second outrage was a saw-grinder named Helliwell, not connected with the saw-grinders' union. Some powder was placed under his glazing wheel, and, being ignited by sparks caused in glazing, exploded, seriously burning his face and arms. The saw-grinders' union, through their secretary, reprehend the latter outrage, and offer a reward of 10*l.* for information as to the perpetrator.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The court of inquiry into the wreck of the Express re-assembled on Monday, but as the two magistrates who heard the evidence (Mr. Bernard and Captain Engledue) were divided in opinion, and the Board of Trade had made no report, the court returned Captain Mabb his certificate without expressing any opinion, and the proceedings ended without any further result. Mr. Bernard stated that he had forwarded a report of his own to the Board of Trade on the subject.

WASHINGTON.—On Saturday a fatal explosion took place in the Maudlin seam of Washington Old Colliery, by which three pitmen, a boy, and several horses and ponies lost their lives. The after-damp which filled the pit after the explosion made it impossible to descend for the purpose of rendering any assistance, and it was not until Tuesday that the bodies could be recovered, when it was ascertained that they must all have been suffocated by carbonic acid gas. The pit was considered one of the best managed in the district, and only an hour before the accident had been found well ventilated and perfectly free from gas.

WINDSOR.—In consequence of the prevalence of typhus fever among the troops quartered at the barracks, a new inquiry into the sanitary state of this town has been set on foot. At a special meeting of the Board of Health, a few days since, the Mayor stated that, in consequence of a letter he had received from the Privy Council Office, inquiries had been made of the various medical men of the town, including the officers of the Union, the surgeon of the Infirmary, &c., and he was glad to learn that the general health of the town had never been in a more satisfactory condition. He had likewise requested the surveyor to frame a report, showing what had been done in the way of flushing, cleansing, water supply, &c., since he had held office.

Ireland.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRELATES concluded their sittings on Saturday; but it is supposed that several days will elapse before the result is officially announced. In the meantime the Nation undertakes to satisfy the public by giving an outline of what will hereafter be fully expounded in a second pastoral. Mr. Cardwell, it alleges, has evaded giving an answer to the bishops, who, in return, are determined to attack the national education system without delay.

THE CUNARD STEAMERS AT CORK.—It is officially announced that Mr. Cunard has volunteered to permit his steamers to call every fortnight at Queenstown, on their way to and from Boston, and that the first of the line will leave Queenstown with the mails on Sunday, the 6th November.

MR. JOHN MITCHELL, who is now residing in Paris, has commenced a series of letters in a Dublin paper called the Irishman, in which his object is to suggest to the Irish peasantry that France will soon be at war with England in the Mediterranean, and that the opportunity will then have arrived for inducing the Emperor Napoleon to invade Ireland.

THE QUEEN'S COLLEGES.—In spite of the recent pastorals against the progress of mixed education the Queen's Colleges in Ireland are, to say the least, not losing ground, while the two most exposed to ecclesiastical influence are actually making slow but steady way in public confidence. At Galway at the entrance examination, which has just concluded, 31 new students were admitted, being considerably in advance of the corresponding number of last year; and of these 18 are Roman Catholics, while the number of Roman Catholics at this time last year was only 10. At Cork, also, no less than 50 new students were enrolled, being a large increase on last year's numbers. It appears also from Carlow, that though the "Christian Brothers" have superseded the teacher of the National Board in the male school of that city, the nuns of the convent still retain the National Board books in their schools, and continue to use them for the benefit of their pupils.

BANQUET TO LORD BROUGHAM AT EDINBURGH.—On Wednesday evening the citizens of Edinburgh gave a banquet to Lord Brougham under the presidency of the Lord Provost. About 650 sat down to dinner, and about 400 ladies and gentlemen were present as spectators. The Lord Provost having in appropriate language proposed the health of the noble lord, Lord Brougham in reply spoke to the following effect:—

"He considered this invitation and this reception as one of the two greatest honours that had crowned a not very short and a very variegated life. His being chosen to represent the great county of York was the other. He referred to the instances of gross bribery and corruption lately disclosed in England, and expressed his great gratification that in Scotland electoral corruption did not exist at all. Until it was extirpated with a steady, unflinching, and strong hand the constitution of this country would be upon its trial. That it would survive he entertained no doubt, because he entertained no doubt that that corruption would yet be entirely extirpated. He adverted, in affecting terms, to the many changes that had taken place since his last appearance in Edinburgh 25 years ago, and expressed his pain to think that he was the survivor now of nearly all his private friends. One change, however, he found of a more happy description—he had survived those rancours and delusions of party which then to some extent prevailed—those delusions which allowed no merit in an adversary, and admitted no fault in a friend. Referring to the affairs of Italy, he said that whatever motive had originated the late war a certain amount of good had come out of it—a very great step had been made towards the independence of the Italian people; and his hope was to see them under the King of Sardinia, as the only practicable mode of insuring their independence. Alluding to France, he pictured the great tempter holding out before that nation the laurel, the emblem of warlike glory, and expressed his hope that the French would not be deceived by it; and he described the tempter as likewise offering to this country the apple, the emblem of the fruits of the earth, and trying to lull this country into a false security, leading it to abandon its preparations for defence. In this last he knew that the tempter would fail. This country, he said, did not distrust its neighbours, but it trusted to itself. Their duty was to be prepared by sea and land in every way in which an attack was possible, so as to render it impossible not only that the attack should succeed, but that it should be attempted. We did the best both for our neighbour and ourselves by being completely and absolutely prepared for whatever might happen."

BANQUET TO THE 78TH REGIMENT AT NAIRN.—On Tuesday week the 78th Highlanders, who so greatly distinguished themselves in India during the mutiny, especially at Cawnpore and Lucknow, were honoured with a public reception and a banquet at Nairn.

THE LATE WRECK OF THE DUKE OF RICHMOND STEAMER.—The Board of Trade has instructed the Collector of Customs at Aberdeen to institute an inquiry into the circumstances connected with the wreck of this steamer.

Law.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—Murder at Sea.—Charles Anna alias Francisca Antonio Piero Guimaraens, aged 25, a Portuguese was indicted for the wilful murder of Philip Barker, captain of the ship Margaret, upon the high seas, and within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England. The prisoner, upon being asked whether he wished to avail himself of his privilege of being tried by a jury partly composed of foreigners and partly of Englishmen, replied, "No; all Englishmen." An interpreter [illegible] was sworn to interpret the evidence. The particulars of [illegible] have already appeared in our Provincial News, and the evidence left no doubt of the fact that the prisoner committed the murder, the only question for the jury was whether the prisoner was in a state of mind to be responsible criminally for his conduct. Mr. Justice Williams in summing up said that the atrocity of a crime and the apparent absence of motive were not sufficient to justify a jury in acquitting a prisoner on the ground of insanity, and they ought not to do so unless they were perfectly satisfied that at the time the offence was committed the party accused was in such a state of mind as not to be aware of the difference between right and wrong, or the quality and nature of the act he was committing. The jury after deliberating for about 20 minutes found the prisoner guilty of Wilful Murder. Mr. Justice Williams then put on the black cap, and passed sentence of Death in the usual form. The prisoner did not appear in the slightest degree affected by the result of the trial. The Poplar Murder.—George Frost, alias Royal, 31, was placed at the bar on Thursday before the Lord Chief Baron and Mr. Justice Williams, charged with the wilful murder of Zipporah Wright. The Solicitor-General [illegible] on behalf of the Government. It will be remembered from the reports of this case which have already been published that the prisoner was a married man, but had left his wife a considerable time, and lived with the deceased, who passed as his wife. A short time before her death, she had a child, and during her illness following her confinement she suddenly [illegible] of suffering quite inconsistent with the results of [illegible] disease, and therefore leading to the supposition that deceased herself suspected, the prisoner had given her some acrid poison. It was at first supposed that [illegible] cantharides, but Dr. Letheby and other medical men who examined the body were of opinion that the poison [illegible] was croton oil. The trial lasted the whole of Tuesday and yesterday, when Mr. Sleigh for the defence called witnesses to show that deceased was in the habit of using large quantities of soda in her tea, and that the women about her house suffered from sickness and irritation of the stomach which [illegible] had produced. He contended that no reliance could be placed on the medical evidence, and that there was no proof that the prisoner had administered any poison, or that she had died of poison at all. The Lord Chief Baron summed up, and the jury retired at half past 6. At 10 minutes to 7 they returned into Court and delivered a verdict of Not Guilty.

THE LATE ACCIDENT ON THE MIDLAND.—The jury at the inquest on Alderman Maw of Doncaster returned a verdict of Manslaughter against Robert Wilcock, the pointsman, who had been apprehended on a charge of causing the accident at the Sheffield station by neglect. He has accordingly been committed for trial on the coroner's warrant, but admitted to bail.

Obituary.

The Earl of Jersey, who succeeded to the earldom on the death of his father on the 3d inst., died on Monday last at the Royal Crescent Hotel, Brighton, in his 52d year. His lordship had for months past been suffering from consumption, and early last spring repaired to the south of France, but only received temporary relief, and has gradually continued to get weaker since his return home. His lordship was the eldest son of the fifth earl, by the eldest daughter of the 10th Earl of Westmoreland, and heiress of Mr. Child, the wealthy banker of Temple Bar. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, at which University he graduated B.A. in 1830, and M.A. in 1837. Shortly after he attained his majority he entered the House of Commons for Rochester, and in 1831 was elected for Minehead. From 1832 to 1835 he sat for Honiton. At the next general election he unsuccessfully contested Weymouth; he was returned for that borough in 1841, but was unseated on petition. In 1844 he was elected for Cirencester, which he continued to represent up to 1852. On the general election in that year he was defeated by the narrow minority of 4. In politics he was a Conservative; but during the late Sir R. Peel's administration voted in favour of the repeal of the Corn Laws and the subsequent Free Trade measures of that statesman. He married in 1841 the eldest daughter of the late Sir R. Peel, by whom he leaves issue three sons and two daughters, the eldest of whom Victor Albert George, Viscount Villiers, born in 1845, succeeds to the title and estates. The late Earl was a Deputy-Lieutenant of the counties of Oxford and Warwick, and in 1855 was appointed Major of the Oxford Yeomanry Cavalry.

Vice-Admiral the Earl of Waldegrave, C.B., died on the 24th inst. at his residence at Hastings. The deceased William Waldegrave, eighth Earl of Waldegrave, and Viscount Chewton, Baron Waldegrave, and a baronet of the United Kingdom, was the fourth son of the fourth Earl, and was born at Navestock Hall, in Essex, in 1788. He lost his father while in infancy—that nobleman dying while on a visit to the Earl of Aylesford, in Warwickshire, leaving his widow and four sons and one daughter, Lady Maria Waldegrave, subsequently married to Mr. Micklethwait, of Cossy Hall, Norfolk. Of the sons George, the fifth earl, was accidentally drowned at Eton, and was succeeded by John James, the sixth earl, who entered the army, and served in the Peninsular war, and also in the short campaign ending with the battle of Waterloo. The third son, Edward, was also in the military service, and, after sharing in the retreat of Sir John Moore, was drowned in the wreck of the transport in which he was returning to England, on the Manacle Rocks, near Plymouth. William, the fourth son—the subject of this memoir—was educated at Eton, and entering the Navy in 1801, served in the Mediterranean, India, the Channel, and the coast of Spain during the war with France, and was present in several engagements. In 1809 he commanded the Seringapatam on the South American and Pacific stations, and in 1839 commanded the Revenge at the siege of Acre. For his services in the Syrian war he was nominated a Companion of the Bath. In 1841 he was senior officer in the Bay of Tunis, with the Ganges, 84, and the Implacable, 74, under his orders. He obtained the captain's good service pension in 1842, and returned to England in March of the same year. In 1846 he accepted the rank of retired rear-admiral in accordance with his long-expressed opinion that older though still vigorous men should make room for younger men in the service. In the same year he succeeded to the family dignity as eighth Earl of Waldegrave on the death of his nephew. His lordship was twice married, first in 1812 to the eldest daughter of Mr. Samuel Whitbread, by the Lady Elizabeth Grey, and second in 1847 to Mrs. Milward of Hastings, which place became henceforward his principal residence. His eldest son, Viscount Chewton, died on the 8th October, 1854, of wounds received at the battle of the Alma, but left by his wife, daughter of Captain Bastard, R.N., of Sharpham, Devon, two sons, one born in 1851, and another born on the 14th October, 1854, a few days after the death of his father. The eldest of these sons, William Frederick, now in his 8th year, succeeds his grandfather the late earl in his title and estates.

The Dowager Lady Peel, widow of the late Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, died suddenly on Thursday night at her residence, 4, Whitehall Gardens. It appears that she retired to rest at an early hour on Thursday night, apparently in her usual health, but on the lady's maid going into the bedroom yesterday morning her ladyship was found dead in her bed. She was the youngest daughter of the late General Sir John Floyd, Bart., was born in 1795, and married the late Sir R. Peel in 1820.

Captain Lawson, of the 42d Highlanders, died in India on the 18th August, from a wound on the knee received during the suppression of the mutiny. The career of this gallant soldier is worthy of note. He was a native of Lanark, and entered the army in 1837, having before that time been employed in Scotland as a ploughboy. He served as a non-commissioned officer for nearly 16 years, during which period he gained for himself the confidence and respect of his superiors and the esteem of his fellow-soldiers. In 1854 he embarked with the regiment for the Crimea, was present at the Alma, and passed unscathed through all the hardships and perils of that memorable campaign. After Inkermann he received his commission as ensign. In March, 1855, he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant, and for some time previous to the conclusion of the war acted as captain in the late Land Transport Corps. On his return to England, in 1856, he rejoined the 42d, and shortly afterwards received the appointment of instructor of musketry to the regiment. At this time the magistrates and Council of Lanark, his native town, in consideration of his distinguished conduct, resolved to present him with the freedom of the burgh; this honour however he never had an opportunity of personally receiving. The outbreak of the Indian mutiny called him again to the field, and in August, 1857, he left England with the headquarters of the regiment for Calcutta. In 1858 he obtained his commission as captain, and commanded the picket of the 42d, 37 in number, which was engaged in the terrible fight on the banks of the Suarda, on the morning of the 15th January, with upwards of 2000 rebels. The little band of Highlanders defended themselves with extraordinary courage from sunrise to sunset, until relief arrived from General Walpole. Captain Lawson was honourably mentioned in the General's despatches for the manner in which he acquitted himself on that day. Shortly afterwards he received the wound which has now ended his honourable career.

Major Groves, Crown Equerry to her Majesty, died suddenly on Wednesday night, at his residence at the Royal Mews, Pimlico, in his 56th year.

Thursday, Oct. 27.

We have a large supply of Beasts, but choice qualities are not very plentiful. Prices are not much lower for best descriptions. The trade is very slow for Sheep; however, quotations are not much altered. Good Calves in demand, other kinds are lower. From Germany and Holland there are 450 Beasts, 1900 Sheep, and 140 Calves; from Ireland, 15 Beasts; from the northern and midland counties, 900; and 125 Milch Cows from the home counties.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Oct. 24

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was moderate, and tolerably cleared at our former quotations. There was a fair attendance, but the sale of foreign was limited, and its value unaltered. Barley sells at last week's prices, with a good demand for the malting qualities. Beans and Hog Peas are unaltered in value; of white Peas there is a considerable arrival from the Continent, and they are a dull sale at a decline of 2s. per qr. The Oat trade is quiet at the rates of last week.

Friday, Oct. 28.

The weather during the last eight days has been variable and unusually severe (10° of frost). The Wheat trade in the chief market of the kingdom has been quiet but firm, and it now appears tolerably certain that the American farmers will not sell their stocks this autumn at prices which will admit of any important exportation thence; indeed, in some parts the crop has turned out badly, and there are districts which are now drawing supplies instead of exporting. Great complaints also reach us of the keeping of Potatoes both in England and Ireland. These facts must tend to support prices in this country through the winter. The weather has not been without effect on Spring Corn, and all descriptions are held for very full rates, each commanding a slight advance in several markets. In the Flour trade we observe no alteration. The arrivals from Southern Europe are considerable this week. A very large business has been transacted, the sales comprising Taganrog Ghirka Wheat at 44s. to 44s. 9d., Odessa Ghirka at 42s. 11d. to 42s. 6d., and Berdiansk at 44s. 6d. to 45s., all per 492 lbs.; Odessa Maize at 29s 3d. to 30s. 9d., Galatz at 31s. 1½d. to 31s. 6d., both per 492 lbs.; Odessa Barley at 23s. 4½d. to 24s. 3d. per 400 lbs.; Odessa Oats at 18s. and Egyptian Beans at 33s. per qr imp. The arrivals of Barley (English and foreign) this week are large, of all other grain moderate. The little English Wheat on sale was cleared at Monday's prices; there was a small attendance, and the demand for foreign most trifling; holders, however insisted on fully former rates. Barley is firm, with a good demand for fine malting qualities. Oats are held for full prices, but the business doing was not extensive.

Arrivals from Oct. 24 to Oct. 28.

Liverpool, Tuesday, October 25.—There was a fair attendance of millers and dealers at our Corn Exchange this morning, and we had a more general consumptive demand for both Wheat and Flour at the rates current last market day. Indian Corn sold to a fair extent at full prices. Oats must be noted 1d. per bushel and Oatmeal 6d. per load dearer than this day se'nnight. Beans, Peas, and Barley all brought extreme rates.

Friday, Oct. 28.—Grain market moderately attended, and business very quiet. Prices of all articles about the same as on Tuesday. Wheat and Flour freely offered, but prices are firm.

IMPROVEMENTS IN HEATING, &c.

MUSGRAVE'S PATENT SLOW-COMBUSTION STOVE, for Warming Public Buildings, Hall, Shops, Conservatories, Factories, Drying Rooms, &c. Will burn in Churches from Saturday till Sunday evening, avoiding attention during the hours of worship. In Halls will burn day and night for weeks, with little care. Capable of warming a large apartment for 24 hours, at a cost of 3*d.*; and deserving of special attention, because of its safety, healthfulness, durability, and extreme simplicity. This Stove is the nearest approach to warming by hot water.

MUSGRAVE'S PATENT STABLE FITTINGS AND HARMLESS LOOSE BOXES have obtained the award of a large Council Medal from the R. I. A. Society for the following improvements:—1st, The Horse cannot injure himself or others in the same stable if he breaks loose in his stall. 2d, He cannot waste the hay. 3d, He can have cut or uncut hay at pleasure. 4th, He has clean water always before him. 5th, A pure and wholesome atmosphere is secured. 6th, The whole fittings are stronger than usual, without increase in price, and there is no risk of infection.

The Loose Box is really what its name denotes, and the most spirited Horse may be turned into it without danger.

MUSGRAVE'S PATENT IRON COW-HOUSE FITTINGS, as approved by the Board of Works, adopted in the Ulster Model Farm, and by many of the most eminent Stock Breeders in the Kingdom, are made wholly of iron, very durable, cleanly, and attractive in appearance. The fodder is always fresh, being freely exposed to the air, removed from the breath of the animal, and separated from the roots or damp food. The range of Troughs can be quickly filled with water for the use of the Cows, or for washing out in case of epidemic, and the cost is very moderate.

These inventions being distinguished for strength, simplicity, and practical usefulness will repay public inquiry.

MUSGRAVE BROTHERS are also Makers of Wire Fencing, Hurdles, Field and Entrance Gates, Corn Rick Stands, Conservatories, Hot-water Apparatus, Verandahs, Rural Bridges, &c.; and their works being favourably placed for cheap labour and materials, they can offer corresponding advantages in price.

MUSGRAVE'S Patent Field Gates have gained the 1st Prize from the R. I. A. Society for strength, durability, and cheapness.

For particulars address MUSGRAVE BROTHERS, Ann Street Iron Works, Belfast.

WHITE AND SOUND TEETH are indispensable to personal attraction and to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food. ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of oriental ingredients, is of inestimable value in improving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath sweet and pure. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a pearl-like whiteness. As the most efficient and fragant aromatic purifier of the breath, teeth, and gums ever known, ROWLANDS' Odonto has for a long series of years occupied a distinguished place at the toilets of the sovereigns and the nobility throughout Europe: while the general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is universally held. Price, 2*s.* 9*d.* per box. CAUTION.—The words "ROWLANDS' Odonto" are on the Label, and "A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved on the Government stamp affixed on each box.—Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—CONSUMPTION is almost invariably preceded by indigestion, debility, cough, loss of appetite, and flushes. The alterative and tonic influence of HOLLOWAY'S invaluable remedies operates like a charm in subduing these formidable symptoms. A course of these purifying Pills should at once be commenced, and at the same time HOLLOWAY'S Ointment should be well rubbed at least twice a day over the back and chest. The Ointment is more effective when used after sponging with warm brine and well drying. The conjoint effect of this treatment is marvellous, a change for the better is observed almost a week, and the improvement steadily progresses. The appetite returns, the shortness of breath ceases, and the harassing cough soon vanishes altogether.

FINE HEAD OF HAIR.

THE BEARD, WHISKERS, AND MOUSTACHIOS.

ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL is universally in high repute as the most successful article ever known in the growth, restoration, and in improving and beautifying the human hair, proved beyond question by its unprecedented results for more than half a century past, and when every other specific has failed. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey, strengthens weak hair, cleanses it from scurf and dandriff, and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. Its invaluable properties have obtained the patronage of Royalty and the aristocracy throughout Europe; while its introduction into the nursery of Royalty, and the high esteem in which it is universally held, with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits. Price 3*s*. 6*d*. and 7*s*.; family bottles (equal to four small), 10*s*. 6*d*.; and double that size, 21*s*.—CAUTION: on the wrapper of each bottle are the words, ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, &c., in white letters; and their signature, "A. ROWLAND & SONS," in red ink.—Sold at 20, Hatton Garden, London, E.C.; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

PERFECT FREEDOM FROM COUGHS is secured by DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—To singers and public speakers they are invaluable for clearing and strengthening the voice. They have a pleasant taste. Price 1*s*. 1½*d*., 2*s*. 9*d*., and 11*s*. per box. Sold by all medicine vendors.

HEALTH WITHOUT PHYSIC.—Nervousness cured by a novel and successful mode of treatment, discovered in America. The most convincing proof of the efficacy of this wonderful remedy, with other details, will be sent to any address on receipt of one stamp.—Address, Mr. HILL, 27, Alfred Place, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS have been used freely by millions of human beings, of both sexes and all ages, in every part of the world; and while the public press has teemed with authenticated cases of extraordinary cures in a vast variety of disease (such as Indigestion, Scorbutic Eruptions, and Liver Complaints), there is not a public record of a single case in which their use has been attended with a bad effect. None, when using HOLLOWAY'S Ointment and Pills, need suffer the hope of cure to be counterbalanced by the fear of injury. They are peculiarly mild in their operations, and yet they never fail to effect a complete and permanent cure. Whilst using them no special restrictions are requisite.

BERDOE'S WINTER CAPES AND OVER-COATS effectually exclude rain, yet freely admit air. The extensive sale of these first class garments is their best recommendation.—WALTER BERDOE, Tailor, 96, New Bond Street, W., and 69, Cornhill (north side), E.C.

HEAL AND SON'S EIDER-DOWN QUILTS, from One Guinea to Ten Guineas. Also GOOSE-DOWN QUILTS, from 8*s*. 6*d*. to 2*l*. 2*s*. List of prices and sizes sent free by post. HEAL & SON'S New Illustrated Catalogue of Bedsteads and Priced List of Bedding also sent post free.

News of the Week.

THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH has addressed a letter to the KING OF SARDINIA, in which he definitively lays down the principles on which he is prepared to settle the Italian question. HIS MAJESTY proposes that Italy shall be composed of several independent States, united by a Federal bond, each State to adopt a particular representative system and salutary reforms; the Confederation to ratify the principle of Italian nationality; to have but one flag, one system of Customs, and one currency; the directing centre to be at Rome, and composed of representatives named by the Sovereigns from the lists prepared by the Chambers, in order that the influence of the reigning families suspected of a leaning to Austria may be counteracted by the element resulting from election. The Emperor proposes that the honorary Presidency of the Confederacy shall be vested in the POPE; that Parma and Piacenza shall be ceded to Sardinia; that the Duchess of PARMA shall be called to Modena; that Tuscany, augmented perhaps by a portion of territory, shall be restored to the Grand Duke FERDINAND; and that Austria shall be called upon to recognise Mantua and Peschiera as federal fortresses, and to complete the nationality of Venetia as a purely Italian province by giving her a separate representation and an Italian army. Accounts from Turin state that this letter has been very unfavourably received in Northern and Central Italy. The arrangements which it proposes have failed to give satisfaction to any party, and it is considered probable that, if an attempt were made to carry them into effect, they would rather add to, than diminish, the complications in which the Italian question is already involved.

Accounts from Madrid announce that a circular was addressed by the Spanish Government to the Diplomatic corps on Saturday, informing the foreign Powers that Tangiers, Tetuan, and Larrache had been declared in a state of blockade. The Paris papers state that though France does not actually co-operate with Spain in these operations the French army under General MARTIMPREY has invaded the interior of the empire and seized the defile of Ain-Tacouralt, in revenge for the outrages committed by the Moors on the frontier of Algeria.

Advices from New York inform us that the insurrection at Harper's Ferry has been suppressed without much loss of life. There is no longer any doubt as to the real character of the outbreak. Papers have been found in the possession of the prisoners which show that it was intended to be the commencement of a negro rising throughout the slave states, and that several well-known abolitionists had furnished the necessary funds. The whole affair had been organised with considerable deliberation and skill, and a constitution and code of rules had been drawn up, to which the conspirators were required to accede. Apprehensions of a further outbreak were current in the neighbourhood of Harper's Ferry at the departure of the mail, and the citizens were organising companies for their defence. The news of the insurrection had also caused great excitement and alarm in Washington, and precautions had been taken in case of an outbreak occurring in that city. The San Juan difficulty had been the subject of discussion at several meetings of the Cabinet, and it had been finally determined to take no further action in the matter until the receipt of despatches from General SCOTT. The latest news states that Lord LYONS had received despatches expressing the satisfaction entertained by the British Government at the conciliatory course which Mr. BUCHANAN had adopted in sending General SCOTT to the scene of the dispute.

Home News.

THE COURT.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the royal family continue at Windsor Castle. On Thursday week the Duke of Cambridge, the French Ambassador and Countess de Persigny, and the Right Hon. Sidney and Mrs. Herbert arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Friday morning the Queen walked in the Home Park. The Princesses Helena and Louisa rode in the riding-house. The Prince Consort, accompanied by the Duke of Cambridge and the Count de Persigny, went out shooting. In the afternoon the Queen and Prince Consort visited the Duchess of Kent on her arrival at Frogmore. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the Home Park, and visited the Duchess of Kent at Frogmore. The Duke of Cambridge, the French Ambassador and Countess de Persigny, and the Right Hon. Sidney and Mrs. Herbert left the castle. The Queen Marie Amélie and the Prince and Princess de Joinville visited her Majesty. On Sunday morning the Queen, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, and Prince Arthur attended Divine service in the private chapel; the Dean of Windsor performed the service and administered the Sacrament. On Monday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, walked and drove in the Home Park, and visited the Duchess of Kent. In the afternoon the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty. On Tuesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, walked in the grounds of the castle. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Alice, drove out and visited the Duchess of Kent. On Wednesday morning the Queen, with Princess Helena, walked and drove in the Home Park. The Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty. In the afternoon the Queen drove out, accompanied by the Princesses Alice and Louisa. On Thursday morning the Queen and Prince Consort walked and drove in the Home Park. The Grand Duchess Marie of Russia and the Duke of Leuchtenburg visited the Queen from London. In the afternoon her Majesty drove out in the park, accompanied by the Grand Duchess and the Duke. Their Imperial Highnesses afterwards returned to London. The Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty.

THE PRINCE CONSORT has been confined to the castle for several days during the week by indisposition from a cold, and the usual attendance of the military and private bands in the evening has on this account been dispensed with. His Royal Highness was sufficiently recovered on Thursday to take exercise in the Home Park.

ARRIVAL OF THE PERSIAN EMBASSY.—Hussan Aly Khan, Minister Plenipotentiary from the Shah of Persia to the Courts of England, France, and Belgium, arrived at Claridge's Hotel on Wednesday from the Continent, for the purpose of presenting his credentials to the Queen. His Excellency will remain six weeks in this country, and then proceed to Brussels, for the purpose of presenting an autograph letter from the Shah to the King of the Belgians, and of arranging the terms of a large contract of firearms for the Persian army.

THE ARMY.—The colonelcy of the 56th Foot, vacant by the death of the Earl of Westmoreland, has been conferred on Lieut.-General Home.

CONVOCATION.—The Convocation of the prelates and clergy of the province of Canterbury was prorogued on Friday in the Jerusalem Chamber, pursuant to the Royal Writ, under a commission from the Archbishop, to Friday, December 15.

VOLUNTEER CORPS.—The progress made in the formation of rifle and artillery corps throughout the kingdom since we noticed the subject on the 17th September has been so rapid that we have now to add the following important towns and districts to the list of places in which companies had then been formed:—Aberdeen, Bath, Bridgewater, Beverley, Burnham, Burton-on-Trent, Blackheath, Brixton, Chester, Camborne, Charlestown, Chorley, Camberwell, Clapham, Devonport, Devizes, Doncaster, Dunbar, Gateshead, Glasgow, Greenlaw, Haddington, Halifax, Hamilton, Hereford, Handsworth, Huddersfield, Hull, Holloway, Hornsey, Highgate, Harrow, Hounslow, Islington, Isleworth, Kensington, Kingsclere, Lancaster, Leamington, Leeds, Leith, Leicester, Longton, Long Sutton, Marlow, Malvern, Nottingham, Northampton, North Walsham, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Oxford, Oxford University, Oundle, Preston, Peterborough, Perth, Portsmouth, Reading, Retford, Rye, St. George's Hanover Square, St. Pancras, Sydenham, Streatham, Skipton, Southport, Spalding, Swansea, Twickenham, Tenbury, Towcester, Torquay, Truro, Wells, Wellington, Whittlesea, Windsor, Walham Green, Woodbridge, Woodbury, Wolverley, Wolverhampton, and York. Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Napier has addressed a letter to the Times for the purpose of correcting what he calls the "mischievous tendency" of a remark made by one of the speakers at a recent agricultural meeting at Dorking, to the effect that "no man of the Surrey Rifle Volunteers would hide behind a bush or tree." He says:—

"The art of hiding behind trees and bushes, rocks, sticks, and stones, is the very essence of modern warfare. The teaching regular soldiers how to move in masses is an absolutely necessary foundation to support the superstructure of real warfare, which is, in fact, this very hiding behind sticks and stones. A great deal is said about bayonet charges and solid onsets of heavy columns, but much less of that takes place than is supposed by men who only read of war; three-fourths of every battle between regular armies depend upon the stick and stone practice, and the whole of a battle, as between volunteer rifle corps and regular troops, will depend upon the former's skill in hiding. This is called light infantry work—a very applicable name in the days when heavy armour was worn by the main body of pikemen, and lightly armed troops were employed for the more fatiguing work of covering the marches of the heavy body; but now that all soldiers are armed alike they should all be taught alike, and skirmishing well is, I say again, three-fourths of a battle. But I find that the making men good shots is placed above the art of manœuvring irregular corps. It should be just the reverse. To be a good shot is a very good thing, but is of less importance than the art—using a slang expression—of 'bringing the shooters to the scratch.' This is much the most difficult, also; for Englishmen are almost sure to have a natural disposition to fire well, and with very little teaching, having their rifles constantly in hand, will become good marksmen. Still, the more teaching the better, provided the higher branch of their business be not neglected. An invading enemy's column must generally march along the main roads; it will therefore be well for volunteer officers, either singly or with their companies, to examine all the roads leading through their county upon London or any other great town, and thus ascertain all the points of advantage offered for hiding behind sticks and stones; and to trees and bushes should be added railroads, banks, houses, public or private, bridges, &c., from whence their rifle balls will pitch into the enemy's columns. All ranges are good, but the longest range is best here, because it will give time for the rifleman to retire from the enemy's sharpshooters, and to find a new stick or stone for hiding. And be it remarked that, in examining the county, our volunteers should look well to the line of their retreat, choosing that which will be the most difficult country for the enemy's riflemen to follow, or that which will lead the enemy towards the rear of his line of march, and that, also, which will enable the volunteer most readily to join other volunteer corps acting in the same way. Thus they will inevitably enforce delay on the enemy, who cannot advance until he recalls his skirmishers, or they will be left behind to be overwhelmed by the accumulating numbers of our riflemen. Accumulation in this case will be most efficacious, but the forming large bodies of riflemen to move about in masses under the command of one man cannot be too strongly deprecated; it will be entirely opposed to the vital principle of rifle warfare, and will only make bad regulars instead of good irregulars. It is not meant, however, that there should not be commanding officers of large bodies, for that will be essential to concert and combination; but in the actual fighting and minor movements small bodies only should be employed; the seeking or declining a fight should be left entirely to the inferior commanders with small bodies, whose intelligence would thus be very soon awakened to what was right, and those endowed with a natural talent for war would very soon be distinguished and looked to both by their friends and enemies. I feel sure that with this system England may be successfully defended against any numbers, but I do not think London can be defended so easily; it is too near the coast, and there must be for its defence combinations between the regular army outside and the metropolitan volunteers inside, who must be taught how to occupy lines of houses, and docks, and canals, and bridges; and the best of those lines should now be examined and marked out upon maps for the instruction of the City volunteers, if any should be enrolled. For my part, I think all able to bear arms should be enrolled in time. I hope it will be so, for assuredly a very dangerous crisis is impending."

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The following letter on the settlement of the Italian question was addressed by the Emperor of the French to King Victor Emmanuel on the 20th inst.:—

"Monsieur mon Frère—I write to-day to your Majesty in order to set forth to you the present situation of affairs, to remind you of the past, and to settle with you the course which ought to be followed for the future. The circumstances are grave; it is requisite to lay aside illusions and sterile regrets, and to examine carefully the real state of affairs. Thus, the question is not now whether I have done well or ill in making peace at Villafranca, but rather to obtain from the treaty results the most favourable for the pacification of Italy and for the repose of Europe. Before entering on the discussion of this question, I am anxious to recall once more to your Majesty the obstacles which rendered every definitive negotiation and every definitive treaty so difficult. In point of fact, war has often fewer complications than peace. In the former, two interests only are in presence of each other—the attack and the defence: in the latter, on the contrary, the point is to reconcile a multitude of interests—often of an opposite character. This is what actually occurred at the moment of the peace. It was necessary to conclude a treaty that should secure in the best manner possible the independence of Italy, which should satisfy Piedmont and the wishes of the population, and yet which should not wound the Catholic sentiment or the rights of the Sovereigns in whom Europe felt an interest. I believed then that, if the Emperor of Austria wished to come to a frank understanding with me, with the view of bringing about this important result, the causes of antagonism which for centuries had divided these two empires would disappear, and that the regeneration of Italy would be effected by common accord, and without further bloodshed. I now state what are, in my opinion, the essential conditions of that regeneration:—Italy to be composed of several independent States, united by a federal bond. Each of these States to adopt a particular representative system and salutary reforms. The Confederation to then ratify the principle of Italian nationality; to have but one flag, but one system of Customs, and one currency. The directing centre to be at Rome, which should be composed of representatives named by the Sovereigns from a list prepared by the Chambers, in order that, in this species of Diet, the influence of the reigning families suspected of a leaning towards Austria should be counterbalanced by the element resulting from election. By granting to the Holy Father the honorary Presidency of the Confederation, the religious sentiment of Catholic Europe would be satisfied, the moral influence of the Pope would be increased throughout Italy, and would enable him to make concessions in conformity with the legitimate wishes of the population. Now the plan which I had formed at the moment of making peace may still be carried out if your Majesty will employ your influence in promoting it. Besides, a considerable advance has been already made in that direction. The cession of Lombardy with a limited debt is an accomplished fact. Austria has given up her right to keep garrisons in the strong places of Piacenza, Ferrara, and Commachio. The rights of the Sovereigns have, it is true, been reserved, but the independence of Central Italy has also been guaranteed, inasmuch as all idea of foreign intervention has been formally set aside; and, lastly, Venetia is to become a province purely Italian. It is the real interest of your Majesty, as of the Peninsula, to second me in the development of this plan, in order to obtain from it the best results; for your Majesty cannot forget that I am bound by the treaty, and I cannot, in the Congress which is about to open, withdraw myself from my engagements. The part of France is traced beforehand. We demand that Parma and Piacenza shall be united to Piedmont, because this territory is, in a strategical point of view, indispensable to her. We demand that the Duchess of Parma shall be called to Modena; that Tuscany, augmented perhaps by a portion of territory, shall be restored to the Grand Duke Ferdinand; that a system of moderate liberty shall be adopted in all the states of Italy. That Austria shall frankly disengage herself from an incessant cause of embarrassment for the future, and that she shall consent to complete the nationality of Venetia, by creating not only a separate representation and administration, but also an Italian army. We demand that the fortresses of Mantua and Peschiera shall be recognised as federal fortresses; and, lastly, that a Confederation based on the real wants, as well as on the traditions of the Peninsula, to the exclusion of every foreign influence, shall consolidate the fabric of the independence of Italy. I shall neglect nothing for the attainment of this great result. Let your Majesty be convinced of it, my sentiments will not vary; and, so far as the interests of France are not opposed to it, I shall always be happy to serve the cause for which we have combated together. Palace of St. Cloud, 20th October, 1859."

It was reported yesterday in Paris that the French and English Governments have completely agreed on the bases of the Congress, which is to be held at Brussels, and that all that remains to be settled is the official notification from the English Government. The Moniteur of Sunday contains an article giving an account of the attacks of the Moors on the French territory during the months of August and September last, and stating that an expedition having been decided on, General Martimprey has energetically commenced the campaign by occupying the defile of Ain-Tacouralt, without serious loss. Beni-Snassen has since submitted to the French, accepting conditions of peace of a most severe character, and the expedition is pursuing the other tribes. A semi-official communicated article says that "the statement that France has supplied Spain with resources for operating against Morocco is not correct. France does not co-operate with Spain in her operations against Morocco." The Duke of Padua has retired from the post of Minister of the Interior on account of ill health, and has been succeeded by M. Billault. The Emperor and Empress arrived on Tuesday evening at Compiègne, and were received with much cheering by the people. The Grand Duchess Marie of Russia will visit their Majesties during their sojourn at Compiègne. Prince and Princess Metternich, Lord and Lady Cowley, and Count Walewski are among the guests invited to remain at Compiègne from the 7th to the 13th of November. The Queen of Holland and the Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden have arrived at Nice. Prince Napoleon arrived at the Palais Royal on Thursday week on his return from England, and is said to have been highly gratified with the attention he received from all classes of persons with whom he came in contact in this country. A great fire took place on Friday at the Palace of the Luxembourg. The Chamber of the Senate was completely destroyed, and four persons were dangerously injured. The galleries, the museum, the library, the Throne-room, the archives, the historical apartments, &c., are all saved. It is stated by the Havre papers that the King of Abyssinia has made over to France the isle and port of Massenah in the Red Sea, and that the French Government has resolved on converting it into a naval station, in imitation of the English occupation of the island of Perim. The Moniteur of Monday contained a notification that the Correspondant had received a first warning for an article by the Count de Montalembert entitled "Pope Pius IX. and France in 1849 and 1859." It stated that the reasons for this warning were—that in condemning the war carried on by France in Italy as having caused the annihilation of the temporal authority of the Pope, the article had quite distorted the results of the war, and calumniated the policy of the Emperor, and was also insulting to the nations allied with France, while the comparison which the writer of the article designedly and offensively made between the names of Machiavelli and those of Napoleon III. and the King of Sardinia was wanting in that respect which was due to the Emperor. The Ami de la Religion also received a first warning for having published Count de Montalembert's article in its columns. It has since been announced that as M. de Montalembert has republished the article in a pamphlet, he is again to be prosecuted for "exciting to hatred and contempt of the government." The following are extracts from this article:—

"As for England, I admit without difficulty all the accusations alleged against her for the part she has played in Italy. More than ever I have thought it right to express in these pages the embarrassment and the annoyance one feels in speaking the truth on the faults and vices of England for fear of being confounded (at a period when the art of confounding is very willingly practised) with her stupid and brawling detractors, who attack in her only liberty, dignity, and political vitality, and who believe they defend Catholicity by maintaining that people are more happy, prouder, and more free in Naples than in London, simply because they work less at the foot of Mount Vesuvius than on the banks of the Thames! But one has less pain in overcoming this embarrassment and this annoyance when he is, as I am, and when he remains, the sincere friend and passionate admirer—I have perhaps the right to say the well-known confessor to the manly virtues and glorious institutions which have placed England in the high position she occupies. She must take care not to fall from that height. She will assuredly not long remain on it if she continue to follow in the affairs of Europe the tortuous and immoral policy which characterises her attempts at action in Italy. At first to do her utmost to prevent the war; to take when war is once declared no part direct or indirect in it; but the moment peace is made to intervene with an arrogance and a persistance which the noblest sacrifices on her part would hardly justify; to intervene in order to envenom all the difficulties and to increase all the dangers—such a part has but one name—it is ignoble! It is true that since the sensible and honourable despatches of Lord Malmesbury before the opening of the war, and the recent harangue of Lord John Russell at Aberdeen, a change of Ministry has taken place. Twenty-one Catholic deputies of Ireland, the masters of the majority in a new Parliament, have had at a moment the most critical for the Papacy the fine idea of transferring power from the hands of Lord Derby and a Ministry essentially Conservative, moderate, and full of good will towards the Catholics, to those of Lord Palmerston, whom every one knows, and Lord John Russell, who distinguished himself among all the statesmen of England by the violence of his invectives against the religion which is professed by 150 millions of Christians and 10 millions of British subjects; and of Mr. Gladstone, who, I regret to say, placed himself by his last tirade against Pius IX. on a level with Lord John. But, as has been already observed with respect to France, nations are, and continue to be, participators of the foreign policy of their Governments. Whatever be the changes that have occurred in the English Ministry, all England bears, and will bear, the moral responsibility of the tergiversations, the perfidies, and the violence of her leaders. England is alarmed at her isolated and menaced condition in contemporaneous Europe. She is right to be so alarmed. In spite of the heroism displayed by her children against the insurgents of India, she feels instinctively that the days of Nelson and Wellington, of Burke and of Chatham, have passed away, and she deplores it. She would do better to deplore the gradual destruction of public and social spirit which produced her great men. But a day will come, perhaps will soon come, but still too soon for the friends of liberty and civilisation, when she shall find what matchless folly she has committed in arraying against her with all the animosities, all the rancours, all the jealousies which she excites, and which she aggravates every day, the just resentment and the filial anguish of 100,000,000 of Catholics." * * * "God keep me from wishing to offend honest and sincere, but deluded people, who have seen in the war in Italy a work of liberal emancipation! We make allowances for their hopes and their illusions; we do not confound them with the stupid or culpable revolutionists who have substituted an unfortunate enterprise, and a question impossible of solution, for the great and legitimate cause of Italian independence. But we must declare that, if Italy had really understood her mission and her glory; if, instead of decreeing a statue to cunning, to deceit, to political depravity, personified in Machiavelli, she had remained faithful to the inspirations of the Foscolos, the Manzonis, and the Balbos, the original and real promoters of her modern patriotism, she would have set apart, and beyond all question, the two-fold majesty of the Holy See."

SPAIN.—Preparations are actively making in every branch of the War Department for the expedition against Morocco. On Saturday a circular was addressed to the Diplomatic corps, informing the foreign Powers that Tangiers, Tetuan, and Larrache have been declared in a state of blockade by the Spanish Government. The Staff of General O'Donnell was to leave Madrid about the 3rd or 5th inst. The Queen intended giving to the expedition a flag bearing the image of the Virgin. The newly-born child of the Infanta Dona Amelia and Prince Adalbert of Bavaria had been baptised with great pomp in the Royal Palace, the Queen and King acting as sponsors, the latter as a representative of the King of Bavaria. The Queen has conferred the honours and prerogatives of Infante of Spain on the Duke of Montpensier, her sister's husband. The Archbishops of Tarragona and Burgos and the Bishops of Avila and Barcelona have published pastoral letters ordering prayers to be offered up for the Pope; and their example was to be followed by other prelates. The Spanish battery of Tarifa has lately fired shot at several English, Dutch, Belgian, and Danish vessels which have passed it.

BELGIUM.—On Sunday week a fire burnt down one of the wings of the Royal Arsenal at Antwerp. Several persons lost their lives, and others were injured. It is not known how the fire was occasioned.

SWITZERLAND.—Despatches from Zurich state that the treaty between France and Sardinia was expected to be signed on Wednesday or Thursday, and the triple one in two or three days afterwards.

PRUSSIA.—The project of reorganising the army, which had been for some time under consideration, was signed by the Prince Regent on the 28th ult., exactly as proposed by the Minister at War.

RUSSIA.—A letter from St. Petersburg announces that Schamyl has left that city for Moscow. He was so ill that two servants had to lift him into the carriage. An exhibition of agricultural products is to take place in St. Petersburg early next year. A special committee has been appointed to make, in conjunction with the Economic Society, all the arrangements called for by such an occasion. This committee is composed of Admiral Lutke, Baron Wrangel, Prince B. Galitzin, and several other gentlemen. Besides this industrial competition, it is probable that St. Petersburg will have a National Statistical Congress.

ITALY.—The letter of the Emperor of the French to the King of Sardinia on the Italian question has caused great astonishment in Northern and Central Italy, and the arrangements which it proposes are said to have produced a very bad effect. It is reported from Turin that the Pope has threatened to launch a bull of excommunication against the King of Sardinia, and that the King has intimated his intention if necessary to accept the struggle, and embrace another religion, advising the people to follow his example. Garibaldi arrived at Turin on the 28th ult., in compliance with the summons from the King. He was enthusiastically received everywhere along the road, especially at Voghera, where, in addressing the multitude, he said:—"With a King like Victor Emmanuel, with an army like ours, and with a people like you, Italy should not stop until she has freed the last inch of her soil from the heel of the foreigner!" It is said, however, that his interview with the King was not satisfactory to either party. Garibaldi is said to have declared frankly that Italy was betrayed, and that he should put himself at the head of the revolution; and the King is said to have replied that he hoped he would not commit such an absurdity, but that, if he did so, there was no alternative but to employ force to prevent it. Accounts from Venice of the 2d inst. state that on the occasion of the reopening of the Opera a noisy demonstration has taken place in that city. Brigandage continues in the Venetian provinces. Several persons have been arrested in Verona by Hungarian soldiers for distributing revolutionary prints.—The Turin papers state upon what they consider good authority that 40,500 inhabitants of the Venetian territory have emigrated since January last. The elections of the members of the Municipalities at Florence and other places in Tuscany have terminated without any result, on account of almost all the electors having abstained from voting. The National Assembly has been convoked for the 7th of November. A conspiracy has been discovered at Florence. A proclamation was issued to which the conspirators appended the names of Baron Ricasoli, Count Ridolfi, and other Ministers, announcing to the people that events rendered imminent the restoration of Ferdinand V., and that annexation to Sardinia was manifestly impossible. It exhorted the Tuscans to resignation, and stated that the Ministers were prepared to resign their powers into the hands of the Grand Duke's representatives. This document was, on a fixed day, to have been posted up in all the towns of Tuscany, and scattered by thousands over the country. A Tuscan agent at Rome warned the Government of what was going forward, and enabled them to seize a packet of papers that threw full light on the plot. Ten or 12 persons were arrested on suspicion of being concerned in this conspiracy, but they have since been quietly set at liberty. The Pope has accepted the principle of the reforms that have been suggested to him by the Emperor Napoleon, and has stated to the French Ambassador that he is ready to grant them after the insurgents in the Romagna have returned to their allegiance, which he presumes they will do after the restoration of the Grand Dukes. The Bologna papers contradict the news of the arrest of the Bishop of Rimini, and state that three monks have been arrested in consequence of serious accusations against them. Advices from Naples to the 27th ult. state that General Filangieri has again resumed the direction of the Ministry of War. The full strength of the army of the Abruzzi has been made up, and has been provisioned. This army retains its character of a corps of observation. According to advices from Sicily the insurrection in that island has not ceased. The insurgents have withdrawn into the mountains. The brothers Mantrichi are at the head of the movement. Reinforcements of troops are continually despatched by the Neapolitan Government to quell the insurrection. Numerous arrests have taken place at Palermo, Cassano, and Messina.

MOROCCO.—Accounts from Tangiers state that war with Spain being now considered certain, a panic has seized the European inhabitants, and the people of the city were flying in all directions from the dread of the Kabyle tribes that had entered in order to defend the city from attack. The Governor was indefatigable in using his greatest efforts to prevent pillage, and the various European representatives had still their flags hoisted over the Cousular houses. The most respectable Moors of the city had succeeded in removing the greatest portion of their goods into the interior for safety. Nearly 3000 fugitives, including Christians, Jews, and Moors, have already arrived at Gibraltar; and British vessels of war have sailed for Mogadore and Tetuan to bring away all persons who may wish to leave.

TURKEY.—Advices from Constantinople of the 26th ult. state that in the night following the delivery of the judgment on the persons concerned in the recent conspiracy, a placard threatening the Sultan and his Ministers with terrible reprisals, if a hair of the head of the condemned were injured, was stuck up at the gate of the palace of the Grand Vizier, and another of a like kind at that of his counsellor. A similar menace was also addressed direct to the Sultan, together with a letter couched in very respectful terms, which warned his Majesty that it was of urgent importance, in order to prevent the horrors of a general rising—first, to exercise clemency to the conspirators; secondly, to dismiss all the Ministers; thirdly, to put down abuses and frauds; and fourthly, to reform the finances of the State. In addition to this Fuad Pasha, the new Grand Vizier, on taking office insisted that the conspirators should not be executed. To this the Sultan readily gave his consent, and the sentence of death pronounced on Hussein Pasha, one of the principals in the late conspiracy who took so glorious a part in the defence of Kars, has accordingly been commuted into two years' banishment. The Grand Vizier next demanded complete reforms, and wished that the chief religious dignitaries should contribute largely to the public taxes, and that the Sultan should sacrifice one-third of his own revenue. The Grand Vizier having met with resistance to these measures among his colleagues, a modification of the Ministry has taken place, and it is stated that Ethem Pasha will succeed Fuad Pasha. The Chief of the General Staff, Riza Pasha, has been banished. The following Imperial Hatt was read at the Sublime Porte, on the 15th ult., in the presence of all the Ministers and the high functionaries of the empire:—

"TO THE ILLUSTRIOUS GRAND VIZIER.—The first basis and the foundation of all the strength and all the prosperity of a State rest on its financial position. Without credit and without confidence progress becomes impracticable. Notwithstanding the material expenses of the country it is incontestable that if order were introduced into the administration of the public money, and it were employed usefully, the country would in a short time arrive at the realisation of this strength and this prosperity. It has, however, been proved to be true for some time past, and from different causes, that the blow that has been given to the credit of Turkey has thrown the country into the abyss where it is now plunged. Powerful and daily calls on the Government have necessitated the contract of loans from the merchants in Galata on heavy and ruinous conditions, as likewise the issue of different kinds of paper money, and all confidence has been destroyed as well in the interior as in the exterior of the State. Disorder in the expenses has, on another side, increased the evil, and brought matters to the situation that they now are in. With the aid of the Most High, I am about to employ an incessant zeal in order to anticipate the dangerous effects of this state of things. My sovereign and absolute will is that my Ministers, on their part, should spare neither pains nor efforts, and should devote themselves to the development of those means which will insure the wellbeing of People, without allowing themselves to be led away by considerations of personal rivalry. He who shall act in opposition to this end will have to render an account of his conduct in this world and in the next; and, as it is only by the adoption of energetic measures that we can draw ourselves from the abyss in which we are now plunged, and likewise save the credit of the empire, we must examine in a serious and profound manner, both in principle and in detail, the great point, namely, the abolishment of or the change in those customs and acts which have occasioned all those expenses and, with God's assistance, reorganise the general administration of the country in a manner that will give confidence to the world. In order that the result of the examination which shall be made into this important question shall be submitted to me."

CHINA.—The American papers publish a long despatch from Commodore Tattnall and a letter from Mr. Ward, the American Ambassador, describing the affair of the Peiho, as it was observed from the American squadron. Both these documents give high praise to the gallantry of the English and French forces, and speak with admiration of the bravery of Admiral Hope. They state that the circumstances attending the engagement left no doubt that the Chinese had prepared "a deception and ambuscade, intending, in the confidence of their own strength and the small force of the English, to invite a conflict in order to annul the treaties of last year." The papers also publish a very long narrative of the adventures of the American Minister in his course to Pekin in order to obtain a ratification of the treaty. It appears that Mr. Ward was compelled, as stated in our Number of the 3d ult., to travel to Pekin with his suite in a closed box on two wheels drawn by a mule and a donkey, and that on his arrival in the capital he was told that he could only be admitted to the Emperor on his consenting to perform one kneeling and three knocks of the head before his Majesty. The Ambassador refused to submit to this ceremonial, and was accordingly dismissed from Pekin without having had an audience of the Emperor, and was taken back in the same close box to Pehtang, in which little seaport town the ratified copy of the American treaty was handed to him by commissioners, to whom at the same time he delivered the American ratification.

UNITED STATES.—Accounts from New York state that the insurrection at Harper's Ferry has been suppressed with a very small loss of life. The details of the affair are very confused, but in spite of the denial of some of the papers there is no doubt that it was a negro insurrection, and that it had been planned and organised for some time past with considerable care by white men, several well-known abolitionists furnishing the money. It is said that the Secretary of War had intimation of it some months ago, but gave the story no credence. The intention of the negro plotters was to arm the slaves of Virginia and the neighbouring States, establish themselves at several points, and regain their freedom. The affair was planned by the notorious Kansas outlaw "Old Ossawotamie Brown," and white men from Iowa and Connecticut were lieutenants in the conspiracy. Old Brown is badly wounded, and his son is dead. The total loss of life was 6 citizens and 15 insurgents killed, while 3 insurgents were wounded, and 7 taken prisoners. The Government has despatched troops in pursuit of those of the insurgents who left Harper's Ferry on the 17th, and the orders of the President are to follow them into other States. Accounts from Washington state that the Cabinet has lately had a series of protracted meetings, over which Mr. Buchanan presided, in which the trouble at the North-western boundary was the principal topic, and it has been finally determined to take no further action in the matter until after the receipt of advices from General Scott. Lord Lyons is said to have received despatches from the British Government, in which the action of the Administration in sending General Scott to San Juan is favourably construed and commended.

CANADA.—The Grand Trunk Railway Company announce the opening of their line from Detroit to the Atlantic seaboard on the 7th of November. The English cricketers won the game at Hamilton without the loss of a wicket in their second innings. They are playing a match at Rochester against Twenty-two chosen from the American and Canadian Clubs.

Public Addresses.

THE EARL OF DERBY at Liverpool on Friday made the following remarks on the Conservative party and their policy in regard to public affairs:—

"I have watched with the deepest anxiety and have seen with the highest gratification the progressive improvement in strength, in unity, in everything which marks political power, of the Conservative party during the last 14 years. I wish to speak in this assembly, as I have spoken upon all occasions, in terms of the highest respect for the distinguished genius and the personal character of that great statesman whom England has recently had to lament—the late Sir Robert Peel. Indeed, if upon any occasion I could speak of that great man in terms other than those which I have always used, it certainly would not be at a moment when a melancholy bereavement [illegible] prevented the attendance of his nearest relation—one of my most valued colleagues in the late Government, who gave me most able and admirable assistance in the management of a difficult department, namely, the civil administration of military affairs. But, gentlemen, I am not saying anything disrespectful to the memory of a statesman with whom I had the honour of many years of personal friendship, and I believe of reciprocal esteem, when I state that the course which at the close of 1845 was taken by the late Sir Robert Peel completely and entirely for the moment shattered the Conservative party in this country. I am now about to state a fact which I believe is not known to half a dozen individuals. Upon the failure of Lord John Russell's endeavour to form a Government I wrote confidentially to the most eminent man in the country, the late Duke of Wellington, a warm and cordial admirer and supporter of Sir Robert Peel, a man who had stood for many years the foremost man in the world in the eyes of his countrymen. I wrote to consult him as to the position of the Conservative party and the best means of restoring that unity which had been so lamentably destroyed. I received a long letter from the Duke of Wellington, which I need hardly say I have kept and keep very safely, in which he explained to me that, having accepted under the abortive attempt of Lord John Russell to form a Government the duties of the neutral position of Commander-in-Chief he considered he had for ever broken off his political connexion with any party. He intimated, however, his concurrence in the opinion which I had ventured to express that the alienation of the Conservative party from Sir Robert Peel was not a mere temporary feeling, but that it was impossible he should ever again place himself at their head with any prospect of success, and the Duke of Wellington, I will not say entreated, but exhorted me, as a matter of duty to my Sovereign and to my country, to throw aside all doubts and all hesitations, and to assume at once the leadership of that great Conservative party whose existence and whose power he deemed to be essential to the well-being of the country in all its institutions and he advised me if her Majesty should at any time lay her commands upon me to attempt to form an administration, not to be discouraged by any difficulty, except such as might be absolutely insuperable, but to sacrifice every other feeling to a desire of serving my Sovereign and my country. Gentlemen, for 14 years I have endeavoured to act in the spirit of that wise and patriotic advice, coming from so eminent a man, and I have been rewarded by seeing the Conservative party taking their roots in the feelings and hearts of the country, and, as our opponents are compelled to acknowledge, though in doing so their fears rather magnify our strength, forming at the present moment an absolute majority in Parliament. It is also admitted, with a melancholy sense of the painful contrast between the two sides, that the advantage thus obtained is doubled by the fact that our majority is that of a united party. You may perhaps ask me—and it is a fair question on the part of those before whom I appear to justify the course which I have pursued, and to whom I am prepared to speak with entire and absolute frankness—what is the use which I desire to make of that greatly increased Parliamentary strength, or, as our opponents say, of that majority in the House of Commons? Perhaps I shall disappoint the expectations and wishes of some of the more enthusiastic, and probably of most of the younger members of this assembly, when I say that I have no desire for the immediate overthrow of the present Administration. I should hold the same language which I now do even if a momentary party advantage might be so gained, but there are considerations higher than those of party, which have still greater weight with me—considerations of what is for the benefit of my Sovereign, for the reputation of the country in the eyes of foreign nations, and for the respect due to Parliament itself. All these considerations militate against a succession of ephemeral Governments, acquiring office by a bare majority, liable at any moment to be displaced by the caprice of some half dozen votes in the House of Commons, and exposing the Crown and the country to a perpetual change of persons and of principles, which renders all steady legislation impossible, and which, weakening their internal strength and their external power, paralyses the hands of those to whom the duties of administration may for the moment be intrusted. Moreover it appears to me that the policy which is dictated by a due consideration of the interests of the country at large is also recommended by the interests, well-considered, of the party to which I have the honour to belong. It cannot be for the advantage of that party that for the third time it should be prematurely called upon to form a Government without sufficient strength to maintain itself against all attacks and against all combination. What is required is the determination of the country itself, or, at all events, of the Conservative strength of the country, to prepare for future events. Let every man consider that he has a duty to perform and a cause to sustain. Remember that by the combination of small efforts great results are produced, and do not compel me or any one who may represent the Conservative party to accept office when I cannot be confident of holding it, at least so long as I honestly endeavour to discharge the duty which I owe to my Sovereign and my country. Your chairman has spoken of the period of difficulty and of anxiety at which we acceded to office. I believe that in some respects the difficulties and anxieties of the present Government are fully as great as those to which we were exposed. I know nothing beyond what I learn from the public organs of intelligence; but I am much mistaken if our foreign relations at the present moment are upon as satisfactory a footing or are as generally amicable as they were a few months ago. The present Government have difficulties to contend with in what is commonly called the Italian question, with respect to which I hope and trust they will be steady in their purpose not to entangle themselves in the negotiations of any Congress that may be proposed. They have difficulties in China. They have difficulties upon the Coast of Africa—difficulties which may seriously threaten us unless a decided tone be taken, and unless this country is disposed to maintain rights which are absolutely essential to its welfare. They have difficulties in the North Pacific where our Transatlantic brethren appear, if I may use a familiar expression, to be 'trying it on.' They are contending with difficulties in various quarters, but they are not difficulties which may not be surmounted by a mixture of firmness and good temper, and at the same time by a determination to maintain the rights and the honour of England. Ministers have, on the other hand, great advantages in their favour. They preside over the destinies of a nation which never at any time was so abounding in material resources, in wealth and in prosperity, as it is at the present moment. They preside over a nation in which commerce is flourishing and active almost beyond precedent, and at the same time, as I believe, free from all unhealthy speculation. They preside over a country in which labour is abundantly employed, and the population is generally contented. They have the consciousness that within a certain number of months—I shall not say how many—the military and naval resources of the country have been greatly improved, and that, if our national defences are not altogether what we would desire them to be, our great fortifications of Gibraltar and Malta have received from the labours of the late Government an amount of reinforcements which has placed them in a far better position of defence than they have enjoyed for the last 20 years. Moreover, they know they preside over a country the population of which are again alive to the necessity of maintaining adequate defensive armaments, in which our military ardour has been again awakened, and in which private and personal efforts will not be spared for the vindication of the national honour. Of one thing, at least, they may feel assured, that, while the country and while Parliament will not readily forgive a Ministry which lastily embroils us in an unnecessary war, they will, without regard of party or any other consideration, bring forward the whole weight of public opinion in support of any Minister who shall steadily resist, from whatever quarter it may proceed, any attack upon the independence, the honour, or the interests of the country. Above all the present Government had this great advantage over their predecessors, that they will not have to contend with an Opposition which will descend to any factious combination, nor need they fear that we shall seek to eject them from office without regard to the interests of the country or to the probability of being able to succeed them. It may be that the present Government may fall by their own internal dissensions. Indeed, looking to the composition of that Government, I can feel no great confidence that such may not unhappily be the case; but honestly and sincerely I say that I desire that their differences may be made up. Among the members of the Government, and still more among those who support them, there are men who in their hearts are as sincerely Conservative as any of those whom I now have the honour of addressing; there are others who most unwillingly submit to a power which they feel to be too strong for them; while a third section, though the loudest in clamouring for certain measures, and ready to place themselves at the head of a movement which they feel unable to resist, would, I believe, deplore and deprecate the success of their own schemes. The present is not a fitting opportunity for entering upon the consideration of individual questions; but I can say in all sincerity of heart that I earnestly desire that the present Government may be enabled to bring forward such a measure of Parliamentary reform as may be honestly supported by the great body of Conservatives. I think it is of the highest importance that this question should be finally and speedily settled; and if the Government of which I was a member undertook to attempt a settlement of it, we did so not because we admitted that a Bill was called for by imperative necessity, but because it had been repeatedly promised in speeches from the Throne and in declarations of Ministers, and because we felt it was of the most vital consequence that a question of so much importance should not be left in suspense. I do not intend to enter now into a defence of that measure. We certainly considered that an extension of the franchise founded upon the principle of uniformity between counties and boroughs was likely, as it largely increased the constituencies, to satisfy the claims of justice, and at the same time hold out the best hope, I will not say of a final, but, at least, of a durable settlement of the question; but the House of Commons repudiated that principle; and I presume that whatever measure may be introduced by the present Government will contain some extension of the borough franchise. I am not prepared to say that no such reduction may be attempted without danger, but I do say that it is necessary, before adopting such a measure, to exercise the greatest caution, and to enter into the most minute calculations as to the practical effects of whatever extension of the franchise may be so proposed. I am not jealous—the Conservative party are not jealous—of the working classes. I desire to see their interests fully and fairly represented, but I confess that, looking to the revelations of Gloucester, Wakefield, and other places, I doubt whether any great reduction of the franchise would not tend largely to extend that corruption which is the bane of our electoral system, while, if I look to the manner in which even the most intelligent workmen have been misled by false and delusive advisers, I think it is at least a subject for serious consideration how far, in the interests of the lower classes themselves, it would be desirable to give a preponderating power to men who, if legislation were thrown into their hands, would probably introduce and pass measures which would be absolutely fatal to themselves. I say therefore that while the Reform Bill introduced by the present Government shall meet with no factious opposition from the Conservative party, I hold it to be the duty of any Ministry who are responsible to their Sovereign and their country not to be led away by mere popular clamour upon a subject which may be of such vital importance, but seriously to consider the effect of their proposed legislation: and God grant that the present Government may have wisdom and prudence enough to introduce such a measure as may pass with the approbation of a united Parliament! Before I sit down I desire to say a few words on a subject of some delicacy, because the greatest possible misrepresentations have been made with respect to it. Among other inventions which were circulated to calumniate the policy of the late Government and to produce prejudice against us was one that we had entered into a corrupt alliance with the Roman Catholic body of this country for the purpose of obtaining their support by concessions dangerous to Protestant interests. I need not say, gentlemen, that that imputation was as baseless as one to which I have seen great currency given—viz., that I had countersigned a paper containing stipulations with regard to a Reform Bill, upon the faith of which I was to obtain the support of certain Liberal members. I am happy to say with regard to the great body of the intelligent Roman Catholics of this country I have for some time past observed a growing tendency to alienate themselves from the so-called Liberal party, and to unite themselves with those who are their natural allies, the Conservatives. I have many personal friends among the Roman Catholics; I have Roman Catholic tenants, I have Roman Catholic labourers in my employment, and I should be ashamed of myself if there could be detected the slightest difference between my treatment of them and that of those of my own persuasion. I go further—I say that I cordially and earnestly sympathised and concurred with the endeavours which were made, so much to his own credit, by my gallant friend General Peel, to afford to our Roman Catholic soldiers greater opportunities than they had previously enjoyed for exercising the rights of their religion. But, I think I may appeal to the whole course of a somewhat long political life, whether, though always ready to maintain the principles of entire toleration and religious liberty, I am a man who would ever voluntarily yield to any of the encroachments of the Roman Catholic Church as a political body, whether I would sacrifice one jot or iota of the rights and privileges of that church to which I myself belong, whether I would diminish its means of public usefulness, or whether I would depreciate it as a great portion of our political institutions by lowering its position or lessening its influence in the country. To that church I have always been sincerely attached; for that church I have made many sacrifices; for that church, even against the opinion of its members, I have introduced measures the value of which has been subsequently acknowledged; and you may depend upon it that there are few things dearer to my heart—few principles which I am more determined to uphold—than the maintenance of the dignity, the rights, and the privileges of the established church of these realms."

The EARL of MALMESBURY at Liverpool spoke as follows on the French alliance:—

"It is impossible for any one living in this great emporium of trade and commerce, and acquainted with the transactions of business, not to understand the unspeakable value of a cordial alliance with France. On the first occasion when my noble friend was called upon to be Prime Minister of this country, we found France at that time likewise in a very anxious position. She had determined to alter the form of her Government, and even to change the dynasty of her Sovereign. My noble friend and I, acting under him, saw at once the only course to pursue consistent with the feelings both of the English and French people. We at once and without hesitation recognized that Prince whom France had chosen to rule over her, and though other countries did not follow our steps and hesitated to take the same course, we nevertheless cordially acknowledged Louis Napoleon as the Emperor of the French. It so happened that it was my fortune in early life to be intimately acquainted with that Prince even before he was an exile in this country, and I assure you that I deeply and completely appreciated, from the moment I first knew him, his great qualities and abilities, and there are many now who can bear witness of my having constantly and publicly stated what I thought of those abilities and qualities, when very few Englishmen had the same opportunity of forming a judgment on the subject like myself. It will be satisfactory to you, and right for the sake of truth, that, speaking on this occasion of that Prince, I should say that whenever I had conversations with him on political matters long ago, and since, and even to the last time that I had the honour of any conversation with His Majesty, he has always held the same language, expressing his belief not only that it was the best policy for France itself, but that his earnest personal wish was to maintain a cordial alliance with this country. That is a fact which ought to be known and pondered on by statesmen in this country; but, notwithstanding the feelings of the Emperor of the French, we have again, since the occasion I just now referred to, been under considerable apprehension as to the sentiments of the French nation and Government towards us; and, if I may be permitted from my experience of foreign affairs in reference to the feelings and policy of the French Government, I would say that, however earnest the French Ministers might be to maintain a friendly alliance with us, I do not think they could understand the policy and nature of this country. It appears to me that we could with perfect ease maintain a courteous friendship and complete alliance with France, and she with England, without being obliged to go hand in hand, foot by foot, and step by step, in a policy she probably may feel consistent with her own political interests; and it is unreasonable, because there may be certain principles we cannot agree with in her policy and which we cannot in prudence follow, because the policies of the two countries are different, to turn round, as the French press has often done, and say that we are no longer a faithful and cordial ally. I go further, and say that it is not to the interest of our alliance with France that we should go hand in hand, arm in arm, foot by foot with her, because if by any chance it should not be seen by the world at any time that we were joining France in that intimate manner, the suspicion is immediately raised that our cordial alliance has ceased. I maintain that the policy of England is entirely different on many points from that of France. The writers in the French press taunt us now with having lost our former power, with being isolated from the other nations of Europe, and taking up the position of a second-rate Power, because we do not interfere with the affairs of Italy. I accept that word isolation in its original sense, from its Latin derivation, and I say that on our geographical isolation frequently depend our isolation from foreign politics and our safety also. We may be a warlike, but may not be a military nation. We may be an industrious and commercial people, but that does not prevent us from defending our own rights and country, but it essentially prevents, or ought to prevent, us from meddling in the internal affairs of other States."

MR. DISRAELI at Liverpool made the following remarks on the state and duties of political parties:—

"When I consider what was the position of the Conservative party, as far as the House of Commons is concerned, 10 years ago, I think I may be allowed to say, whether I look at its numbers, its intelligence, its influence in the country, or its power in debate, its position at this moment need not shrink from any comparison with what it was at that previous period. Therefore I trust that even under my humble guidance it has not suffered in public estimation or lost in public position. I venture to say that those have been 10 years of great difficulty and great exertion; but I may be allowed to add, that during that period, however various may have for the moment appeared the vicissitudes, and however capricious the changes, we ourselves have always had a main object in the course which we have pursued, and in the purpose which we at length have achieved. It has been our wish to put an end to that which I may describe as 'the monopoly of Liberalism,' which in our opinion has exercised a very pernicious influence on the course of public proceedings and on the character of public men. Now, for more than a quarter of a century, by this theory of a monopoly of Liberalism, half the public men in England have been held up as individuals incapable and unqualified to attempt any measure which might improve the institutions or administration of the country; while on the other hand the other half were, in order to sustain this monopoly, perpetually pledging themselves to changes and alterations injudicious in almost every case, and in many utterly impracticable, and when they were in power they expended all their resources in inventing evasions by which they might extricate themselves from the fulfilment of their previous promises. Now I believe, and all my colleagues believe, that that state of affairs was a principal cause of that insincerity in public life which of late years has so frequently been attributed to the conduct of public men; but I believe that that is now completely terminated. I believe we have brought about a healthy state of political parties. Men will now be judged of by the policy which they recommend and the measures they bring forward, not by traditions, which are generally false—not by promises which are seldom fulfilled. I know we are told that this 'monopoly of Liberalism' is extirpated—that it is at length shown that no single party is to have a peculiar privilege of governing by right the country. Now we are told, gentlemen, that party has no importance whatever, because there are no longer any public questions to settle. He would in my opinion be an arrogant and not a very far-seeing statesman who, in dealing with the affairs of a mighty empire, would presume to say that great questions would not often occur; but let that pass. I maintain that it is an error, a pernicious error, to associate the existence in England of great Parliamentary parties solely with the existence of great political questions. Great political questions should be rare, and will be rare, in communities which enjoy so salutary a political state as, on the whole, England has long enjoyed. The duties of Opposition are not to be confined merely to emergencies; they are duties which perpetually exist and ought to be constantly fulfilled. They are duties of vigilance and criticism, and it is only on great emergencies that the Opposition is called on to propose and to initiate. I therefore hold that our duties as a great Conservative party, though there may not at the moment be questions which concern the existence of the principal institutions of the State, are still duties which are urgent, which cannot be neglected, and which must be fulfilled; and it is a doctrine which I trust will never be popular in this country, that political party is a constitutional arrangement which ought to be obsolete. If Parliamentary government be, as I believe it is, and as I cannot doubt you and the great majority of Englishmen must believe it is, the best guarantee for public liberty, then rely on it, political party must be acknowledged as a salutary influence in the State, because Parliamentary government is impossible except on the condition that there should be political parties. But I should be blind to the signs of the times—I should, indeed, be insensible to the feelings that are now universally expressed—I should be treating them with a haughty negligence if I did not recognise what is the anxiety of a great people. I know not whether it be true or not that designs upon the independence of our empire are cherished by any Governments or potentates in other countries, I presume not to read State secrets, nor is it for me in the irresponsible position in which I and my colleagues have been placed—it is not for us, I say, to presume to pretend that we can communicate to you any intelligence of which you are not already masters; but this I will say that if there be any foreign Government or foreign potentate who, in the supposed party distractions and political dissensions of our form of government, believes that he has found elements on which he may calculate for pursuing with success any scheme of aggressive or of violent ambition, then I can assure that Government and that ruler that they mistake the character and the genius of the English people and the English Constitution. And if they count on our dissensions, and on the noble rivalries of our public life as the means for the successful prosecution of those designs, they will count on them to their confusion. They will find, if ever the time should come when the independence of this country or the empire of our Sovereign should be menaced, that the Sovereign of these realms rules over a devoted people and a united Parliament."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

PRESENTATION OF THE LORD MAYOR ELECT.—On Wednesday, being the first day of Term, Alderman Carter, the Lord Mayor elect, according to ancient usage, was presented to the Lord Chancellor with the usual ceremonies, and received from his lordship her Majesty's sanction to his election.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S LEVEE.—On Wednesday morning Lord Chancellor Campbell held his first reception of the Judges and Queen's Counsel since his elevation to the woolsack, and entertained them at breakfast at Stratheden House, Knightsbridge. After breakfast his lordship and the judges proceeded to Westminster Hall in state, and opened their respective courts.

THE GREAT EASTERN left Holyhead for Southampton on Wednesday soon after noon. She was off Mount's Bay at 12 on Thursday, passed Falmouth about 1, and was off Plymouth at half-past 2, steering for the Start under sail and steam, at a distance of 5 miles south of the Eddystone, and at a speed estimated at from 14 to 17 knots. She rounded the east end of the Isle of Wight about 9 o'clock yesterday morning, and anchored in Southampton Water before 11.

ANOTHER GALE.—On Monday night and during the whole of Tuesday a gale of wind, equalling in duration and occasionally in fury that of last week, swept over the metropolis and suburbs, blowing from the west and south, and accompanied now and then by driving showers of rain. The shipping in the river suffered severely from the violence of the gale, and in the suburban districts buildings of a light character were partially or wholly demolished. Several persons were killed and wounded, as in the storm of last week, by being blown into the river or by the fall of chimneys and other materials in the public thoroughfares. The accounts from the provinces state that the gale was felt with great severity at Chatham, Eastbourne, Portsmouth, the Isle of Wight, Southampton, Plymouth, Bristol, and other places on the southern and western coasts. During the storm of last week a large part of the breakwater works at Holyhead was destroyed, and vessels anchored far inside and sheltered either went down bodily, or were driven high and dry ashore. For one hour or so the Great Eastern herself was as near destruction as she is ever likely to be, and nothing but the unceasing vigilance and experience of Captain Harrison and his officers saved the vessel from driving ashore with the others.

THE WRECK OF THE ROYAL CHARTER.—Two experienced divers from Liverpool made a descent on Sunday, and remained a considerable time under water but they saw no bodies nor did they find any gold. On Monday morning they made another descent but discovered no bodies. They succeeded however in raising about three tons of copper bars, which had undergone some smelting, and had a good deal of silver mixed with them. Some additional articles of wearing apparel have been cast up upon the beach, and a few more bodies have been washed ashore at Moelfra and Penmanmaur, but very few of them have been identified. The wreck remains in the state in which it was left by the storm, and is under the charge of the coast-guard. At low water a large piece of the hull is visible, and at high water there are only portions of two of the masts. The fragments of the spars, and even of the mainmast, seem as if they had been smashed into small pieces by some mighty crushing blades impelled by steam power, and if an army of giants had undertaken to hew up the ship it could not have presented a more fragmentary appearance. The people in the neighbourhood are reported to have acted very well upon the whole, and several sums of money found by them have been given up to the coastguard. The inquest was opened on Friday in the churches of Llanallgo and Penrhos, and is still in progress, a large number of witnesses having offered themselves for examination, and an interpreter having been sworn to explain their evidence to the Welsh jurors. In spite of the difficulty of reaching the scene of the wreck on account of its distance from any railroad or coach road, large numbers are visiting the spot, and the country people are flocking to it as to a fair.

Church Rates.—A meeting of archdeacons of both provinces was held in London on the 18th ult., at which it was resolved to petition Parliament against any measure which may be introduced next session for the abolition of church-rates, and the following declaration was adopted and signed by 61 archdeacons:—

"1. That the provision made for the worship and service of Almighty God, by means of church-rate, is an integral part of the establishment of the National Church. 2. That such provision is especially the inheritance of the poor. 3. That all persons purchasing or renting house or land, or building house, purchase or rent such house or land, or build such house, subject to the liability to pay church-rate. 4. That, for these principal reasons, it is the duty of the legislature not to destroy but to maintain the law of church-rate."

The Strike.—The number of men who had resumed work under the declaration up to Saturday last was 12,638. Under the shop rule about 2700 were at work. William Pereham, one of the delegates of the Strike Committee, and Secretary of the Masons' Union, has been sentenced this week by Mr. Corrie, of the Clerkenwell Police Court, to two months' imprisonment, without hard labour, for intercepting certain workmen from the shop of Messrs. Piper, who had engaged and brought them up from Devonshire, and inducing them to go back into the country. An appeal was entered against this sentence, and the case will be heard at the next Quarter Sessions.

Society of Arts.—The Council of this Society have appointed Dr. Lindley, F.R.S., Professor of Botany in University College, Examiner in Botany to the Society of Arts.

Sir John Franklin's Expedition.—The following is an extract from a reply by Captain M'Clintock to some queries addressed to him by Mr. Selby, of Spalding:—

"Dublin, Oct. 17.—In my published report I simply stated the leading facts of our discoveries. There was not room to express opinions; besides which I wished that all interested readers should draw their own inferences. The boat was only 65 miles from the ship, and I believe it to have been returning for more provisions. The two skeletons found in it were probably the boat-keepers—men unable to march with the others, all of whom I suppose to have proceeded for the short remaining distance without the boat. There was ammunition in abundance, but the country—the early spring, at least, when our countrymen were there—affords no game whatever. Even Esquimaux cannot live there. With regard to provisions, you will observe that I mentioned chocolate, tea, and tobacco. It is clear that these alone will not sustain life. You are doubtless aware that an unusually large quantity of solid animal food is necessary, even to men in vigorous health, in cold climates. Had the country been capable of sustaining natives, not one of these traces would have remained for us to gather up. With respect to an overland expedition, you may recollect that such a one was sent out by the Admiralty under a Hudson's Bay officer, Mr. Anderson, in 1855, in preference to a boat expedition by Barrow's Strait. Mr. Anderson descended the Black River to its mouth, and discovered traces of Europeans upon Montreal Island. Therefore I do not think further records would be found by a second expedition over the same ground. You will observe that my first care was to reach Montreal Island and Point Ogle, where Anderson's search terminated, and after re-examining those positions to complete the search from thence to where the lost people landed from their ships. The greater part of this painfully interesting route was gone over three times—twice by Lieutenant Hobson, and once by myself. The natives repeatedly told us that all the white people had died.—I am, &c., F. L. M'Clintock."

Greenwich Hospital.—The Gazette of last evening announces that the Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, appointing Robert Ingham, Esq., M.P., Q.C., William Hutt, Esq., M.P., and Captain J. C. Dalrymple Hay, R.N., to be Commissioners for inquiring into the internal economy and management of Greenwich Hospital, and of the funds by which it is maintained; and also whether the resources of the Hospital can be more advantageously applied for the benefit of seamen who have served in the Royal Navy.

Infanticide in the Metropolis.—Mr. Wakley, the coroner, at a recent inquest made the extraordinary statement that in consequence of the defective state of the law, and the facilities given by parishes for the interment of alleged still-born children, there were at that moment hundreds upon hundreds of murdered children lying in the cemeteries and grave-yards of the Metropolis. The subject has since been taken up by the Marylebone Board of Guardians, and Dr. Bachhoffner has ascertained from the official records of the parish that within a given period in the rectory district of Marylebone there were registered the births of 1109 illegitimate children, of which number 516 died. In the district of Christ Church, out of 223 illegitimate births registered there were 209 deaths. In All Souls, out of 145 illegitimate births there were 87 deaths. In St. John's, out of 148 illegitimate births there were 129 deaths, or 87 per cent.; and in the Cavendish Square district there were 10 births and 96 deaths, or 96 per cent! Many of these deaths were registered as being caused by mesenteric disease, diarrhœa, inanition, &c., all of which are believed to have resulted from dry-nursing or improper attention to the children. In consequence of these disclosures the Marylebone Board has asked for a committee of the vestry to co-operate with them in collecting facts upon the question. On Friday Mr. Humphreys held an inquest at Mile End Old Town on the body of a still-born child, the mother of which, Ann Smith, had been a servant in a public-house at Shadwell, and had gone to a Mrs. Gibbon, who keeps a chemist's shop in that parish, for the purpose of being operated on with instruments. The jury, after a long investigation, returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Ann Smith and Martha Gibbon, and the coroner issued warrants for their committal to Newgate for trial.

Committal of Hughes the Fraudulent Bankrupt.—At the Guildhall Police Court on Tuesday David Hughes, solicitor, who was recently brought from Australia upon a warrant issued from that court, was formally committed for trial upon various charges preferred against him in connection with his bankruptcy.

St. George's in-the-East.—A special meeting of the vestry of this parish was held on Thursday, at which it was unanimously resolved to request the Bishop of London to permit the church, which has now been closed for several weeks without result, to be forthwith reopened for the lecturer's afternoon service. The consecration of the new church of St. Matthew in this parish was performed yesterday by the Bishop of London, who strongly urged in his sermon the restoration of peace. A disturbance was anticipated, but the ceremony passed off quietly.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's return shows the effect of increased cold in an increase of deaths, which rose in the week that ended Saturday, October 29, from 902 to 1048. In the corresponding weeks of 10 years, 1849-58, the average number was 1023; which, if raised in proportion to the increase of population, will become 1125. The present return is therefore 77 below the average. During the week the births of 823 boys and 822 girls, in all 1645 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1564.

Provincial.

Ashburton.—At the recent petty sessions in this town, Mr. Cockayne, formerly assistant master of Berkhampstead school, was charged before four of the county magistrates by Mr. John Stuart Littler, a young gentleman of 20 years of age, and a son of the late General Sir John Littler, with assault. The defendant about a year ago married Lady Littler, the complainant's mother, and the evidence given by the latter was to the effect that a short time ago he was in his room dressing, and had on his trousers and a flannel shirt, when Mr. Cockayne entered with a cane, accompanied by Mr. Enrick, who had a walking-stick, a labourer called Arscott, and the coachman, each having straps. Mr. Cockayne said to complainant, "I have a duty to perform," and then instructed Arscott to seize him, but the man evinced reluctance to do so. Mr. Cockayne then ordered him to take down his trousers, which, however, complainant refused to do, upon which Mr. Cockayne did it himself, pushed the complainant on the bed, and commenced caning him. He gave him 20 lashes, upon which complainant asked him how many more he was to have, and defendant said "I shall complete the number of 39." He then struck him over the back and arms, leaving blue stripes there for some time afterwards. For the defence it was urged that the punishment was only a reasonable one for some matter alleged against the complainant. The chairman said, in giving judgment, that the defendant was convicted of a cowardly, brutal, and indecent assault. The bench had at first considered that they could only do their duty by sending the case to the sessions. They had, however, resolved to inflict on him a penalty of 5*l.*, or, in default of payment, to be sent to gaol for two months, with hard labour. The fine was immediately paid.

Birmingham.—The inquest on the persons killed by the late explosion in this town terminated on Saturday, when the jury by a majority of 15 to 2, and after a deliberation of two hours, returned the following verdict:—

"That deceased all came to their deaths immediately, upon the 27th of September, at 22, Whittall Street, the cause of death being divers burns and other injuries from an explosion of percussion powder, but by what means such powder became ignited the jurors have not sufficient evidence to show. The jury therefore say the verdict is Accidental Death. The jurors desire the coroner to endorse the record of the above verdict by a memorandum of their opinion that Messrs. William Pursall and John Phillips have not exercised due caution in allowing the dangerous process of priming to be carried on in the immediate vicinity of numerous workpeople only separated by a thin partition. The jury further consider that the employment of young and inexperienced children in a priming room is much to be deprecated; and they earnestly hope that speedy steps will be taken by the Legislature for the compulsory removal out of towns of all places where dangerous compounds are manufactured."

Cambridge.—On Tuesday afternoon a great meeting was held in the Senate-house on behalf of the Oxford and Cambridge Mission to Central Africa. The Vice-Chancellor presided, and was supported by Dr. Whewell, Master of Trinity; the Right Hon. S. H. Walpole, M.P.; the Masters of Magdalene, Clare, Downing, Corpus Christi, and Emmanuel; the Provost of King's, the President of Queen's, Professors Sedgwick, Selwyn, Jeremie, Challis, Browne, and Grote. The Oxford Committee was represented by the Bishop of Oxford, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Dr. Heurtley, and Captain Burrows; while the London deputation consisted of Sir George Grey, late Governor of the Cape, the Bishop of Graham's Town, Canon Wordsworth, Mr. Puller, M.P., Mr. Beresford Hope, Rev. T. Jackson, Rev. E. Hawkins, and other gentlemen. The galleries and a portion of the hall were crowded with undergraduates, who evinced the most lively interest in the proceedings, and the remaining seats were occupied by members of the University and the general public. The audience included many ladies. Before the meeting took place the degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon the Bishop of Oxford, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Walpole, and Sir George Grey. A report from the Cambridge committee having been read, Dr. Jeremie moved the first resolution expressing the gratification with which the meeting received the intelligence of the steps taken by the two Universities for establishing a mission to Central Africa, and more especially to the regions explored by Dr. Livingstone. Mr. Gladstone, who was received with great cheering, seconded the resolution, and spoke to the following effect:—

"The fate of Africa has been peculiar in one respect, that, after having suffered the extremity of the bitterness of human woe and affliction in every form that could be conceived at the hands of Mahomedan conquerors, it has been reserved for her to sustain yet more cruel wrongs, yet more piercing sorrows, and yet more extreme degradation at the hands of those who have called themselves Christians. The resolution which I have undertaken to second calls by its language specially to our minds the union of the two universities. The universities have before them a common work; they are the heirs in common of recollections such as scarcely any institution in the world can boast, and in this day of what might be thought their extreme old age, thank God they are developing themselves with new vigour on every side, and promising from day to day to become less unequal to the numerous claims that the wants of this mighty nation continually make upon them. Never could they be united for a better, a holier, a wiser purpose than that in which they are now engaged, and permit me to say that never could they be united for a purpose more entirely germane to their work; for, although that work is in the first instance to be bulwarks to the Christian faith in this land, yet he has a narrow view of the functions of universities who considers that to any single operation, even though it be the greatest of all connected with the development of the mind of man, the office of universities can be confined. Their very name—I do not enter into the question as to its origin—may at any rate serve as a symbol of the width and the extension of the purposes they contemplate; and when you are told to undertake a missionary work, you know well that you are invited to go forth as the ministers alike of spiritual and of temporal blessings, and that as our Lord himself, bringing the Word of life and immortality into the world, spent the greater portion of his time in direct ministry for the consolation and the relief of human woes, so you, when you carry the Gospel into Africa, are not merely to provide the natives of that country with a passport to immortal life, but you are to give them the hope for themselves, for their children, for their descendants, for their race, for their country, for all that is dear to them, that when at length the light of civilisation shall begin to burn they shall owe to Christianity, along with everything that belongs to the other world, everything that belong to this. Eminently fitting is it for the universities to be in the van of such a work, and well it is that we should see that if the growth of civilisation and the immense development of this nation in all ranks, classes, and pursuits have rendered it far more difficult than before for the universities to answer to the demands upon them, at least there will not be wanting the effort nor the will; but whether it be a question of extending their operations for the cultivation of other classes hitherto not within their reach in England, or whether it be a question of carrying forth the ministries of the Church beyond the limits of the country and beyond the limits of the empire, the universities have still vigorously within them a desire to strain every nerve to be the standard-bearers of their countrymen in the way of what is good and great. Where is it, I will venture to say, even as between these two universities, that this appeal can be made with resistless force, unless it be within the precincts of that university which had the honour of forming the mind and character of Bishop Selwyn, and which divides the affections of that illustrious man with his other home at Eton? It is part of the reward of such a man as Bishop Selwyn, that even after his personal presence has departed his name still remains a power in the place where it has once been known. There is a contagious influence that waits upon such examples; it is in Cambridge much more than in any other spot that the force of that contagion can be felt, and it may be there are those here in the flower of their youth, in the fulness of their hopes, perhaps now tasting the first sweetness of successful exertion and of honourable reward, who from the recollection of Bishop Selwyn may even now be forming the resolution to brace themselves for the work of self-dedication in which he has shown them the way. I had not the honour of forming the personal acquaintance of Dr. Livingstone, but yet, having become acquainted with his labours as he has given them to the world, and having watched his course of proceedings in this country, I cannot refrain from adding my tribute to the universal admiration which his whole character has drawn from the willing hearts of his fellow-countrymen. Dr. Livingstone, in my opinion, gave no more significant mark of the height of his intelligence and the true greatness of his mind than when he chose to make Oxford and Cambridge the great centres of his efforts at home. He knew well that there was no more fruitful field. He knew well that though this great country has much beside her universities, yet no small part of her interior life is still nurtured within their sacred and venerable precincts. He knew well that, though she is everywhere full of energy and power, yet no small part of that energy and power beats within the hearts of our two universities, and especially of their youth. He knew well that it was his duty to elevate himself, to carry himself beyond the narrow limits of the particular organisation to which he himself was immediately related. Desiring the propagation of the Gospel in Africa, he asked himself where he could find the most powerful, most effective, most durable engine for the prosecution of that great work, and his heart, his conscience, and his intelligence told him that he could not answer that question without giving a prominent place in the answer to the two universities of England. Dr. Livingstone is such a man as raises our idea of the age in which we live. That simplicity inseparable from true grandeur, that breadth and force, that superiority to all worldly calls and enjoyments, that rapid and keen intelligence, that power of governing men, and that delight in governing them for their own good—he has every sign upon him of a great man, and his qualities are precisely those which commend themselves with resistless power to the young by whom we see this building crowded. Let us render to Dr. Livingstone the full tribute of what we feel. Dr. Livingstone is a Christian, a missionary, a great traveller; he corresponds in every particular to that great name which the admiration of all ages has consecrated—he is a hero. Your own great poet—the great poet of this age—Alfred Tennyson—in his 'Idylls of the King,' a work which has taken its place in the deathless literature of the world, has carried us back to a period of heroic manners, heroic deeds, and heroic characters; but if the power which he possesses could have gone beyond what it has effected, could have gone beyond the almost living men whom it has portrayed, and could actually have evoked them from the tomb, not one among them, though the ideal of human nature, would have failed to recognise Dr. Livingstone as a brother, and to acknowledge him as his most worthy companion. It is among my deepest convictions that the two Universities of England are the places in which we are to find, not the mere silver and gold, but the human materials by which, under God, this great work is to be accomplished; and I close what I have to say by simply and solemnly commending each one of us in his own mind and conscience to ask himself whether this special and particular undertaking does not in itself combine, with a singular freedom from every opening for cavil or objection, the presentation of every hopeful prospect and of every solid advantage that can possibly be found in any civilising or any Christianising scheme. If it be so, let us not shrink, but let us by honest efforts strive to support in act that which we have commended in word, using our acts as if by virtue of them we could prevail, but remembering their insufficiency, and recommending the prosecution of the cause to the favour and protection of Almighty God."

Dr. Plumptre, Master of University College, Oxford, briefly supported the resolution, which was carried with acclamation. The Bishop of Oxford moved the second resolution, declaring that the Oxford and Cambridge mission to Central Africa is entitled to especial support, not only because there is great reason to hope for a very favourable reception of the Gospel on the part of the natives of Central Africa, but also on account of the important bearing which the proposed operations of the mission have upon the civilisation of Africa by the extinction of the slave trade. His lordship said that among other reasons why an endeavour should be made at the present moment to combine commerce, colonisation, and Christianity in a mission to Central Africa, there was the fact that in Dr. Livingstone God had raised up a man specially fitted for the work. His remarkable patience of fatigue, his energy and perseverance, his knowledge of mankind, the broad catholicity of his spirit, were all so many proofs that he had been sent to open new fields of missionary enterprise, and the Christian people of England were as much bound to support and aid him as the sons of Israel were to flock round the standard of some mighty man of valour whom God had designed for their leader. It was likewise obvious from the fact that if the manufactures of Britain were to maintain their pre-eminence they must have a more abundant and more certain supply of cotton, that God was as distinctly calling upon us by our necessities to civilise and Christianise Africa as if a voice spoke from the heavens to our material ears, telling us that the prospect of England was bound up with our doing His will on the African continent. Sir George Grey seconded the resolution, and said he had no doubt that one of the first effects of the proposed mission would be the destruction of the slave trade. The people who acknowledged Moshesh as their chief had been already taught by the French Protestants to regard the slave traffic as infamous, and the same result would be produced by similar means elsewhere. The resolution was agreed to amid great cheering. Mr. Walpole moved the third resolution, pledging the meeting to strenuous endeavours for the purpose of supplying the necessary funds. The resolution was seconded by the Bishop of Graham's Town, supported by Professor Sedgwick, and unanimously agreed to.

KENDAL.—The practice of shooting wild bullocks on the mountains has for the last few weeks been resorted to by Mr. Rigg of the Windermere Hotel, in consequence of the extreme wildness of a herd of young oxen bred and now grazing in a large healthy allotment on Hugill Fell, about three miles east of the Windermere Railway station. The most skilful marksmen, with first-rate rifles, have been engaged on these occasions. About a week or two ago one of the wild animals was brought down by a ball which entered the middle of the neck, and instantly killed him, after an exciting chase of more than an hour. Last week another muster was made of riflemen and herdsmen to kill two more of the remaining lot, which numbered about 12 or 14. After an arduous chase to get them into a circumscribed space, two were selected for the bullet. At the first shot all escaped uninjured, but the second told right in the forehead of one of the selected animals, who rolled over dead, falling nearly out of sight among the bushy heather. The second was hit at the first fire, the ball entering behind the left ear, and rolling him also over, like his wild comrade, dead among the ling. An expert butcher instantly applied the whittle, and after bleeding a sufficient time they were placed in carts, ready to receive them, and moved off to Windermere to be cut up, when they proved uncommonly fine fat beef. This mode of slaughter is said to be more quick, and consequently less painful than that which is generally followed in the common slaughterhouses.

LIVERPOOL.—On Saturday evening the Conservatives of this town entertained the Earl of Derby and his colleagues in the late Ministry at a dinner in the Philharmonic Hall. Covers were laid for about 600 persons, and every seat was occupied. The boxes and orchestra were filled with ladies, while the upper galleries were crowded to excess by those who were unable to obtain seats at the dinner tables. Mr. Francis Shand, president of the Liverpool Constitutional Association, occupied the chair, and was supported right and left by nearly all the members of the Derby Administration. In the body of the hall there were several Conservative members of the House of Commons, but the great majority of the company of course consisted of the most influential adherents of the Conservative party residing in Liverpool and its neighbourhood. Speeches of great length were delivered by the Earl of Derby, the Earl of Malmesbury, the Earl of Hardwicke, Mr. Disraeli, Lord Chelmsford, the Earl of Eglinton, Sir J. Pakington, Lord Stanley, Sir Hugh Cairns, and other members of the late Administration. An abstract of those delivered by Lord Derby, Lord Malmesbury, and Mr. Disraeli will be found in another column. Previous to the banquet a complimentary address from the Conservatives of Liverpool was presented to Lord Derby, inclosed in an elegant casket of silver ornamented with gold moulding.

LLANBERRIS.—Mr. Richardson Rogers Cox, eldest son of the Rev. R. Cox, of Tickenhall, Derbyshire, died on the 23d ult. from cold and exhaustion while making the ascent of Snowdon. An inquest was held on the body on the next day, when the jury returned a verdict to the effect that he died from exhaustion.

MAIDSTONE.—The Earl of Romney has signified his intention of retiring from the chairmanship of the quarter sessions, which his lordship has discharged since 1846. The election of his successor has been fixed for the 29th inst., and it is understood that Mr. Gathorne Hardy, M.P., will succeed him.

MANCHESTER.—On Tuesday evening the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, M.P., distributed in the Free Trade Hall prizes and certificates of honour to 133 students in the Association of Mechanics' Institutes of Lancashire and Cheshire. The hall and galleries were closely filled with a respectable audience, of whom a large proportion were ladies. Mr. Disraeli addressed the meeting at great length, and was followed by Lord Stanley, the Hon. A. Egerton, M.P., Mr. Massey, M.P., the Marquis of Chandos, the Hon. W. Egerton, M.P., Mr. Oliver Heywood, and other gentlemen.

PLYMOUTH.—Rear-Admiral Elliot's division of the Channel fleet was at sea during the disastrous storm of last week, on its passage from Queenstown to Portland. The squadron comprised the Hero, Captain Seymour, bearing the Admiral's flag; Trafalgar, Captain Fanshawe; Donegal, Captain Glanville; Algiers, Captain O'Callaghan; Aboukir, Captain Schomberg; Mersey, Captain Caldwell; Emerald; and Melpomene, Captain Ewart. The ships were caught by the storm on Monday night, after the crews had been exercising at gunnery practice at the entrance of the Channel. The storm commenced with heavy showers of hail and sleet from the N.W., and continued during the night, with very variable winds. After quarters at sunset the topsails were double-reefed, and courses reefed for the night. Land was seen about the Land's End, and the Lizard lights were sighted at about daylight, 6.30 on Tuesday morning. The weather then set in very dirty at S.E., with increasing wind and heavy rain. The third reefs were taken in the topsails about 9 A.M., and shortly after topgallant yards were sent on deck; topgallant masts were struck by signal; and a signal was made, "Admiral will endeavour to go to Plymouth," "Form two columns; form line of battle." About 10 A.M. a signal was made, "Prepare to move with bowers. Bend sheet cable." Towards 11 A.M. the wind increased to such a fury, with torrents of rain and very thick weather, the wind heading the ships off, that it became very doubtful if the sternmost ships could possibly get into the Sound, although it was probable that the Hero and the headmost ships could do so. Admiral Elliot then, with the spirit of a British Admiral, decided at once (although he knew his exact position, having made the Eddystone Lighthouse) to wear the fleet together and stand off and face the gale. Although the leading ships were in good positions to wear, it was not so with those in rear of the line. The Aboukir had just passed the Eddystone; the Trafalgar and Emerald were still in the rear, the Trafalgar having been detained to pick up a man who had fallen overboard from the jibboom, which was executed with great skill. The Aboukir immediately wore, set her courses, and dashed to windward of the lighthouse by carrying a press of sail, and weathered it half a mile, followed closely by the Mersey. The Algiers, Melpomene, and Trafalgar passed it very closely to leeward, as the Hand Deeps were under their lee. Added to these difficulties there was a perfect fleet of trawlers, vessels unmanageable while their trawl is towing, so that it required the greatest skill to avoid running them down. The signal was then made to get up steam to secure the safety of the ships, which reduced their canvass and stood off the land. The Mersey and the Melpomene furled their sails, and got up steam, the former moving along like an ocean giant. The gale still increased until about 3 P.M., remaining very thick with rain. About 3 it lifted, the wind fell, the sun shone; but the sea remained towering up and breaking. The barometer then stood at about 28.50. The Hero, Trafalgar, Algiers, Aboukir, and Melpomene were not far separated. A signal was then made, "Form the order of sailing in two columns." This was partially executed, when in a squall the wind shifted to N.W. It then for some three hours blew a perfect hurricane, considerably harder than it had previously blown at S.E. The ships stood well. The Hero, dauntless as her name, [illegible] take it easy. The Aboukir, close to leeward, carried one reef out of her maintopsail [illegible] whole of it; and the Algiers, Trafalgar, and Mel[illegible] all did well. The former eased up her topsail [illegible] the squalls. The Mersey and the Emerald, it is [illegible] had steamed into Plymouth, as they were [illegible] The ships kept in open order through the night, wore in succession by night signal at 1 A.M. [illegible] nesday morning, and made the land at daylight [illegible] Start Point. They then formed the line of [illegible] signal, got steam up, and carrying sail [illegible] Channel at about 11-knot speed, steamed into P[illegible] and took up their anchorage without the loss of a [illegible] spar, or a rope yarn.

TRURO.—A shock of an earthquake was felt at [illegible] quay, on the north coast of Cornwall, on the 2[illegible] about 7.10. The sound resembled that of [illegible] waggons passing through a street. In many [illegible] the town it shook the houses to such an extent [illegible] many of the inmates ran into the street to inquire [illegible] the strange sensation was. The vessels that [illegible] aground in the pier shook and trembled very [illegible] The shock lasted for about one minute. It is said [illegible] there is no record of any similar occurrence on that [illegible]

WINDSOR.—The Maharajah of Cashmere's [illegible] present to her Majesty, consisting of a Cash[illegible] shawl tent, and solid gold bedstead, of the [illegible] 150,000*l.*, was brought to Windsor Castle on Wednes[illegible] from the India House, and temporarily placed [illegible] Throne-room previous to its being formally pre[illegible] to the Queen by the gentleman under whose charge [illegible] was brought from Cashmere.

WORCESTER.—The inquest on the body of the unfortunate young woman, Mrs. Emily Harris, who recently drowned herself and her two children in the Severn, terminated in the following verdict:—"That deceased came by her death by drowning herself in the river Severn, being at the time in a state of temporary insanity caused by the brutal treatment of her husband and her sister; and the jury severely censure the mother-in-law of deceased for her conduct towards her, and express their dissatisfaction at not having more testimony to guide them." This concluded the inquest, and on the mother-in-law leaving the house she was followed by a crowd of persons who gave vent to their indignation by hissing and hooting at her until she took shelter in the cottage of a friend in the Ham Road. The funeral of Mrs. Harris took place in the New Cemetery on Sunday afternoon, in the presence of large numbers of persons, the body being followed to the grave by about 80 of the operatives at Messrs. [illegible] manufactory, who subscribed liberally towards the expenses, and provided funds for the payment of the men who searched for the body. Harris was brought before the magistrates on Friday to answer the charge of assaulting his wife, when the chairman, after a impressive address alluding to the way in which the prisoner had brought himself into his present position, and the lamentable effect of his conduct, which had deprived him of an affectionate wife and two children, sentenced him to three months' imprisonment.

Ireland.

LORD DERBY AND HIS TENANTRY.—At the Liverpool dinner on Friday the Earl of Eglinton, in speaking of the affairs of Ireland, said that the only plague-spot now remaining in Ireland was the secret combination, blood which occasionally pollutes the country by the murder of innocent individuals, and he believed that would soon be put an end to if every Christian, whether layman or churchman, were to put his shoulder to the wheel, and like the Earl of Derby, were not only to do his utmost to convict and punish the assassin, but refuse to have any communion with those who were abettors and aiders of assassination. The Earl of [illegible] in referring to this observation, made the following remarks on the course he has taken in reference to the Doon estates:—

"I am not fond of introducing into public controversy anything which relates to the private management of my property or my dealings with my tenants. I believe I may trust to my general character both here and there to prove that I am a harsh landlord nor an unjust or unforgiving man. In Ireland and in England more especially—although indeed I should say more especially in England than in Ireland, [illegible] the one country and the other—I believe it is [illegible] known, at least it is known by all of those who know [illegible] of the circumstances, that I have never interfered with the exercise of the political franchise of a single tenant. I mention one case in Ireland—that of a tenant who [illegible] of 36 years has been conversant with all my operations, has received many marks of favour from me; who [illegible] own expression, would walk through fire and water for me; and who has voted against me at every election, has never been interfered with. This tenant, a tenant in Ireland, of the name of Michael Ryan, most honourably came forward to bear testimony to those letter which was published in all the papers. But I charged as a general exterminator, as an oppressor of people, and as a tyrant landlord, because I have used means in my power to bring to justice the authors of a brutal murder. Permit me to say that upon me and upon eulogiums which have been passed upon me [illegible] and the calumnies—for they are little less—with which been assailed upon the other, are equally void of truth because they rest upon an entire misapprehension [illegible] of the case. I have never thought it worth my while to contradict anything which has been said upon the subject adverted to, as it has been upon a public occasion. At present, I will state to you the simple facts. It is true I have property of mine in the county Limerick, where [illegible] some 700*l.* a year, I have some 11 or 12 tenants, three [illegible] hold by lease, and the remainder hold as tenants from

...an who was murdered upon that property was ... of a Roman Catholic, the son of a very old ... who occupied with his family the property long ... I became acquainted with it. He was the first man ... met when I visited the property. He was then connected ... her in very disorderly circumstances, and was the leader of ... persecution. Gradually I reclaimed that man, and retained ... a respectable and useful tenant. His son succeeded ... and became the tenant of a small farm. He was from his ... in industrious, active, respectable, steady young ... He managed to a great extent his father's property, and ... with great industry a small farm in which I placed him ... father's second marriage, when there was a separation of ... family. This man, for no fault of his own, but in consequence ... having by my orders ejected a sub-tenant whom ... had no means of ejecting without his consent, and who was ... worthless, and had done nothing for the property, but was ... deteriorating the little holding he had—this man was ... brutally murdered in the noonday, in the presence, as I know, ... a number of persons. He was first shot through the heart, ... body was then brutally mangled, and his head knocked ... with stones. I have never been able to obtain legal evidence ... those who were witnesses of this brutal murder. But I had, ... I have, reason to believe that more than one of those who ... under me as tenants at will—of the small number of eight ... nine persons—were parties to the conspiracy. I gave ... notice, therefore, at Michaelmas, the latest time that I could, ... all those persons who hold by that tenure, in order to ... me to obtain satisfactory evidence, if not sufficient to satisfy a jury, at least sufficient to satisfy me, of the ... guilt of the concealment of the murder, to eject at once, ... Lady day next, any person against whom I could bring that ... evidence, and whom otherwise, however strong the evidence ... against me, I could not remove from the property until the ... following Lady day. The whole of the notices which have been ... served have been upon some eight or ten persons, being all the ... persons who hold under that tenure. The intention of serving ... those notices was to give me the power of carrying into execution ... their removal in those cases in which I should find moral ... evidence sufficient to justify me in taking such proceeding. It ... was by means followed, nor was it for a single moment my intention, even with regard to that number of eight or ten ... persons, to be the wholesale and indiscriminate exterminator ... of the tenants. The service of notice upon eight or ten tenants, ... holding some 5 or 10 acres each, has been represented in the ... Irish papers as a wholesale extermination of tenants, the ... 'doom of Doom,' the turning out upon the wide world of hundreds of families, the fact being that there is not one of those ... names now under notice who have not received at my hands, ... in some way or another, more than the value of the fee-simple of ... the land they hold. Now, I have never condescended before to ... reply to any of the anonymous attacks which have been made ... upon me, and I shall never condescend to reply to any of them ... again. I have stated to you these plain facts, and I say this, ... that in my judgment it is the duty of a landlord, if he has ... reason to believe that the people upon his property are conniving at the suppression of evidence and the concealment of ... facts with regard to a brutal murder, not, as has been said, to punish the innocent for the guilty, and to pass sentence upon ... men who have not been found guilty, but it is the duty of the ... landlord to say, 'You and I—you standing under a grave suspicion and I being responsible for the interest and for the ... happiness of the district—you and I shall not hereafter stand ... in the relation of landlord and tenant.'"

THE EDUCATION QUESTION.—Mr. Corballis, Q.C., the chairman of Kilkenny, one of the most eminent members of the Roman Catholic laity, in opening the recent quarter sessions for that county made the following remarks on the recent pastoral of the prelates of his church:—

"It was not without hesitation that he referred to a subject which might excite unpleasant feeling or provoke ill-will; but ... connected officially with their county, and anxious for ... improvement and prosperity of its inhabitants, he could not refrain from noticing what he saw with regret—the considerable falling off which had recently occurred in the attendance of children at the school. To what was that falling off ... attributable? It would be mere affectation to attempt to conceal that it was owing to the publication of a document emanating from the Roman Catholic hierarchy of Ireland. There was no one who could entertain a more sincere respect for that body than he; many of them were his private friends, all were entitled to his most respectful consideration, and nothing but a sense of the duty which he owed to the public would induce him to state the opinion which he held on the subject. He deeply regretted the publication of that document, and the effect which it would have on the poor and on the country generally. The grand jurors and he, and every one, had a full and free right to use their own discretion with respect to the education of their children; and he would wish all those whom he addressed, each in his respective sphere, and in his connection with the humbler classes, to ask them seriously to consider whether in sending the children to those schools—the boys to learn reading, writing, and arithmetic, the girls to receive instruction in those branches of knowledge and in needlework, and other humble accomplishments suited to their class—they had ever suffered from their religious creed. He did not feel called on to consult his clergyman as to the propriety of his entering Trinity College, Dublin, and why ... did he with respect to any other arrangement for secular instruction? It might be supposed that he was prejudiced in favour of the system from having been 10 years engaged in forwarding the arrangements of the board to the best of his ability. He certainly did feel a more than ordinary interest in the subject; but he would ask them, as they valued the social and moral elevation of the people, was it not his duty and theirs to endeavour to sustain an institution doing so much for the instruction of the poor? This prohibition was intended to lead to a different system of education, but the prospect of any such thing was very remote indeed. Let them look to the Earl of Carlisle, and ask themselves was he likely to become in any way auxiliary to the doing away with a system to which he had shown himself so partial—one to the encouragement of which he had himself given such large pecuniary aid? To expect him to forward a proposition of the kind was a thing very hard to be supposed; and, without speaking for the Lord Lieutenant or any one but himself, he would say the probable answer which would be given to this proposition from the Roman Catholic hierarchy was, that the system had been instituted to promote the mental cultivation of the people, to advance morally and morally the condition of the humbler classes, and ... was for the hierarchy themselves to give the religious instruction which the Government knew was a necessary foundation of every good system. It was the right of every one to ask what task does the poor man's son run as to his religion, in learning reading, writing, and arithmetic, under this system—a system 25 years in operation in this country, and sanctioned by all the bishops and archbishops with one particular exception. That could not be a bad system which they had upheld. Archbishop Murray, the most perfect man and the most exemplary prelate he ever knew, had been most conspicuous in ... carrying the system; the learned Archbishop Whately had given his time and his talents to its advancement; Bishop ... never had been its supporter, as was the Rev. Dr. Meyler. ... why did he refer to these names? Because that could not ... a Protestant system where they were found connected with it; ... they should not deprive the children of the poor of the ... means of an education so important to their welfare and the ... advancement of their country."

THE CHANCELLORSHIP OF EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.—The General Council of the University of Edinburgh met on Friday in the Music Hall, for the election of their first Chancellor; Sir David Brewster, Principal, presided. Professor Christison nominated and Sir George Clerk seconded the Duke of Buccleugh, resting his claims on the fact that his Grace is more identified with Scotland by residence and local interests than any other candidate who was likely to be proposed. The Solicitor-General Maitland proposed and Dr. Alexander Wood seconded the nomination of Lord Brougham. The speaking lasted till 2 o'clock, and the roll of 1393 members was then called over, which occupied the meeting till nearly 5 o'clock, the doors of the hall being meanwhile strictly closed. At the close of the poll the numbers were for Lord Brougham, 654; for the Duke of Buccleuch, 419; majority for Lord Brougham, 235. The result was received with loud cheers by Lord Brougham's supporters, and a large crowd waited the result outside. In the evening Lord Brougham's election was celebrated by the ringing of the bells of the city churches. At 7 the Council again met to elect an assessor to the University Court. Lord Neaves, seconded by Professor Syme, proposed Sir John M'Neill; Dr. Douglas Maclagan, seconded by Mr. Morton, proposed the Solicitor-General. The numbers were:—For the Solicitor-General, 272; Sir John M'Neill, 184; majority for the Solicitor-General, 88.

NEW BATTERY ON THE CLYDE.—It is said that the Government have resolved to erect a new battery on the Clyde, on the shores of Roseneath, nearly opposite Gourock; some officers of the Engineers have been inspecting the grounds and holding consultation with the Duke of Argyle, who is lord of the manor. With this battery of Roseneath and the other one already erected at Gourock, both sides of the Clyde will be completely protected.

ACCIDENT ON THE MIDLAND.—On Saturday evening as a coal train was passing over the wooden bridge, about a mile north of Belper, the axle of one of the waggons broke just as the engine and tender had crossed the bridge. The broken axle ripped up the cross beams of the bridge, and 25 waggons filled with coal were precipitated into the river. The shock caused the guard's van to rebound and run back upon the line, where another coal train ran into it, causing the destruction both of the engine and van. No lives were lost, but the damage to the bridge is so considerable that all the traffic over it is stopped.

COVENT GARDEN.—Nov. 3.

Fruits are tolerably well supplied; but vegetables have, as might be expected, suffered from the late frosts, and therefore they are not furnished in such abundance as they have been. Pine Apples and Grapes have not altered in price since last week. Pears in season still consist of Glou Morceau and Beurré Diel. The best dessert Apple now to be obtained is King of the Pippins. Ribstons are scarce. New Oranges may now be had. Good Filberts are realising 9d. per lb. Chesnuts are plentiful. Cabbages, Savoys, Carrots, and Parsnips may be obtained in quantity. Cauliflowers are scarce. Potatoes realise from 4s. to 8s. per cwt. Mushrooms from the open field are nearly over. Cucumbers tolerably abundant. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Gardenias, Violets, Mignonette, China Asters, Heaths, and Roses.

THURSDAY, Nov. 4.

We have again a large supply of Beasts, but choicest descriptions are not very plentiful. The small amount of business transacted is at about Monday's prices. The number of Sheep is small, but it exceeds the demand. Quotations as on Monday. Calves are rather lower. From Germany and Holland there are 458 Beasts, 1430 Sheep, and 143 Calves; from the northern and midland counties, 500 Beasts; and 116 Milch Cows from the home counties.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 31.

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was small, the quality very indifferent, and cleared at fully our previous quotations. Foreign was more inquired after, but without leading to much increase of business; prices, however, are fully maintained. Fine malting Barley meets with ready buyers at the extreme value of this day se'nnight; other descriptions are unaltered. New Beans are 1s. dearer. Peas bring last week's prices. The Oat trade is very firm, and in some instances fine qualities bring some advance. Flour remains unaltered.

FRIDAY, Nov. 4.

The weather during the last eight days has been very wet and boisterous, with heavy gales of wind, chiefly from S.W. and S.; to-day we have much rain and S.E. wind. The Wheat trade during the above period has generally been firm but inactive; prices, particularly of fine white second quality, being well supported and more inquired after. For all descriptions of Spring Corn there was an improving tendency, without any quotable change being generally observed. Business in Flour was quiet. The arrivals from Southern Europe off the coast are fair this week. The sales comprise Odessa Ghirka Wheat at 42s. 6d. to 42s. 7½d., Taganrog Ghirka at 44s. 6d. to 45s., and Berdiansk at 44s. 9d. all per 492 lbs.; Galatz Maize at 31s. to 32s., Odessa at 31s. 6d. to 32s., both per 492 lbs.; Ibrail at 29s. 4½d. to 30s., Wallachian at 28s., both per 480 lbs.; Danube Barley at 24s. 9d. per 400 lbs.; Odessa Oats at 18s. and Egyptian Beans on passage at 33s. per qr. imp.; Taganrog Linseed at 44s. 3d. to 45s., and at 43s. 9d. c. f. and i. for the Continent. The arrivals of English Wheat this week have been large, but small of all other grain. The market was only thinly attended. Fine English Wheat is inquired after, and commands the full prices of Monday last, which are also obtained for foreign; this, however, is in more limited request. For Barley there is a good inquiry at full prices. Beans and Peas bring late rates. The Oat trade is very firm, and in some instances a slight advance is obtained.

PEAT'S FARMER'S DIARY AND ACCOUNT BOOK, 1860; being a complete and easy method of keeping farm accounts. Dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. the EARL of CARLISLE.

The publisher begs to call the attention of Agriculturists to this Diary and Account Book. It has been favourably received during the last 6 years by a great many eminent agriculturists in England, Ireland, and Scotland; and high encomiums have been passed upon it by all the leading journals (London and Provincial), advocating the cause of agriculture.

The publisher has pleasure in stating that it has received the high patronage of the Right Hon. the Earl of Carlisle, and will by permission be dedicated to him.

This Diary contains Space for Memoranda; Complete Almanack—Almanack with Breeder's Tables—Memoranda—Cash Account—Farmer's Account Book—Inventory, Cash, Stock, &c., beginning of year—Extent of Farm—Cropping or Produce Table—Outlay and Income during the Year—Inventory, Cash, Stock, &c., ending of year—Summary of Outlay and Income—a great many useful Tables, Stamps, Taxes, Licenses, &c.—Valuable recipes for Farmers—A complete List of Fairs in the United Kingdom, &c.

The publisher would recommend that an early application be made for this Diary, as a great many were disappointed in ordering copies for 1859, after the edition was sold off and too late to print a second edition.

"The great desiderata in farm account-books are simplicity and brevity, leaving nothing for the farmer to do but to enter under printed heads the transactions of each day, when the labour of the day is finished. In looking over the 'Diary' of Mr. Peat, we think he has met these requirements of the farmer in a very satisfactory manner, so that any farmer, by making himself familiar with the various headings, may settle the day's accounts of his farm in a very few minutes. We have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers."—Mark Lane Express.

Sold by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co., London; WHITTAKER & Co., London; M'GLASHAN & GILL, Dublin; JOHN MENZIES, Edinburgh; DAVID PEAT, Thirsk; all Booksellers, and at the Railway Stations.

"This is in reality a Farmer's Book, not merely an Almanack—in which respect it is perfect—but a Handbook and Vade Mecum of everything useful and informational that can in any way be serviceable to the Agriculturist."—Era, Oct. 9. 1859.

THORLEY'S FOOD for CATTLE, as used in her Majesty's Stables; in those of his Royal Highness at the Prince Consort's Farm, Windsor; in the Establishment of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent of Prussia; in the Royal Military Stables of Prussia, by order of his Excellency Lieut.-Gen. Willissen, Head Master of the Horse, is highly efficacious in promoting and sustaining the functions of the Horse in health and vigour. For Milch Cows it is equally valuable, increasing the quantity and improving the quality of Milk. For Beasts nothing can compare with it for feeding quickly. For Sheep, Pigs, and Poultry the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectations.

THORLEY'S FOOD FOR CATTLE contains bitter, saccharine, aromatic, and balsamic properties, essentially necessary to the health of all our domesticated animals. It is purely a vegetable compound, and when the food of Cattle is properly seasoned with it, it gives to the digestive and other functions of animals a healthy action, somewhat similar in character to what is produced by Spring Grass, but without any of the injurious purgative effects of the latter. These aromatic and other properties enhance the flavour and quality of both butcher meat and dairy produce, similar to what Sweet-scented Vernal Grass does in spring.

THORLEY'S FOOD FOR CATTLE can only be had direct from Mr. THORLEY or his accredited Agents. As various spurious imitations are now being sold giving rise to much disappointment, purchasers cannot be too cautious; for although some of those patent foods contain mineral substances, which produce a favourable effect at first, the upshot is ruinous to animal health. To avoid fraud and disappointment of this kind Mr. THORLEY supplies his Food in cases, containing packages, each packet having the signature of JOSEPH THORLEY engraved thereon and containing one feed; and loose in casks, with a one-feed measure, having his signature burnt thereon.

Price of case, containing 448 packages, 56*s.*; and of cask, 448 feeds, 50*s.* Orders to be accompanied by a remittance. Post-office Orders made payable to JOSEPH THORLEY, General Post Office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, E.C.

Lord Jeffrey in 1821 expressed his opinion in the "Edinburgh Review" that "it required nothing more than a notice to bring this very meritorious publication into general circulation;" and the work still commands a steady sale both in one volume for the library and in six volumes for the pocket. The publishers believe that a re-issue of the 36 Plays, each to be had separately complete for a shilling, will bring this favourite edition of Shakspeare within the reach of a still wider circle of readers.

News of the Week.

SIR GEORGE CORNEWALL LEWIS, the Home Secretary, at the Lord Mayor's dinner on Wednesday, responded to the toast of HER MAJESTY'S

Ministers, in the absence of Lord PALMERSTON and Lord JOHN RUSSELL, and gave a brief exposition of the state of public affairs. He congratulated the citizens upon the fact that perhaps at no previous period of our history have our internal affairs exhibited a condition of greater prosperity than at the present moment, by whatever standard that prosperity is to be tried, whether we regard the great increase of the revenue, the condition of trade, or the diminution of pauperism throughout the kingdom. He referred briefly to the recent strike in the building trade, and said that, while the Government had been no unconcerned spectators of the disturbance which is now, he trusts, approaching its termination, they had pursued with respect to it the policy of consistent non-intervention. With regard to the Reform Bill, he said that the Government relied upon being able, early in the ensuing session, to redeem the pledge which they had given by introducing a measure for improving the representation of the people in the House of Commons. On the subject of foreign policy the right hon. baronet made a statement which shows that there was no foundation for the report of the French journals that the French and English Governments had arrived at a complete agreement on the bases of a Congress on the Italian question. "The time," he said, "may come when, treaties having been signed, ulterior measures may be contemplated by the great Powers of the Continent, and when, probably, invitations may be addressed to the Powers which were parties to the Treaty of Vienna to join in a Congress for the settlement of the affairs of Italy. Hitherto, I may say, no formal invitation with respect to a Congress upon the affairs of Italy has been addressed to her Majesty's Government. But if at any future time such invitation should be addressed to them, it will be their duty to deliberate upon the matter with a view to maintain the principle which they consider sacred—namely, that no force should be used for the purpose of dictating to the Italian people the choice of their rulers—or for coercing them with respect to the form of government which, after mature deliberation, they may prefer."

The three Treaties of Peace were signed at Zurich on Thursday by the Plenipotentiaries of France, Austria, and Sardinia, and the Moniteur of yesterday announces that the two Emperors have agreed to convene a Congress for the purpose of deliberating on the means of founding the pacification of Italy on solid and durable bases. During the past week the National Assemblies of Tuscany, Parma, Modena, and the Romagna have appointed the PRINCE DE CARIGNAN Regent of Central Italy in the name of his cousin the KING OF SARDINIA; but a telegraphic despatch from Turin was received in town yesterday stating that KING VICTOR EMMANUEL, in consequence of a very urgent representation from the French Government, has refused to grant permission to the Prince to accept the Regency.

From the United States we learn that General Cass has addressed a despatch to Mr. DALLAS, in reply to Lord JOHN RUSSELL'S despatch to Lord LYONS, the tone of which is said by letters from Washington to be "firm, dignified, and decided in its tone," and certain to "commend itself to the hearty approval of the American people." It is understood however that General SCOTT'S instructions are peaceful and conciliatory; and, to show the good intentions of the American Government, copies of all instructions both to General HARNEY and General SCOTT have been forwarded to Mr. DALLAS for communication to the British Government.

Home News.

THE COURT.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. On Friday morning the Queen, with Princess Louisa, rode in the riding-house. The Prince Consort went to London, and presided at a meeting of the council of the Duchy of Cornwall. In the afternoon her Majesty received and inspected the presents sent over by the Maharajah of Cashmere for her Majesty's acceptance. The Princess Alice dined with her Majesty. On Saturday morning the Queen and Prince Consort walked in the grounds of the castle. The Princess of Salerno and the Duke and Duchess of Aumale visited her Majesty. On Sunday morning the Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family attended Divine service in the private chapel; the Dean of Windsor officiated. On Monday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, walked and drove in the Home Park. The Prince Consort visited the Wellington College. On Tuesday morning the Queen and Prince Consort walked in the grounds of the castle. The Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia arrived from Berlin on a visit to her Majesty. The Prince of Wales arrived in the afternoon from Oxford. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Wednesday morning the Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family, and Prince and Princess Frederick William witnessed the parade of troops in the Home Park in honour of the birthday of the Prince of Wales. The Prince Consort afterwards went out shooting, accompanied by Prince Frederick William, the Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Leiningen. The Duchess of Kent paid her Majesty a visit of congratulation early in the morning. The Duke of Cambridge, the Prussian Minister and Countess Bernstorff, and Lord and Lady Palmerston, arrived on a visit to her Majesty. In the evening the Queen had a dinner and evening party. On Thursday morning the Queen, with the Princess Frederick William and Princess Alice, walked in the Home Park, and visited the Duchess of Kent at Frogmore. The Prince Consort went ont shooting, accompanied by Prince Frederick William of Prussia, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Leiningen, and Count Bernstorff. The Prince of Wales left Windsor on his return to Oxford. The Count de Paris visited her Majesty.

THE PRINCE OF WALES attained his 18th year on Wednesday last. By the Act of 1842 his Royal Highness is now old enough, in case of a demise of the Crown, to govern without a Regency; but he will not otherwise be considered of age till he is 21, and will not take his seat in the House of Lords till that period arrives. The Prince left Oxford on Tuesday for Windsor to spend his birthday with the Queen and Prince Consort at Windsor Castle. On Wednesday morning the 1st Life Guards and 2d battalion of Grenadier Guards paraded in the Home Park in honour of the day, and on the arrival of the Queen and Royal family the line fired a feu-de-joie, gave three cheers, marched past in slow and quick time, presented arms, and afterwards marched to their barracks. In the evening the Queen gave a dinner and evening party in honour of the occasion. In the metropolis the day was observed with the usual honours, and the theatres and houses of the Royal tradesmen were illuminated in the evening. At Oxford the day was celebrated on the part of the University by a distribution of blankets among the adult poor, and, on the part of the town, by a dinner to the poor children in the Town Hall. On Thursday his Royal Highness returned to Oxford.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS FREDERICK WILLIAM OF PRUSSIA landed at Dover at 2 o'clock on Tuesday morning and proceeded to the Ship Hotel, where they passed the night. At 10 o'clock their Royal Highnesses left for London amidst the cheers of a vast concourse of spectators, the road from the hotel to the station being lined with troops, and the batteries firing royal salutes. On arriving at the Bricklayer's Arms station, the Royal party drove to Paddington station, and proceeded thence by a special train of the Great Western Railway to Windsor. At all parts of their route their Royal Highnesses were received with every mark of loyalty and respect, and the Princess Frederick William seemed especially touched with this hearty welcome to her native country. At the Windsor station the Prince and Princess were met by the Queen, the Prince Consort, Princess Alice, and Princess Helena, who had driven down from the castle to meet them.

THE GRAND DUCHESS MARIE OF RUSSIA arrived at Dover on Friday, and, after passing the night at the Ship Hotel, embarked on Saturday for Calais on her way to visit the Emperor and Empress of the French at Compiègne.

THE PERSIAN AMBASSADOR had his first interview with Lord John Russell on Wednesday at the Foreign Office.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Monday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Wednesday.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of yesterday morning contains an article announcing the signing of the Treaties of Zurich, of which the following is a summary:—

"There are three treaties conceived in the spirit of the preliminaries agreed upon at Villafranca; and on ratifying the provisions the two Emperors have agreed to bring about the assembling of a Congress, which shall have communicated to it the Treaties of Zurich, and deliberate on the most proper means of founding the pacification of Italy on solid and durable bases."

The Moniteur also publishes a circular issued on Saturday last by Count Walewski, Minister of Foreign Affairs, to the diplomatic agents of the French Government abroad, of which the following is an abstract:—

"After explaining the advantages of the different clauses of the treaty of peace signed at Zurich, and stating that France will not have to advance the amount due by Piedmont to Austria, but will co-operate with Piedmont in making the stipulated payment by arrangements which have been agreed upon France and Sardinia, it says that France has demanded Sardinia the payment of 60,000,000 for the expenses war. The circular further announces that the two propose to include in the Congress the Two Sicilies, Sardinia; and that the Government of France has assurances that the Pope was only waiting an moment to make public certain reforms by which the ment of the clergy would be replaced by a government rally composed of the laity, and which would give to try better guarantees for the administration of justice the control of the public finances by means of an assembly elected by the people."

The Emperor arrived in Paris on Tuesday from Compiègne, and proceeded to the Hotel du Louvre to pay a visit to the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia. The first stag hunt at Compiègne took place on Friday. The Emperor was not present, but his Majesty, in hunting costume, arrived on the ground at 1 o'clock, the imperial carriage being followed by others containing the guests at the palace. A fine antlered stag was soon after found and killed, after a splendid run of an hour. At night the curée took place by torchlight in the courtyard of the Palace with the usual ceremonial, the Emperor and Empress witnessing it from the balcony. The second hunt took place on Wednesday, and other hunts will take place on the 16th, 23d, and 28th. The residence of the Court at Compiègne is said to be likely to have a decided influence upon the fashions of the season. At the instance of the Empress, crinoline is to be definitively abandoned, and woollen stuffs are to be adopted for walking dresses, not worn as long in the skirt as of late, but so as to show the ankle. The Empress has recently assisted at the Councils of Ministers presided over by the Emperor. Count Walewski, since his return to Paris, has held conferences with Prince Metternich, Lord Cowley, Count Kisseleff, and the Marquis de Villamarina. Accounts from Algiers state that the Ben-Snassen have submitted to the French, accepting conditions of peace of a most severe character, and the Moniteur of Wednesday publishes a despatch from General Martimprey, dated near Zekkora on the Morocco frontier, Nov. 6, stating that General Deligny, with two divisions, had attacked the Zekkora, and forced the tribes to retire towards the south, and that General Durieux, by skilful manœuvring, had obtained a victory over the tribes equally as brilliant as the victory of Malah. In addition to a great quantity of booty, the horses and arms of the Spahis, who had been killed at Sidi-Zaer, were retaken. The troops are said to be in excellent health, and spread terror everywhere before them, and the people implore their mercy. Notwithstanding this official statement it is reported that the cholera has committed great ravages in the French army, and that Colonel Lafont and 1500 officers and men have died of it. The Moniteur announces that the Duke of Padua, the late Minister of the Interior, has been appointed by an exceptional measure Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, in order to testify in a striking manner the satisfaction of the Emperor with his services. The preparations for the Chinese expedition are continued with great activity; 8000 men will probably take their departure during the first fortnight in December. Preliminaries have been entered into with some shipping-houses at Marseilles for the conveyance of 7500 tons of coal to the Cape, Mauritius, Shanghai, Singapore, and Cochin China, and the four regiments of Marines have been ordered to supply 1600 men, to be formed into two battalions, under the command of Colonel de Vassigue, of the Marine Corps, with Lieut.-Colonel Favre as second in command.

SPAIN.—Despatches from Madrid state that the expedition against Morocco is far from complete. The means of transport are wanting, and must be obtained from France and England. The Spanish Government have discovered their fleet to be in anything but a satisfactory condition; while all is confusion in the commissariat department.

BADEN.—It is reported in Germany that a marriage is likely to take place between Prince William of Baden, the younger brother of the reigning Grand Duke, and the Princess Mary of Cambridge.

HESSE CASSEL.—In the secret sitting of the Second Chamber on Saturday, the proposal of M. Herrleins to present an address to the Elector, in favour of the re-establishment of the Constitution of 1831, was definitively agreed to by 38 to 5 votes. The Elector however, refused to receive the address, and on Tuesday the Second Chamber was to pass further resolutions and probably to forward an address to the Federal Diet.

SWITZERLAND.—The Sardinian Plenipotentiaries on Monday received orders from Turin to sign the treaty of peace; but at the last moment the signature was delayed on account of Austria claiming payment of the 40,000,000 of florins due by France on account of Piedmont in Conventions-Münze, instead of the new Austrian currency, and demanding explanations on the elections of the Prince de Carignan as President of the Romagna and Tuscany. The Emperor of the French immediately gave orders to the French Plenipotentiaries not to allow the difficulty in the settlement of the financial question raised by Austria to interfere with the signature of the Treaty, but to attach their signatures to it immediately. On Wednesday night a message was received from Vienna stating that Austria would consent to the financial settlement proposed by France—namely, that Austria should receive 102,000,000f., instead of the 104,000,000f.

which she had previously demanded. In consequence of this message the three treaties were signed on Thursday at the Hotel de Ville, and M. Armand, M. Hoffman, and Signor Nigra left Zurich yesterday to convey the treaties to their different Governments. The Plenipotentiaries will take their departure to-day (Saturday). It is believed that the convocation of the Congress to be held at Paris will take place immediately. The Austrian Minister, Baron Menshengen, having consigned the Austrian steamers into the hands of the Swiss commissioners, has returned to Zurich.

PRUSSIA AND RUSSIA.—It is stated on reliable authority that at the interview at Breslau the Emperor of Russia and the Prince Regent of Prussia determined not to consent to a revision of the treaties of 1815, nor to take part in any Congress in which England was not represented; the last resolution being proposed by Prussia. An honour seldom paid to a foreigner having no connection with Prussia has just been paid at Berlin to the memory of the late Earl of Westmoreland, so many years British Ambassador in that capital. All the principal military bands were assembled in presence of the Prince Regent and the most distinguished persons in Berlin, and performed Beethoven's Funeral March, a favourite work of the late earl, whose compositions were well known and appreciated in the Prussian capital.

HOLLAND.—A despatch from the Hague announces that Prince Alexander, second son of the Queen of the Netherlands, has been suddenly attacked with serious illness. Her Majesty, who was at Toulon, has been recalled to the Hague.

AUSTRIA.—The Schiller Festival at Vienna was celebrated on Tuesday in a most brilliant manner in presence of immense crowds of people. The torch-light processions were numerous and well attended. The greatest order and enthusiasm prevailed throughout the city. The weather was exceedingly fine until towards the conclusion of the festival. The Archduke Ferdinand Maximilian and the Archduchess Charlotte have left Vienna for Trieste, whence they intend to sail to the Dalmatian Island of Croma, which has been purchased by the Archduchess. After a short stay there, their Imperial Highnesses will embark in the steam-frigate Elisabeth for Madeira, where they intend to remain for a month. The Archduke will then go to Rio Janeiro, and is expected to return to Vienna in March next. It is not yet arranged whether the Archduchess will accompany her husband to South America.

GREECE.—A collective note of the three protecting Powers has been presented to the Greek Government demanding payment of a million of drachmas per annum, which has long been unpaid, on account of the loan and interest on the debt of 60 millions contracted in London many years ago. The note took the Government by surprise, but at a Cabinet Council presided over by the King, the principle of the payment of one million was adopted, and the Chambers were convoked for the 10th inst.

ITALY.—The National Assembly of the Romagna on Monday unanimously voted the regency of the Prince de Carignan, and invested him with full powers. On the same day the National Assembly of Parma resolved upon conferring full powers on the Prince de Carignan, and appointed his Highness Regent. The Assembly of Modena also determined unanimously to elect the Prince de Carignan as Regent. The Assembly of Florence on Tuesday, with the exception of one vote, unanimously appointed the Prince de Carignan Regent of Tuscany in the name of the King of Sardinia, the elected King. On Wednesday the National Assembly of the Romagna approved, by a large majority, a proposition to accept the resignation of the Governor-General of the Romagna, and to transfer to the Dictator of Parma and Modena full powers to govern the Romagna until the Prince de Carignan has assumed the Regency. The Sardinian Constitution was also proclaimed by the Assembly, which resolved that the time for its application shall be fixed by the Government. It was also resolved that the power to dissolve the present Assembly shall rest with the Prince de Carignan. A telegraphic despatch from Turin dated Thursday last, states that King Victor Emmanuel, in consequence of a very urgent representation received from the French Government, has refused to grant permission to the Prince de Carignan to accept the Regency which has thus been offered to him by the several states of Central Italy. Signor Farini, however, the Dictator of Modena and Parma, having been provisionally appointed Governor of the Romagna by the National Assembly, has issued a proclamation accepting the office, and stating that the only way of securing the peace of Italy is to render Italy to the Italians, and that the people of the Romagna, if forbearance and moderation should be of no avail, sooner than submit to the yoke, "would be advised only by their duty to their country and the pursuit of the path of honour." Accounts from Naples state that though the army of the Abruzzi has been provisioned, it will go into cantonments during the winter. Sicily is more tranquil. Large public works are spoken of as about to be commenced throughout the kingdom. It is asserted that the principle of an amnesty had been decided on. The submarine telegraph between Corsica and Genoa has been re-established.

MALTA.—The Renown and the Brunswick, liners, left Malta on the 26th October, it is supposed for Ancona. The Hannibal, the St. Jean d'Acre, and the London left on the 31st for Corfu.

TURKEY.—It is reported that instructions have been sent to M. Thouvenel, the French Ambassador at Constantinople, to represent to the Sultan the advantages to be derived from the construction of the Suez Canal, and also to confer with the Russian Ambassador on this subject, in order that the two Ambassadors may act in concert in this matter.

MOROCCO.—Mohamed El Kateeb, the Morocco Minister for Foreign Affairs, has addressed a long statement to the representatives of Foreign Powers resident at Tangiers, on the differences between his Government and that of Spain, for the purpose of showing that the Emperor has always been willing to maintain friendly relations with the Spanish Government, and that there are no real grounds for the intended attack on the part of that Power. Meanwhile the Moors are making active military preparations, and the Cherifs have begun to preach up the Holy War. At Tangiers large bodies of men are employed night and day in throwing up earthworks. The towns of Tetuan and Rabat, which are occupied by a fanatical population, are already fortified, and the Emperor of Morocco intends to collect large stores and to concentrate troops there. At Rabat, when the authorities learned that hostilities with Spain were imminent, they caused the famous "keys of Cordova" to be carried in procession through the town, and afterwards to be exhibited on a silver plate for three days in the great mosque.

EGYPT.—The English General Malcolm has presented a rich present from Queen Victoria to Said Pasha. The English authorities are making preparations at Alexandria for the transport of troops to China. The attempt to lay the Alexandria and Constantinople cable has again failed between the islands of Scio and Candia. The Austrian engineers foretold that it would be very difficult to construct a submarine telegraph in the Archipelago.

INDIA.—The Bombay mail has arrived with news from that Presidency to the 13th October; and a telegraphic despatch has been received by Mr. Reuter's special Indian service with accounts from Calcutta to the 14th October, being four days later than the date of the departure of the mail, which has brought news to the 10th. The following are the details:—

Bombay.—Lord Elphinstone will resign the government of Bombay in March next. The expedition for the reduction of the Waghurs (a piratical race inhabiting the north-west point of Kattiawar, where the famous shrine of Dwarka is situated), who had thrown off their allegiance to the Guicowar and betaken themselves to piracy the traditionary practice of their tribe, for the suppression of which three expeditions have been fitted out from Bombay within this century, has brought its operations to a successful close. The fort and island of Beyt were stormed on the 7th ult. The expedition arrived off the island on the 3d. On the morning of the 4th, two boats, armed, from her Majesty's steamer Feroze, two from her Majesty's steamer Zenobia, and one boat from her Majesty's steamer Victoria, the whole under the command of Lieutenant Chitty of the Indian navy, were sent to cut off the boats belonging to the enemy. On the 5th the Feroze, the Zenobia, the Victoria, the Clyde, and the Constance opened fire on the fort, which was continued all day. On the 6th the troops landed under cover of the guns of the fleet at 2 P.M. The enemy made a stout resistance, and 60 to 80 of our men were killed or wounded. Our loss is 2 officers killed, 2 officers wounded, 13 men of the 28th Regiment killed and 33 wounded; 9 men of the 6th Native Infantry killed and 12 wounded. The names of the officers killed are—Lieut. M'Kormick, 28th Foot, and Ensign Willaume, 6th Native Infantry. The Zenobia has brought down the following wounded officers and men:—Captain Glasspoole, Lieut Grant, 33 men of her Majesty's 58th Regiment; 10 men of the 6th Native Infantry; 2 men of the Marine Battalion.

Calcutta.—The Governor-General has left for the North-West Provinces. He was to hold a grand Durbar at Lucknow on or about the 20th ult., to which all the grandees in Oude had been invited. He was then to proceed to Agra and Delhi, receiving en route native Princes of all grades. The expense of the journey will be very great, the Viceregal escort alone including 3000 men, and the camp numbering not less than 20,000 persons. Rajah Jeylall Singh, who murdered Miss Jackson, Mrs. Green, and others; and Rao Ram Buksh, who treacherously betrayed or murdered the Cawnpore fugitives, have been found guilty and executed; and Tham Shah, a Rewar Sirdar, who wrote to Runmust Singh requesting him to kill the railway engineers at Pindera, was killed on the 17th September by a party of the Rewah Rajah's troops. The trial of Raheem Ali for the murder of Major Waterfield is still in progress. Her Majesty's 67th Regiment have left Calcutta for Hong Kong; the head-quarters on board the Indomitable, and the left wing on the Australian. This is the first instalment of troops from Bengal for service in China.

Nepaul.—It is said that Jung Bahadoor had resolved to expel the fugitive rebels from the Terrai. Nana Sahib is, with several hundred men, on the banks of the Raptee.

CHINA.—It is stated that the treaty between China and the United States will not come into operation until matters are settled with England and France. It appears that a fortified camp has been established in an excellent position at two miles from Pekin, and that the Emperor is collecting his best troops there. It is said that his Majesty, in case his capital be attacked, intends to retire into Tartary with his family and his guard, the latter consisting of 70,000 Mongols. The French and English admirals had been informed that the Chinese were adding to the defences of the Peiho, by constructing new batteries in advance of the others. On a hill to the right of the forts they had built a small temple to commemorate their victory, and had celebrated its opening by bonfires and fireworks for several consecutive nights. Notwithstanding these demonstrations, however, the intercourse of the French and English with the Chinese authorities continued on a friendly footing.

COCHIN CHINA.—A Tourane letter from a good source states that a considerable force of Cochin Chinese had attacked the French troops, but had been repulsed with severe loss.

JAPAN.—Mr. Ward, the American Minister, has gone to Japan, where matters remain in an unsettled state. 12 Russian ships of war are at Jeddo. Three men belonging to this force have been murdered, and serious consequences are not improbable. In consequence of this and other serious news, the French admiral had sent the Duchayla to Nangasaki. That steamer was to visit the different ports open to Europeans, and enforce respect for the French flag. The Japanese Government seemed anxious to avoid executing the chief stipulations of the treaties concluded with foreigners, but it was not supposed that recourse to arms would be necessary to bring them to a sense of duty.

UNITED STATES.—The preliminary examination of the Harper's Ferry conspirators took place at Charlestown, Virginia, on the 25th ult., before a court of magistrates. Brown, when called upon to accept counsel named for him by the court, made a bold and disdainful speech declining to trouble himself with a defence on the ground that his case was prejudged. The court, nevertheless, assigned the duty of defending the prisoners to two counsel, who accepted the office. Accounts from Washington state that the despatch of General Cass to Mr. Dallas, in reply to the despatch of Lord John Russell to Lord Lyons, went out by the steamer which left New York on the 22d. It is said to be firm and decided in its tone. At the same time it is understood that the instructions to General Scott are firm and conciliatory; whilst, to show the good intentions of the American Government, copies of all instructions both to General Harney and General Scott have been forwarded to Mr. Dallas. The Walker filibusters lately tried at New Orleans have all been acquitted. Professor Lowe has constructed a leviathan balloon for a journey to Europe; the process of filling it with gas commenced on the 26th ult. No definite time was fixed for the ascent, but it was to be made on some day when the weather was favourable and promised to continue so. It is said that six persons will accompany the professor.

AUSTRALIA.—Accounts from Melbourne of the 17th Sept. state that the first batch at elections had gone against Ministers. The law officers, Treasurer, and Commissioner of Crown Lands were defeated. Don, a stone-mason, had been returned to the Assembly, defeating the Treasurer. The Solicitor-General had been since returned. Trade was dull, and there was considerable speculation in mining companies; 40 of which were in the market—some of them mere bubbles. The supply of gold continued good.

Public Addresses.

LORD BROUGHAM, on Saturday, at the distribution of prizes to the pupils in connection with the East Lancashire Union of Mechanics' Institute, made the following remarks on the Maine Liquor Law:—

"Nothing can possibly be more highly interesting, more deeply important to the best interests of society than the education and general training of women. Upon that depends whether the working man shall have a good housewife for his wife, whether his children shall have a good mother to attend them, whether his home shall be made comfortable and happy to himself, and thereby a formidable rival, and the best possible rival, raised to another place, of which other place I will not go further for the present than to say, it neither has the comforts of home nor the innocence of home nor the instruction, and sound relaxation, and refreshment of home; but its enjoyment is obtained by the sacrifice of the domestic duties, by robbing the wife and children of the pence which are spent there to support the indulgences obtained, and in return for those indulgences the health of mind and body alike are undermined, and ultimately are totally subverted. There has been in some quarters a great complaint, which, however is not founded upon fact, of my having declared myself at the Bradford Social Science Congress a convert to the Maine Liquor Law. I did not declare that I was a convert to the Maine Liquor Law. I said that we were not prepared in this country for anything of the kind, that it would take a long time to prepare us for it, but that the greatest care should be taken not to encourage intemperance if we did not discourage it—nay, that the greatest care should be taken by all lawful, moderate, rational means to discourage it; and that the public mind being prepared (which I am afraid it will not be until after a long course of discussion and controversy for its enlightenment), then, I did not say the Maine Liquor Law, but a legislative repression, should be applied to the sale of intoxicating liquors, which fill our gaols with criminals and our workhouses with paupers. It is always disagreeable, as well as unprofitable for the cause one supports, to commit any exaggerations. It is an old saying that you diminish all that you exaggerate. It is like turning the telescope round the wrong way, so that instead of bringing near the objects of your view and making them appear great, you make near objects appear distant. That is the consequence of exaggeration; therefore I would carefully avoid it; and yet I have very high authority on the subject to which I have been referring—the authority of one of the most eloquent preachers who ever appeared in this country—I would say the most eloquent preacher, and I speak from having read his sermons and from having had the advantage also of hearing him upon one occasion. When I went with my late lamented friend Lord Denman, the Chief Justice, to hear Robert Hall, I can only say that, at one part of the admirable sermon which he then preached, we both, as by one impulse and of one accord, turned round one to the other and said, 'Plunkett!' which was comparing him to the greatest orator of late times, who since Pitt, Fox, and Sheridan have been no more, is the greatest orator by much who has been known in this country. Well, Robert Hall was applied to one day, by a reverend friend of his who called upon him in the course of the morning, and who was fatigued with his walk, to give him a little brandy and water. 'I will,' said Robert Hall, 'if you will give it its right name.' 'What is that?' asked his friend. 'Distilled damnation.' Now, Robert Hall is a man of great eloquence, and may be allowed to exaggerate a little, which I do not. I give you this as an instance that I might have gone a great deal further with high authority than I did at Bradford upon this subject."

The EARL of ELLENBOROUGH has addressed the following letter to Lord Brougham on the state of Italy:—

"I propose to subscribe a small sum to the fund for the purchase of arms to be placed at the disposal of Garibaldi. If all those who wish well to the cause of independence in Italy would, for the same purpose, subscribe such small sums as they can spare without inconvenience, the aggregate amount of their contributions would be large, and they would materially assist in supplying the Italians with the means of making themselves respected. Arms, organization, and discipline constitute the real strength of a people. In proportion to that strength is the respect it obtains. Upon that foundation alone the independence of every country must really rest. I admit, with deep regret, that the Italians have, as yet, made but little use of the opportunity which the events of the war have placed before them. They have confined themselves very much to rejoicings in anticipation of the independence which they have neither achieved nor deserved. They have been waiting to receive from the hands of others that which they should disdain to owe to any other hands but their own. Acting under the direction of men hastily selected, and unequal to the crisis in which they were called forth to govern, they are even now, I fear, in Central Italy, insufficiently prepared against the threatened invasion of the two most contemptible of armies—those of Naples and of the Pope. I will still hope for better things. I will hope that, stimulated by the insults to Italy which are conveyed in the demands France is about to make in the Congress, they will rise to vindicate their right to choose their own Government, and clutch the arms by which alone it can be secured. There is in Italy one man who has at once a head to direct, a hand to execute, and a heart which tells him what is right. That man is Garibaldi. Let the Italians follow where he leads, and they will at least acquire the honour which has been so long unknown to them as a people. He has no measures to observe with France. If he should obtain success, he will not consent to hold the provinces he liberates as a fief of the French Empire. He will not lend himself to the carrying out of the idea of the First Napoleon, that France should be surrounded by weak dependent States. If the Italians should obtain no change but that of substituting the influence of France for that of Austria, they will only have changed the outward form of their humiliation, and have laid the foundations of perpetual disunion and of constantly recurring war in their country. I believe that the creation of a great, united, and independent State in Italy (and to be independent it must be great) would tend more than any other measure which could be adopted to secure the peace of Central Europe. Incapable of entertaining projects of conquest beyond the Alps, which it would be evidently impossible to realise, such a state would have a common interest with Austria in closing that natural barrier against the foreigner; and Austria, relieved from all apprehension on the side of Italy, would, in union with Germany, present on the Rhine and on the Vistula a concentrated strength which no ambition would assail, because none could hope to overcome. This was the opinion I formed at the Congress of Vienna. I expressed it in the House of Commons in 1816. I have adhered to it through life. The unexpected events in the early part of this year appeared at one time to place this great result almost within our grasp. I will still trust that such high hopes have not been held out to Europe only for a moment, to be then dashed away and to deceive. I will still trust that the Italians may prove themselves not unworthy of their fortune, and may be mindful of other and higher traditions than those to which France has directed their regards. At least, let us, sympathising with them in circumstances which were once our own, place in their hands the arms by which alone, under Providence, their redemption can be achieved. In the will of Providence must rest their success, but with arms in their hands they may at least, instead of being unresistingly transferred, like cattle, by foreigners, fall nobly like soldiers in the field, and acquire that glorious name which has been accorded by the concurrence of all ages to those who perish in the attempt to liberate their country. It would give me much satisfaction to learn that you approve the step I propose to take, and that, although you may not agree with me in all particulars, you agree with me in the main in the views I have expressed."

MR. DISRAELI at Manchester last week spoke as follows on the advantages of knowledge and on the opportunity which comes to every man once in his life of bettering his condition:—

"It is generally the custom with those who occupy the position which I fill to-night to dilate upon the advantage of knowledge in itself, and to assure all those whom they address that 'knowledge is its own reward,' and that its acquisition is quite sufficient to compensate for all exertions and stimulate to further efforts. Certainly I am the last man who would for a moment maintain a contrary opinion. I know very well from my own experience, as many must know who are here, that there is a reward in learning which far outweighs all the social advantages of life; that knowledge is its own exceeding reward; and that whatever may be the position of the individual, the possession of a certain amount of knowledge will always alleviate the circumstances that otherwise might be productive to him of discontent or annoyance. I am anxious however to meet some hard assertions that are often made with regard to institutions of this kind, and the great labour of love in which many are engaged for the advancement of their fellow creatures and the dissemination of knowledge—some hard assertions which would maintain that in a country like this it is useless or almost hopeless for a man to attempt to raise himself by cultivating his mind, the obstacles to advancement being so very considerable. Now I am of quite a contrary opinion. I do not think there is any fallacy greater than that which holds up England as a country where it is difficult to advance for those who have intelligence and integrity. I quite admit that in a new country, in a colony, for example, where land is not appropriated, and there is a scattered population, there is, at first sight, a coarse facility offered to physical energy, which reaps a rapid and considerable reward. Those opportunities, though obvious, are of a monotonous character; there is only one means, and that means often becomes sooner exhausted than is expected. But, in a country of ancient civilisation, I maintain that according to the social combinations the opportunities proportionately increase—that there is a greater amount of social combinations which allow a qualified individual to rise in the world than in countries less advanced. I remember Lord Stanley pointing out to me a gentleman in the House of Commons who had been recently returned there, and he said 'That is a very able man, from whom I think something may be expected.' I won't mention his name, not because I wish to avoid personalities, for, alas! he is no longer among us; a terrible and unforeseen accident took him from this world. But Lord Stanley said, 'That is a man who has one of the greatest establishments in England'—I believe it was the making of machines—'and he has three persons in his employment who have all risen from the ranks, who are engaged at a salary each of 1500*l.* a year.' And as my noble friend remarked to me on the benches of the House of Commons, when we were venturing to enjoy ourselves with a little private conversation during a dull speech, 'You see how that gentleman is endeavouring to become an Under-Secretary of State; why, this manufacturer has got three men in his employ at the same salary as an Under-Secretary of State.' Now these are facts not to be passed over with negligence, and I want to know what country in the world offers such a reward and such a premium for intelligence and integrity as the one to which I am referring? I know it may be said that this is a very peculiar circumstance, that the North of England is in possession of a considerable industry of a remarkable kind; but that it is 'exceptional,' to use a fashionable epithet, and that you cannot pretend that in England generally that is the course of human affairs. Now, I totally differ again from this opinion; and these are opinions that are perpetually brought forward to damp the ardour of the aspiring people of this country. I live in a part of the world very different from the world in which the majority of those by whom I am at present surrounded live. I live in a part of the world where there are no great towns, and none of the obvious means upon which you count to stimulate emulation and to facilitate co-operation; where the industry, though it is a great industry, is chiefly, if not entirely, employed in the cultivation of land; and there we are constantly told that it is impossible that an Englishman can rise. Well, now, I have always been very much interested in the subject of how men rise in the world, and I have analysed the community in which I live, and I find myself surrounded by self-formed men, who by their character and intelligence have raised themselves always to a respectable and often to an influential position. I will venture to give you an instance. A little while ago a farmer asked me to dine with him in a barn. Now, the barn I will not say was as noble a building as this hall, but I can assure you it was a barn in which a very considerable public meeting might have been held. However, his public meeting consisted only of his sons and two generations besides of his descendants. There was a patriarch with 70 or 80 of his progeny, and he had followed the plough when a boy upon the broad acres which he had successfully cultivated; and he told me that as now, though not weary, he had had sufficient of the labour of life, it was his intention—and he fulfilled the intention—to divide his fortune, which was not inconsiderable, among his sons, and retire upon the rents of a freehold property which he possessed. Well, that is not a single case; it is a case I won't say not remarkable, but one for which many parallels may even in the same class of society be furnished. I could go through a variety of instances in our rural life in which men have risen to a considerable position under my eye, as it were, and within my own experience, and I have found invariably that if a man has a head upon his shoulders, whether he lives in Lancashire or Buckinghamshire, he generally gets on in the world. I would therefore impress upon those whom I have the honour of addressing this evening, not for a moment to suppose that all that they obtain by the effort which they have made is that they are to be applauded by their fellow-citizens, and to be recognised with momentary approbation under circumstances like the present. I want to impress upon them that if they continue the effort by which they have arrived at this result, they will advance themselves in the social sphere, and will obtain that which every Englishman ought as a right to look forward to—the raising of his social condition. Now, I would very humbly, if I might presume to offer any advice, especially to young men who are present, I would say this, 'Take this as an incontrovertible principle, accept this as a moral dogma in your life—every man has his opportunity.' Now, the great point is this, it may be a long time coming; but, depend upon it, it is sure to arrive, and what you have got to do in the interval is to prepare yourself for that opportunity. When I say that every man has his opportunity, and venture to lay that down as a principle which cannot for a moment be controverted, I will admit to you that many men have their opportunity and are not capable of availing themselves of it. I will venture to give you two instances occurring in my own experience within a very few months. In the first a gentleman in a public office, in consequence of an unexampled combination of circumstances arising from deaths and retirements, rose to the head of his department, and though he knew for more than 20 years that that high post might sooner or later be the prize of his existence, he was so dreadfully alarmed by his own want of ability when it came to him, that he refused to accept that which for nearly a quarter of a century he had been dreaming of. In the second case a young man who had distinguished himself highly in official life was recommended for advancement, and was appointed to a post which would have secured his independence, and have led him to a high position at no distant day, but he was unable to accept the offer because he was not a French scholar. That was an instance of opportunity lost, not by want of ability, but by a want of acquirement. I say, therefore, that every man has an opportunity, and though he may not be equal to the occasion that offers, it is not his destiny that he ought to condemn, but his own indifference or negligence. Now, it is said, and it is a very dangerous saying, though a very common one, that 'life is a lottery.' Life is not a lottery. Life is a science, and certain qualities and certain talents, properly handled and properly managed, must lead to certain results. Depend upon it, that this is a truth which you must accept, which, if you believe in, you will find a very considerable change in your life. No man has a right to be discontented with his position if he accepts as a principle of existence that an opportunity will be offered him in the course of that existence, because, until the opportunity offers, he ought to be preparing himself for it. And what a source—I will not say of amusement, that is a minor phrase—what a source of interest and excitement is the continual preparation for the inevitable occasion."

MR. BRIGHT, M.P., has addressed the following letter to an association of small house-owners in Birmingham:—

"Rochdale, October 10, 1859.

"Sir,—I have to thank you for sending me the pamphlet on the income tax. You ask my opinion of that tax: I have often expressed it in public, both in the House of Commons and out of it, and it seems scarcely necessary for me to state it again. I may however say that I agree with almost every word said against it in your pamphlet; and the longer I know the tax and the more I examine it, the more I think it hateful and intolerable. Up to this point we are agreed, but here you leave me in the dark. As one of your representatives you expect me to do something, and you wish me to promise that I will oppose, at all risks, any re-enactment of the income-tax laws. Now, let me ask you how it is that with a population greatly increased, and with wealth greatly increased, even beyond the increase of population, there is so much and, as we all feel, such just dissatisfaction with the amount and with the system of our taxation? Is it not because the national expenditure rises constantly and rapidly, apparently without any regard to the real necessities of Government? There is no department in which the expenditure has not largely increased during the last 10 years, and every year exhibits a greater contempt of economy on the part of the Administration and the Parliament. The Russian war threw wide open the door of the national exchequer, and since 1854 the great fund gathered from the industry of the people has been an easy prey to those who, on hollow pretences of every kind, manage to live at the expense of the payers of taxes. The House of Commons does nothing to check the extravagance, it encourages it. Its members are not so much of the tax-paying as of the tax-consuming class. They come from, and they chiefly represent those whose families have for generations considered the taxation of the people as their lawful patrimony. The eldest of the family takes the estate in land, and the rest of the family occupy their lives mainly in a scramble for their undivided interest in that other estate, contributed yearly by the payers of taxes. The House of Commons will not check the extravagance of the administration of the department, and it will not levy the taxes with any reference to what is just in the imposition of national burdens. For 60 years it has levied a heavy probate duty on personal property, from which land and freehold property have been and are now exempt. For nearly 60 years it levied a heavy legacy duty on personal property, from which land and freehold property were exempt. In the year 1853 it pretended to correct this injustice as regards the legacy duty, by imposing a succession tax on land and freehold property, but it did this in a way to charge land and freehold property not more than one-fourth of the amount which is charged on all other kinds of property. This succession tax was to have raised two millions sterling a year; up to this time I believe it has not reached 800,000*l.* in any one year. The whole taxation of the country last year exceeded 65 millions sterling. Of this vast sum not 10 millions were raised by taxes affecting only the possessors of the visible property of the country. The Customs and Excise alone raised more than 42,000,000*l.*, collected on articles the great bulk of which is consumed by that portion of the population which has no property but its labour and no income but its wages, and which, as might be expected from the fact just stated, has no voice in Parliament, and is wholly without representation in the government of the country. The Parliament (I speak of the two Houses) is a Parliament of the rich, it has no immediate interest in economy or in equal taxation. It is powerful enough to secure to the class which it really represents the patronage and the emoluments which are to be disposed of, in the spending of the vast sums which find their way into the national exchequer. What can I do? What can any single member of Parliament do? I can protest—I can describe your grievance! I can denounce the wrong! I can say that a Government that is unjust will some day be overthrown. But all this and much more will not loosen the grasp of the insatiable hand against whose extortion you complain. So long as the middle class of our population will tolerate a system of mock representation, based on the coercion of county constituencies, and the corruption of the boroughs; so long as the power of the great proprietors of the soil in the one case, and the power of money in the other, return an overwhelming majority of the House of Commons—so long there can be no hope of any economical administration, and of a just distribution of the public burdens; and so long as the millions of workmen, whose toil and skill produce all the wonders of which our national industry can boast, are purposely and insultingly excluded from any direct and legal influence in the election of members of Parliament, so long they may and must bear a load of taxation wholly beyond their means to support. There is something essentially mean and singularly cruel in the manner in which the taxation of this country has been and is still levied. Our rich class is the richest in Europe; the administration of the country is in its hands, and a greater proportion of the heaviest taxation in the world is thrown upon the class possessing no property but its labour and wages than is the case in any other country with whose system of taxation we are acquainted. What is the remedy? It is to be found only in a change in the authority by which taxes are levied and the public funds expended. A monarch solely, or a monarch and an aristocracy, or both, working with a mock representation, never did, and never can give any security for economy in governments, or for a just imposition of public burdens. They are admirable institutions, uncontrolled, to enrich the rich; and an aristocracy working with and through a mock representation is the most complete instrument ever devised to squeeze wealth from the toil of a nation under the pretence of governing it. The only real security for economy in government and for fairness in the laying on of burdens is to be found in a House of Commons which shall honestly represent the people of the United Kingdom. Let the householders of England, Scotland, and Ireland, let the heads of families, let those who form the nation speak through fairly chosen representatives in Parliament, and justice in raising taxes and economy in spending them may be hoped for. I shall do all I can in favour of this justice and this economy, but every effort will be in vain until the public purse is taken from the custody of a class, and placed under the safe keeping of the people. I will thank you to convey this expression of my views to the association you represent. I am very sorry I see so little prospect of rendering them any service. "Yours very faithfully, "JOHN BRIGHT."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY.—The presentation of the Lord Mayor at Westminster took place on Wednesday with the usual ceremonies, the unusual fineness of the day giving additional interest to the procession in its passage through the principal streets. In the evening the customary banquet was given in Guildhall. Her Majesty's Ministers were represented by Sir G. C. Lewis, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Duke of Somerset, Mr. Sidney Herbert, the Duke of Newcastle, and the Lord Chancellor, but the absence of Lord Palmerston and Lord John Russell deprived the dinner of the importance which their speeches would have given to it.

The toast of her Majesty's Ministers was acknowledged by Sir G. C. Lewis, who spoke as follows on Public Affairs:—

"My Lord Mayor, the portion of public affairs in which the inhabitants of this city are more immediately interested is our domestic and internal concerns; and I may congratulate the citizens of London that at perhaps no previous period in our history has our internal condition exhibited greater prosperity than at the present moment. Whatever standard or test you apply to that prosperity, whether you look to the great increase in our revenue, the present state of our trade, or the diminution of pauperism throughout the kingdom, you will still find the most gratifying evidence of the sound and healthy condition of our domestic affairs. There have, no doubt, been slight ripples on the surface of the stream, which would otherwise have been untroubled. We have seen one unfortunate event in which the inhabitants of this metropolis have been especially interested—I mean the disturbance which has occurred in the building trade, but which I trust is now approaching its termination. That has been an event of which her Majesty's Government have been no unconcerned spectators, although in regard to it we have felt it our duty to maintain a policy of consistent non intervention. It has been our desire not to interfere in any question between employers and their workmen, but to leave both parties to adjust their differences according to the natural law of supply and demand. And I trust the time will never arrive when any scheme of intimidation will be attempted, or any endeavour made to introduce a system of protection for labour, which must prove not less unsound in principle than the exploded doctrine of protection to agriculture, which was recently expunged from the legislation of this country with so much advantage to all classes of the community. It will not be expected that I should detain a company composed of many persons who are not politicians with lengthened remarks upon the measures which her Majesty's Government may contemplate in the existing state of the country. I need only say that their time has not been wasted or their attention diverted from the discharge of their public duties; that early in the ensuing session they will be prepared to redeem the pledge they formerly entered into to submit to the consideration of the Legislature a measure for the amendment of the representation of the people. There is, however, a branch of our public affairs over which we have not so much control as over our domestic concerns—I mean our foreign relations. In regard to these we are more dependent on the conduct of other States, and cannot always maintain that undisturbed tranquillity which I am happy to say has characterised our internal condition. We have seen our Minister who was sent to obtain the ratification of a treaty at Pekin treated with outrage. We have seen that our agents, acting literally upon their instructions as to ascending the river which led to that capital, were without notice fired upon by the Chinese, and that a disastrous loss of life ensued. My lord, it will be the purpose of her Majesty's Government, in unison with the Emperor of the French, to take such measures as will enable us to secure from the Chinese Emperor the terms to which we are entitled by treaty, and which will at the same time maintain our national honour. I need hardly call your attention to the events recently witnessed on the Continent which have led to a sanguinary campaign in Italy, and in respect to which her Majesty's Government have abstained from all interference. But the time may come when, treaties having been signed, ulterior measures may be contemplated by the great Powers of Europe, and when it is probable that invitations may be addressed to the Governments which were parties to the Treaty of Vienna to join in a continental Congress for the settlement of the affairs of Italy. Hitherto however I may say that no formal invitation to a Congress relative to the affairs of Italy has been addressed to her Majesty's Government. But if at any future time such an invitation should be sent to them, it will be their duty to deliberate upon the matter with a view to maintain a principle which we regard as sacred—viz., that no force shall be used for the purpose of dictating to the Italian nation in the choice of their rulers, or of coercing them in respect to the Government which, after mature deliberation, they may prefer. The recent campaign in Italy has led to a general arming among the great Powers of Europe. The storm which raged in Italy created a disturbance in other countries which has not yet subsided; and it becomes us, looking to the unsettled state of Europe, to be prepared with our national defences, and not to be dependent on the sufferance of any other Power whatever, however friendly. I rejoice to find that all the assurances which her Majesty's Government have received from foreign States are of a perfectly friendly and pacific character. Her Majesty's Government have no reason to believe that any nation in Europe, or in any other part of the world, entertains hostile intentions towards this country. Nevertheless, having regard to the present aspect and condition of foreign States, it behoves us, as our greatest poet says, to 'wear our eye not jealous, nor secure.' We must remember—and it is a most satisfactory and consolatory reflection—that, considering the wealth and resources of this country, if any real danger presented itself, we should always be enabled to confront it in an adequate and effective manner. But I trust that nobody in this hall will think it is the wish of her Majesty's Government to countenance or encourage any light or groundless alarm. We are bound to guard against not merely a probable, but even a possible danger. Whenever probable danger does arise her Majesty's Government will feel it their duty to take every necessary step for the protection of our shores; and in doing so they feel confident that they can at all times rely on the spirit of a great, a generous, and a mighty people."

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.—At a special meeting of the Board on Friday at Guildhall, it was resolved by a considerable majority, after a long and angry discussion, to contribute to the City Commissioners of Sewers one-third of the estimated cost of certain improvements about to be made in the thoroughfares of Little Knightrider Street, Sise Lane Budge Row, and at the corner of Broad Street and Fish Street. The Works and Improvements Committee, to whom this proposition had been referred by the Board, recommended the Board to decline entertaining it, on the ground that the improvements in question were of a purely local, and not a metropolitan character. The vote of Friday not only rejected this recommendation but affirmed the principle that all the outlying parts of the metropolis are liable to contribute towards street improvements within the limits of the city.

THE MORTARA ABDUCTION.—On Monday afternoon a deputation waited on Lord John Russell at the Foreign Office for the purpose of laying before him, as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a protest against the abduction of the boy Mortara, and to ask "that her Majesty's Government, in case they should take any part in the settlement of the Italian question, will cause the subject of the Papal treatment of the Jews to be brought before the consideration of the Governments of Europe." The deputation consisted of Sir Culling Eardley, Mr. Samuel Gurney, M.P., Major-General Alexander, and other gentlemen. Sir Culling Eardley having addressed his lordship in a long speech, and handed the protest to him, Lord John Russell made the following reply:—

"I believe I have correctly understood the views of the deputation. With regard to the case itself, it is, as you have very properly observed, unnecessary to use argument with any person in my situation as British Minister for Foreign Affairs. We should of course consider it a gross violation of parental rights for any person to take a child from its parents, and for the State to protect that violation. Nor does the allegation which has been made, that the parents of this child have violated the law of the country by taking a Christian nursemaid into their service, make the case any better. I am sure that if in this country any one was to propose that Roman Catholics should be prevented from taking a Protestant nursery-maid into their service every Roman Catholic would cry out against it as a gross violation of religious liberty, and would maintain that such a law would be only an aggravation of the offence of taking the child from its parents. So that upon the justice of the case there need be no argument. But as to the conduct of the British Government, you ask that I should communicate the wishes of this respectable deputation to my colleagues, which I will certainly do. Of course, when one has to deal with the laws and usages of foreign nations the matter is always surrounded with difficulties. In the first place, one ought to have a very strong case of violation, not merely of our notions of freedom, whether political or religious, but of the common sentiments of justice which all European nations entertain. In the next place, the peculiar laws of the different nations before whom the question might come must be considered. The laws of Rome are not such as we can at all approve. In France there is complete toleration for the Jews, and has been for a considerable time; but with regard to other European nations it is impossible to say what view they may take as bearing upon their own legislation with respect to the Jews. I can only say, therefore, that the matter must be well considered before the name of the British nation is put forward in making representations to procure redress. At the same time I admit the case is one in which all our feelings of what is due to parents are violated, and that must I think be very generally felt. It is, no doubt, part of the legislation of Rome, with its view of the necessity of belonging to the Roman Catholic Church, and which would of course make that Church and the Roman authorities entirely hostile to any representation which might be made, and therefore I think it would be of no use whatever to make representations to the Papal Government on this subject. I have, however, listened attentively to what has been said, and will take care that my colleagues shall hear of what has taken place at this interview."

SCHILLER FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The centenary festival of Schiller was celebrated on Thursday at the Crystal Palace, in the presence of upwards of 20,000 persons. It commenced with a musical performance, followed by an oration on the genius of Schiller delivered by Dr. Kinkel. A cantata to the memory of Schiller was then sung, during the performance of which a colossal bust of Schiller, by Grass, which occupied the centre of the orchestra, was unveiled amid loud cheers. This was followed by another musical performance, including the "Song of the Bell" with Romberg's music, and the festival closed with a torchlight procession in the grounds, accompanied by a display of the great fountains.

THE WRECK OF THE ROYAL CHARTER.—The inquest terminated on Friday when the jury returned the following verdict:—"From the evidence tendered we are unanimously of opinion that the deceased, James Walton and others, unfortunately lost their lives on board the Royal Charter by pure accident; that Captain Taylor was perfectly sober, and had done all in his power to save the ship and the lives of passengers." The Board of Trade has since instituted an inquiry into the loss of the ship, and it is understood that the inquiry will be opened on Tuesday next at Liverpool. A subscription has been opened in that town for the relief of the sufferers, and upwards of 1000*l.* has already been contributed. Another bar of gold has been recovered from the wreck. From the advices received at Lloyd's the wreck does not appear to have materially changed in position, and hopes are entertained that by far the greater part, if not the whole, of the gold will be saved. In connection with the melancholy facts attending the wreck, it may be stated that Lord Boston, as lord of the manor of the district near which the disaster took place, has sent in a claim to all property or treasure that may be washed ashore. The following is a complete list of the passengers on board the Royal Charter, furnished by Messrs. Gibbs, Bright, & Co., the owners:—

Saloon.—Mr. Hugh Bethune, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce, infant, and servant; Mr. H. Beamer, jun; Mr. and Mrs. Davis, two daughters and two sons; Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Fowler, and two Miss Fowlers, and servant; Mrs. Fenwick and four children, Mrs. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. J. Grove, Mr and Mrs. Gardner (Mr. Gardner landed at Cork), Mr. Gundry (saved), Mr. F. T. Hatton, Rev. Charles Hodge, Dr. Hatch, Mr. J. S. Henry, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Jenkins and five sons, Mr. Walter Lafargue, Mr. and Mrs. James Murray, Miss, and Master Murray; Mr. Joseph M'Evoy (landed at Cork), Mr. Mellor, Mr. Molineux, Mr. W. H. Morse (saved), Mr. R. F. MacGeorge, Mrs. Von der Nahmer and child (landed at Cork), Mr. W. H. and Mrs. Pitcher, two children and servant; Mr. Rufford, Mrs. Tweedale, Mr. Henry E. Taylor, child, and servant (Mr. Taylor saved), Mr. Welsh, Captain Withers, Mrs. Woodruff and child, and Mr. G. Watson.

Second Class.—Mr. Allen and two children (landed at Cork), Captain Adams, Mr Barratt and son, Mr. Charles Cadbs, Mr and Mrs. Dodd and two children, Miss F. Davis, Mr. Eddowes, Mr. Bird, Mr. Edward Gates, Mr T. E. Gapper (saved), Mrs. Glover, Mr. John Griffiths, Mr. William Harlden, Mr Henderson, Mr. John Loome (saved), Mr. Lothlaine, Mr. L. E. Mention (saved), Mr. John Maule, Mr. M'Nab, Mr. T. Macready, Mr. Nicholas, Mrs. Norman and two children, Mr. Portnay, Mr. Perry, Mr. Edmund Pearce, Mrs. R Rose, Mr. and Mrs Russell, and two children (Mr. Russell saved); Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and three children; Mr. Solomon Samuel, Mr. Lansan, Mr. Julius Stirke (landed at Cork); Miss Elizabeth Ward, Miss M. E Wrigley, Mr. Edward Watson, Mr. John Wilks, and Mr. Watson.

Steerage and Third Class.—John Bradbury (saved), Mr. Lyons, wife, and three children; J. Trusteman and two children; Henry Burns and child, Nathaniel Nathan, Alice Newton, J. Churton, John and Catharine Drygan, John Judge (saved), Maurice Boyle, James Dean (saved), Wright Lockwood, J. Moss, Mr. Faulkner and child, Robert Jeffrey, P. De La Lande, David Thompson, Mrs. Kennedy and two children, Thomas Wade, J. W. Kett and party, C. Zuccemann, Messrs. Jones and Rice, C. Kisterman, Messrs. Culma, Sturt, and Lyon; Charles Conway, Mr. Kirkbride and two sons, Mr. Kennedy, wife, and three children; William Banks, David Thomas, C. R. Ross, W. S. Fenis (saved), J. M'Cappin (saved), T. Taylor, Robert Hagarth, Henry Ingmans, William and John Row, Messrs. Tripit and Lowe, William Makepeace, Thomas Fawcett, William Bowles (saved), James King, Denis Collins, William and T. Murray, John Buchanan, C. M'Phail (saved), J. Robinson, Alexander Pettinger, R. Oliver and party, P. Hogarth and one child, William Ford, C. Shanahan, David Fell, William Wilson, George Smith, Michael Frawley, Messrs. Derose and Kenny, John Pardy, R. Haystaff, Frank Webber, George Watson, Mr. Holland and three children, Isaac Stephenson, Mrs. Athey and child, T. Spyagbe, George Chesney, Thomas Byrne, John Grice, Matthew Scott, Houghton and Thomson, T. Wood, Thomson and Milliken, Noah Lyons, Wm. Green, Robert Tuck, Joseph Gibson, John Wotherspoon, John Lynch, Charles Anderson, P. Thomson, E. Fowler, H. Ivey, L. Perut, Michael Kavanagh, Antonio Albergati, Drithon and Rella, Morelli and Cavagna, John and P. Martin, George Lenn, Henry Lawton, George Taylor, Samuel Grenfell (saved), E. Allen, John Anderson, S. Dalton, William Storey, W. Crowley, Mrs. Ross, child, and infant, D. Travers, T. Wyatt, James Sullivan, James Turner, Mr. Carthy and three children, B. Bladen, Mr. Patterite, Williams Bebop, Mrs. Wells and two children, John Gillespie, Thomas Kelly, Mr. Mitchell and wife, William Fleming, John Scott, John Mathieson, Charles Parkinson, John Parkinson (or Ranson), James Pamplin, Miss Davidson, Henry Sims, John Manton, Samuel Mosely Wade, Nicolai Le Page, Mrs. M'Leod and two children, William Tany, John Inglis, Richard Davis, Joseph Potts, Frank Heyland, E. Willray, Miss Susannah Morton, John Mason, T. Bakewell, James Black, and Beratti Vingenga.

THE WRECK OF THE PARAMATTA.—An official inquiry, instituted by the Board of Trade, into the circumstances attending the loss of the Royal Mail Steamship Paramatta was opened on Wednesday at the Greenwich Police Court before Mr. Traill, police magistrate, and Captain Harris, nautical assessor. The ship, supposed to be the finest ever built, and of an estimated value of nearly 200,000*l.*, was wrecked on the 30th June last on the Anegeda Reef, on her voyage from Southampton to St. Thomas, being her first and only voyage. After the examination of Captain Baynton and other officers of the ship, the inquiry was adjourned to Thursday, when it appeared that the company were desirous of adjourning the case for the attendance of witnesses who are now in the West Indies. Mr. Traill and Capt. Harris expressed their opinion that they were already in possession of correct grounds on which to form a judgment, but it was ultimately determined to adjourn the inquiry until a day, hereafter to be fixed, in December next.

THE CONVICT SMETHURST.—It was stated yesterday by one of the morning papers that the case of Smethurst had been disposed of, and that he had received a free pardon. The Globe of last evening says that this statement is not correct. No free pardon has been granted, and the case has not been disposed of in any way.

THE WESTMINSTER BELL.—It is said that a commission of scientific and practical men is to be appointed to report upon the condition of the bell and the causes of its fracture, and that nothing will be decided with respect to the recasting until they have made their report. An officer of the Board of Works has possession of the key of the belfry, and access is denied to every person, with the exception of the person appointed to wind up the clock every eighth day.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—The Mayor and Corporation of Southampton paid an official visit to the Great Eastern on Saturday, and presented the Directors with a congratulatory address. The ship had very rough weather during her late voyage from Holyhead, and rolled considerably in the heavy sea which was running off the Land's End. She will remain at Southampton until she is refitted, and is to be exhibited to the public daily until further notice.

COLLECTION OF LAND, ASSESSED, AND INCOME TAXES.—It is understood that the authorities have decided upon a plan for the collection of these taxes which will be more economical, impartial, and safer than the present system of employing tradesmen as collectors in the respective districts. All vacancies occurring among the local tax collectors before the 5th of April next will be filled up by excise officers, and after that period the present collectors will be dispensed with, and their duties handed over to the excise officers.

THE LATE FLOGGING CASE AT WOOLWICH.—The Artilleryman Davis, who was recently flogged at Woolwich under circumstances which excited a large amount of public sympathy, deserted from the regiment a few days after his release from hospital, and has not since been heard of. Before leaving Woolwich he stated that he had such a dread of the lash that he would sooner be shot than remain a soldier. Every kindness and attention was paid to the man after he left the hospital, and in consideration of the unhealed state of his back he was ordered to be relieved from drill. It is stated that no steps will be taken for his apprehension.

THE STRIKE.—The number of men who had resumed work under the declaration up to Saturday, the 5th inst., was 13,320; under shop rule, about 3000. The committee at its rising adjourned for a month.

THE RUSSIAN COMPANY.—A letter from the Board of Trade, stating that the Government is considering the advisability of abolishing the Russian Company, was read at the meeting of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce on Monday. The Chamber, on the report of a special committee, agreed to memorialise the Government for the abolition of the Elbe tolls.

ST. GEORGE'S IN THE EAST.—At the conclusion of the consecration of St. Matthew's church on Friday the Bishop of London took advantage of the presence of the rector and churchwardens to endeavour to bring about some arrangement which might be satisfactory to both parties, and might thus tend to the restoration of peace in the parish. After hearing the statements, made with great temper and forbearance on both sides, and on a distinct engagement at the time given by both parties to be bound by his judgment, the Bishop decided that the rector's afternoon service should precede that of the lecturer, and that the service of the latter should commence at half-past 3 o'clock. His lordship also decided that the unusual vestments which had caused so much dissatisfaction to the parishioners should be discontinued. It was consequently arranged that the parish church should be re-opened forthwith. In accordance with this arrangement the church was re-opened on Sunday, but the result has shown that the mediation has ended in nothing, except indeed in inducing a fiercer and more outrageous display of passion on the part of the parishioners than has hitherto been experienced. The morning service was conducted by the Rev. Bryan King, the rector, in his usual way, with the single exception that he omitted the Communion service, and stated in his sermon that he had done so because he could not wear the coloured vestments, telling the congregation that "their services henceforward would be performed without those Eucharistic vestments which were familiar to them, that he could never again put on those beautiful robes, and henceforth, therefore, they must worship God in this holy sacrifice in the garb of humiliation." The service was slightly disturbed by hisses at one or two points, but it passed off on the whole without disturbance. In the afternoon however, when the rector's service, which the Bishop had ordered to precede that of the lecturer, was commenced by Mr. King kneeling before the altar and chanting the Litany, he was hissed, hooted, and yelled at during the whole of the service, and at its close made his way with difficulty to the vestry, from which in a few minutes afterwards the Rev. Hugh Allen came, habited in a surplice, without either hood or stole, and performed the second service. In order to prevent any further disturbance the 7 o'clock service was suspended by desire of the rector, and contrary to the wishes of the churchwardens. The rector has since issued a notice requesting gentlemen who are willing to act as special constables to communicate with him immediately, intimating that strangers must forward a clerical reference. In consequence of this notice the churchwardens and vestry have had an interview with the Home Secretary and the Commissioners of Police, the result of which appears to be that the enrolment of special constables will be forbidden, and a sufficient body of police be sent to the church to-morrow to preserve order.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Return states that the deaths in London rose to 1182 in the week that ended Saturday, Nov. 3. In the corresponding weeks of the ten years 1849-58 the average number was 1038; which if raised in proportion to the increase of population will become 1141. The return of last week was therefore 41 above the average. During the week the births of 980 boys and 908 girls, in all 1888 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1849-58 the average number was 1570.

Provincial.

CAMBRIDGE.—At a congregation held on Friday the Hon. and Rev. Latimer Neville, Master of Magdalen College, was appointed Vice-Chancellor for the ensuing year.—Since the great meeting in the Senate House for promoting the mission to Central Africa, the members of the Oxford, Cambridge, and London committees have held a conference, and determined to prosecute the enterprise if possible on a more extended scale than was at first proposed. It is now contemplated to send out six clergymen, with a bishop at their head, to be consecrated either in this country or by the three bishops of Southern Africa, and also to despatch at the same time a medical practitioner and a number of artificers and labourers, with a view especially to the cultivation of cotton. The cost of establishing such a mission is estimated at 20,000*l.*, and it is also calculated that subscriptions to the amount of 2000*l.* per annum will be required for five years, after which time it is calculated that the work will become self-supporting. Communications are to be opened at once with the clergy and the friends of missions generally, and also with the great centres of manufactures and commerce for the purpose of raising the required funds. The Bishop of Oxford has requested Archdeacon Mackenzie, of Pieter-Maritzburg, in the colony of Natal, to head the mission; and the rev. gentleman will probably do so, as he has for some time been carrying on the missionary work in Natal without fee or reward.

HALIFAX.—The church of All Souls erected in this town, on the estate and at the sole cost of Mr. Edward Ackroyd, late M.P. for Huddersfield, was opened for Divine service last week by the Bishops of Ripon and Durham. The entire cost, independent of the burial-ground, is estimated at from 60,000*l.* to 80,000*l.* A permanent endowment has been provided by Mr. Ackroyd, in whom the patronage of the new ecclesiastical parish of Haley Hill is vested.

HANLEY.—On Saturday afternoon an accident occurred at one of the pits belonging to Earl Granville at Star Green, by which 10 men were killed and 10 others severely injured. A "cage" containing 14 men was ascending the shaft of the "Big Pit," while another cage with six or seven men in it was going down at the same time. As the ascending cage drew near the surface the signal bell in the engine-room sounded as usual in order that the engine might be at once stopped. The engine tenter was, however, a few seconds too late in attending to his signal, and the consequence was that one cage was drawn up beyond the wheel while the other went to the bottom of the shaft with a heavy shock. As the ascending cage was drawn over the wheel, the whole 14 men, with one exception, were precipitated beneath. Six fell down the shaft and were dashed to pieces. Three fell on the pavement at the pit's mouth, and one on the iron pavement and was killed on the spot. Four who were thrown on the ground received fearful injuries. The occupants of the descending cage were all more or less injured by their fall, but none of them were killed. The engine tenter, Gallard, whose negligence led to the accident was taken into custody, and the Government inspector having stated at the inquest on Tuesday that the accident was caused by his not beginning soon enough to slacken speed, the jury, after consulting together for a quarter of an hour, returned a verdict of Manslaughter against him. The jury at the same time stated their opinion that if two men had not gone in to him and diverted his attention, the accident in all probability would not have happened. Gallard, who bears a most excellent character, was then committed to Stafford gaol for trial.

HULL.—Mr. Jesse Arbon, the rate collector of this town, has been committed for trial charged with embezzling money belonging to the board, and with obtaining other money belonging to them. The defalcations already discovered amount to nearly 3000*l.*

KIDSGROVE.—A fatal explosion of gunpowder took place in this village on Sunday week. Mr. Leadbetter, watchmaker, intending to shoot at a pigeon match on Monday morning took a fancy for drying his powder on Saturday night, and with this view put his flask into the oven of the back room grate, after the fire had been raked out. Of course he intended to take it out again early the next morning before the fire was lighted, but he forgot to do so, or to mention what he had done, and the consequence was an explosion which broke the leg of his wife in so shocking a manner that she died from loss of blood before it was possible to amputate the limb.

LIVERPOOL.—The Austrian bark Tyro, of Fiume, from Sulina, went ashore on Monday on the Little Burbo bank, the sea making a clear breach over her. Lifeboats and steam-tugs went to her assistance, but their efforts were of no avail, the ship rapidly went to pieces, and the captain, crew, and pilot were drowned.

PLYMOUTH.—A court-martial was held on Monday on board her Majesty's ship Impregnable for the trial of Lieut. Marcus Patrick Costello, of the Diadem, 32, for having been drunk on board in the forenoon of the 28th of October, and incapable of performing his duty. The prisoner pleaded "Guilty" to the charge, and in extenuation said he attended a ball on shore on the previous night, and had not had any rest for the night. He drank but very little, but, having received a sunstroke some time back, a small quantity of liquor took effect on him. In reply to the Court, the captain said the prisoner was not offensive, but, on the contrary, his demeanour was quite respectful. The Court sentenced the prisoner to be dismissed her Majesty's service.

SHEFFIELD.—An attempt was made last week to blow up the house of Mr. Joseph Wilson, of Headford Street, saw manufacturer in this town, while he and his family, six in number, were asleep in bed. The explosion tore up the floors of two sitting-rooms, smashing the marble mantelpieces in each room, and destroying portions of the furniture. It also blew down a partition wall, forced out the light over the front door, and considerably damaged the external walls, but none of the inmates were personally injured. The outrage is attributed to trade disputes, Mr. Wilson having refused for 14 years to employ union men, and having frequently been held up to opprobrium in placards for refusing compliance with union regulations. No clue has been obtained to the perpetrators of the outrage.

STURMINSTER.—A murder has just been committed in this county, which for some years has been remarkably free from crimes of a serious character. The victim in this case is a woman 62 years of age, the wife of George Trowbridge, a woodman in the employ of Mr. Grove, of Fern, on the borders of Dorset. They resided in a lonely spot known as Ashcombe Copse, and on Thursday morning the man went to his employment about 7 o'clock, leaving his wife at home. On his return about mid-day he found her lying on the floor with her head leaning against the wall and one of her arms resting on a chair, three or four wounds having been inflicted on different parts of her body apparently with a razor, the handle of which was found in one part of the room and the blade in another, showing that a desperate struggle must have taken place. The murderer then appears to have seized a saw, which was hanging in the lobby, with which he clett the poor woman's head almost in two. Information was at once given to the police, who commenced the most active inquiries; but up to Saturday evening they had obtained no clue to the murderer. A shepherd on an adjoining hill saw a man pass up the valley with a bundle, but beyond this nobody appears to have been seen near the premises. The motive for the perpetration of the crime remains a mystery. Several articles of wearing apparel, however, are said to have been stolen, including a coat given for long servitude by the Sturminster Agricultural Society, waistcoats, a pair of boots, and a hat; but Trowbridge's best clothes remained untouched. An inquest was held on the body of the murdered woman on Friday, and a verdict returned of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown.

TAMWORTH.—Sir Robert Peel, by the death of his mother has become possessor of the family mansion in Whitehall Gardens and the family plate, besides an annuity of 5000*l.* charged upon the Staffordshire estates.

WALSINGHAM.—The Rev. N. H. Pilkington, chaplain to Walsingham Bridewell, one of the Norfolk county prisons, draws a gloomy picture of what he describes as "the awful, almost incredible, ignorance of the agricultural classes in this district of Norfolk." During the past year 240 prisoners were committed to the Bridewell, and of these 121 could not read a letter in a book, 157 could not write their names, 57 could not say a word of the Lord's Prayer, and 84 could say it but very imperfectly, 61 could not tell who Jesus Christ was, state how or for what purpose He died, and were "to all intents and purposes heathens, being ignorant of the simplest and commonest Christian truths. . . Many who could say the Lord's Prayer said it by rote, without knowing its meaning or why it was so called. Many of them had been at school when children, some even for three or four years, but having been early removed and from that time uncared for very soon forgot what they had learnt, and in a short time became perfect heathens, not only practically, but intellectually." Mr. Pilkington strongly recommends adult evening schools as the "best means of checking and counteracting such a melancholy state of things."

WEDNESBURY.—A man named Benjamin Owen, landlord of the Cottage Spring beer-house in this town, killed his wife a few days since by a blow on the head producing congestion of the brain. Owen is about 46 years of age, and had hitherto borne a fair character as a peaceable well-disposed man. His wife was a few years younger. Owen had been at Walsall during the day and had lost there a considerable sum of money. On his return he found his wife in a state of intoxication drinking in the bar with three women of low character. An altercation ensued, during which he desired his wife to go to bed, which she refused to do. He then struck her and turned her out of the house, telling the people who were present that she began to drink a few weeks before, that she had respectable neighbours, and he was surprised that she harboured such women in his absence; that he worked hard to keep a good home, but if she continued that course he would break the home up. A quarter of an hour afterwards he followed his wife to the house of a neighbour where she had taken shelter, and having obtained admittance commenced beating and kicking her savagely until she dropped insensible. The neighbours sent for the police and a medical man was also promptly in attendance, but the unfortunate woman died in 10 minutes from the effects of a blow under the ear. The husband on hearing of her death expressed deep concern for what he had done, and said it was the first time he had struck her, and he was willing to die with her. The jury at the inquest, after several adjournments, and in spite of the opinion of the coroner that murder had been committed, returned a verdict of Manslaughter, two of the 14 jurymen, however, holding out for a verdict of wilful murder. The magistrates have since taken up the case and have committed the prisoner for trial on the charge of Wilful Murder.

SYMPATHY WITH THE POPE.—A meeting of the Roman Catholic clergy of the archdiocess of Dublin was held on the 3d inst. in the Cathedral in Marlborough Street, under the presidency of Archbishop Cullen, for the purpose of adopting an address to the Pope, "expressive of sympathy at the persecutions he is at present subjected to." Dr. Cullen addressed the meeting at great length, and denounced the "Biblicals and Evangelicals," "the Evangelical Alliance and the Evangelical Lord Shaftesbury," and the agents of the Bible societies who have "spread like locusts over a great part of Italy and are making every exertion to undermine the attachment of the people to the Catholic religion, encouraging committees to collect money for the purpose of arming outlaws, and rebels, and banditti of the worst description, against a peace-loving and humane Sovereign, who has never given to England, or to any of her subjects the slightest ground of complaint, but, on the contrary, has always acted towards them a kind and friendly part. If," he said, "the titles upon which the Pope holds his territory be set at nought, how will the nobility or gentry of this country be able to maintain their rights? Besides, the enemies of the Pope—the agents of Evangelical and Bible societies—are teaching continually that in Italy there is no obligation of obedience to established authorities, that the people at every whim can resist their lawful Sovereign, and they loudly proclaim that treason, treachery, and rebellion are great and noble virtues in the subjects of the Pope. Let their principles be widely spread, indoctrinate the inhabitants of the colonies and dependencies of Great Britain with such dangerous teaching, and will we not fear that treason, and sedition, and rebellion will soon rule throughout the land?" The meeting was afterwards addressed by several clergymen, whose addresses, with that of the chairman, fill 10 columns

"Resolved, 1. That this meeting views with grief and abhorrence the violent and sacrilegious invasion of the territories of the Church which is now being perpetrated, together with the efforts unceasingly made to undermine the legitimate authority of the Sovereign Pontiff: and that we repudiate as false and calumnious the charges so unsparingly uttered by the enemies of the Holy See, and industriously propagated by the anti-Catholic press, against the paternal Government of the Supreme Pontiff. 2 That the temporal Government of the Holy See, most venerable for its antiquity, most legitimate in its origin, and most providentially secured and preserved for so many ages for the benefit of religion, is justly deemed necessary for the freedom of the Church and the independence of the Sovereign Pontiff in its Government. An attack, therefore, upon the temporal dominions of the Church is, not so much a violation, however unjust, of the supreme rights of a most august and venerable temporal ruler, as a sacrilegious invasion of the Church and an injury inflicted on the whole Catholic body throughout the world. 3. That an humble address of condolence and sympathy with our Holy Father the Pope under his present severe trials be prepared in the name of this meeting, and that his Grace the Archbishop be respectfully requested to forward this expression of our sentiments for presentation to his Holiness. 4. That we call upon the Catholic laity of all classes, and especially on our Catholic representatives in Parliament, on gentlemen of station and property, on the members of the Catholic and Liberal press, and all who possess political, social, or literary influence, to unite with us in defence of the unjustly assailed character and prerogatives of their supreme Pastor, and in support of the sacred and inalienable rights of the Church."

LORD RECTORSHIP OF EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.—In addition to the office of Chancellor, who is elected for life by the graduates, the Act which has now come into operation gives to the students the choice of a Lord Rector, who is a member of the University Court, and who also appoints an assessor to sit in that court of seven members. The election takes place to-day, and among the names that have been mentioned, are the Lord Chancellor, Lord John Russell, Mr. Gladstone, and Lord Neaves. It is however settled that the election will be between Mr. Gladstone and Lord Neaves, the committees which had been formed for Lord Campbell and Lord John Russell having united with Mr. Gladstone's committee.

PRINCIPALSHIP OF ST. ANDREWS.—Professor Forbes, who at present fills the chair of Natural Philosophy at the University of Edinburgh, has been appointed to succeed Sir David Brewster as principal of the United College of St. Salvador and St. Leonard, in the University of St. Andrews.

Law.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—The Sale of Commissions.—The Queen v. Marshall and others.—In this case, Thomas Robert Marshall, Edward Henry Mortimer, and Henry Septimus Eicke had been charged with a misdemeanour in receiving money in respect of the sale of a commission in the army, and for keeping open an office for the sale of such commissions, contrary to the provisions of the Act for the further Prevention of the Sale and Brokerage of Offices. The defendants Mortimer and Eicke pleaded "Guilty," but the defendant Marshall pleaded "Not guilty," and was tried in this court before Lord Chief Justice Cockburn on the 27th and 28th June last and found Guilty, judgment being reserved for the full Court. The defendants were now brought up for judgment, and were each sentenced to six months' imprisonment, with fines proportioned to the sums they had received by their practices, Marshall to pay a fine of 200*l.*, Mortimer and Eicke to pay a fine of 100*l.* each, and all three to be imprisoned until the fines be paid.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER: Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford—Rights of Counsel.—The Lord Chief Baron yesterday delivered the judgment of the court in this case, which was argued a few days since by Mr. Kennedy as a motion for a new trial in the well-known cause of Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford, for having, when Sir Frederick Thesiger, as her leading counsel, entered into a compromise in a suit for the possession of the Swinfen estates. The verdict passed at the trial for Lord Chelmsford. The Lord Chief Baron said—We are of opinion that there ought to be a rule on the question of what is the liability of an advocate who undertakes the conduct of a cause. It was laid down broadly by me at the trial that provided an advocate acted bonâ fide, he was entitled to the verdict of a jury if complaint were made against him. We think that on that point, and that point only, there ought to be a rule. Rule nisi accordingly.

Obituary.

THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF HAREWOOD died on Tuesday morning at Goldsborough Hall, near Leeds, after a very short illness. She was the second daughter of the second Marquis of Bath, by the third daughter of the fourth Viscount Torrington, and was born in 1801. Her ladyship married in 1823 the third and late Earl of Harewood, who died in 1857 from the effects of injuries sustained by being thrown from his horse in the hunting field. The marriage of the Earl of Dalkeith, M.P., and Lady Louisa Hamilton, which was fixed to take place on Wednesday, has, in consequence of the death of the Countess, who was sister to the Duchess of Buccleuch, and therefore aunt of the bridegroom elect, been postponed to a more distant day.

VICE-ADMIRAL SIR HENRY LORAINE BAKER, Bart., C.B., died on the 2d inst. at Dunstable House, Richmond, in his 73d year. He was born at Nancy, in Loraine, in 1787, and married in 1820 the only daughter of Mr. William Williams, who for a long succession of years represented Weymouth in the House of Commons. He succeeded his father, the first baronet, in 1826. Having entered the navy in 1797, he became a retired rear-admiral in 1850. He assisted at the storming of Sunnana in St. Domingo in 1827, and was promoted for his conduct at the defence of Anholt in 1811. He served with considerable distinction at Guadaloupe in 1815. He is succeeded in the baronetcy by the Rev. H. Williams Baker, formerly of Trinity College, Cambridge, and now vicar of Monklands, in the diocese of Hereford.

MR. MITCHELL, the originator of the Zoological Gardens in the Regent's Park, and inventor of the aquarium, who was intrusted in Paris with the organisation of the grounds belonging to the Société d'Acclimatation, committed suicide at his residence at Neuilly on the 3d inst.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN.—Nov. 12.

The supply of vegetables is still more abundant than might have been expected, considering how much they suffered from the late frosts. Pine Apples and Grapes have not altered in price since last week, but the latter are getting scarcer. Pears in season consist of Glou Morceau, Beurré Diel, Chaumontel, Winter Nelis, and Crassane. The best dessert Apple now to be obtained is still King of the Pippins. Ribstons are scarce. Oranges may now be had. Good Cobs are realising from 1s. to 1s. 6d. per lb. Chesnuts are plentiful. Cabbages, Savoys, Carrots, and Parsnips may be obtained in quantity. Cauliflowers are scarce. Potatoes realise from 4s. to 8s. per cwt. Mushrooms can still be had. Cucumbers tolerably abundant. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Gardenias, Violets, Mignonette, Chrysanthemums, Heaths, and Roses.

POTATOES.—SOUTHWARK, Monday, Nov. 7.

During the past week, the supplies to this market have still been limited, and prices kept much the same as during the previous week. The following are this day's quotations:—York Regents, per ton, 80s. to 120s.; Lincolnshire do., 70s. to 100s.; Dunbar do., 90s. to 115s.; Perth, Forfar and Fifeshire do., 60s. to 90s.; Kent and Essex do., 90s to 110s.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Nov. 11.

Messrs. Patterson & Smith report that the consequence of the cold fog having been declared at a less value than many expected, namely 2*l.* 17*s.* 2*s.* 10*pd.*, the duty was in some cases obtained from 1s. to 2s. per cwt. since last week. It appears that the gross average per acre is 14 cwt. 3 qrs. 1 lbs., and after deducting 2*l.* per cent. for cloth 13 cwt. 1 qr. 15 lbs., being the largest average per acre since 1808, when the gross average was 15 cwt. 0 qr. 2 lbs., and that on which duty was charged 13 cwt. 2 qrs. 2 lbs.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Nov. 7.

The number of Beasts is considerably less than on Monday last. Trade is brisk at advanced prices. Although we have a much smaller supply of Sheep the demand is so limited that trade is not much improved. A better clearance is effected, but quotations remain unaltered. Calf trade is more cheerful. From Germany and Holland there are 1110 Beasts, 4110 Sheep, and 102 Calves; from Scotland, 200 Beasts; from Ireland, 400; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 100; and 2000 from the northern and midland counties.

THURSDAY, Nov. 11.

The supply of Beasts is not quite so large as of late, still it exceeds the demand. Trade is dull at Monday's quotations. Sheep are rather more plentiful than on Thursday last, and there are very few purchasers. A considerable proportion remains unsold. There is no alteration in the Calf trade. Our foreign supply consists of 370 Beasts, 1530 Sheep, and 130 Calves. The number of Milch Cows is 125.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Nov. 7.

There was a fair supply of English Wheat to this morning's market, which was taken quickly by the millers at the extreme prices of this day se'nnight; foreign was also in improved request, but the sale was not large; we advance our quotations, however, 1s. per qr. on several descriptions. For Barley of all descriptions there is a fair inquiry at last week's rates. Beans are scarce and rather dearer. Peas are unaltered in value. Of Oats the supply is short; trade firm, and in some instances a slight advance is obtained on the prices lately current. In Flour there is no alteration.

FRIDAY, Nov 11.

Heavy showers of rain, accompanied with violent gales of wind from the south west, continued until the 9th inst, since when we have enjoyed fine weather with sharp night frosts. The corn trade during the past week has presented a very healthy appearance, with an upward tendency in the value of all kinds of grain. Flour also in several markets was written 6d. to 1s. per sack dearer. The arrivals from Southern Europe this week are trifling, and consist chiefly of Maize. The sales are to a liberal extent, which may also be said of cargoes still on passage to this kingdom, and include Taganrog Ghirka Wheat at 45s 3d., Odessa Ghirka at 43s. to 41s. 6d. imperfect, and Berdiansk at 47s. 6d., all per 492 lbs.; Galatz Maize at 33s., Ibrail at 32s. 9d., both per 492 lbs. and 31s. per 480 lbs.; Odessa at 32s. 10½d. per 492 lbs.; Odessa Barley at 24s., Danube at 23s. 9d. both per 400 lbs. On passage were sold Odessa Maize at 33s. 9d. condition guaranteed, and at 32s. 3d. not guaranteed, Galatz at 33s. 1½d., and both per 492 lbs. Galatz Barley at 21s. 3d. per qr. imp. nett, without guarantee of condition. The arrivals of grain, English and foreign, this week have been small. To-day's market was very badly attended. The English Wheat fresh up realised prices which on Monday were unobtainable, and the same may be said of the sales effected of foreign, which however were limited, although chiefly confined to speculators. Barley of all descriptions is in full demand at fully Monday's prices. Oats were in fair request at late rates.

THE BRITISH ALMANACK FOR 1860,
Price 1*s*.

THE COMPANION TO THE ALMANACK,
Price 2*s*. 6*d*.

The first publication of the British Almanack, 32 years ago, gave the example of rational Year Books. It has always endeavoured to maintain its pre-eminence by furnishing the most complete and accurate registers in every department of Government and of public business. But a wider object has been steadily pursued in the union of the British Almanack and the Companion. These bound together constitute the most complete and at the same time the cheapest Manual of Current Information, and the most trustworthy record for future reference.

THE BRITISH ALMANACK AND COMPANION,
Together in cloth boards, lettered, price 4*s*.,

Contain, in addition to every matter requisite to an Almanack, a vast body of information in the Companion:

METCALFE, BINGLEY, AND CO.'S New Pattern and Penetrating Tooth Brushes, Penetrating unbleached Hair Brushes, Improved Flesh and Clothes Brushes, and genuine Smyrna Sponges; and every description of Brush, Comb, and Perfumery for the Toilet. The Tooth Brushes search thoroughly between the divisions of the Teeth and clean them most effectually—the hairs never come loose. M., B., and Co. are sole makers of the Oatmeal and Camphor and Orris Root Soaps—sold in Tablets (bearing their names and address) at 6*d*. each; of METCALFE'S celebrated Alkaline Tooth Powder, 2*s*. per box; and of the New Bouquets.—Sole Establishment, 130B and 131, Oxford St. 2d and 3d doors west from Holles St., London, W.

WHITE AND SOUND TEETH are indispensable to personal attraction and to health and longevity by the proper mastication of food. ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, compounded of oriental ingredients, is of inestimable value in improving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in rendering the breath sweet and pure. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, and polishes and preserves the enamel, to which it imparts a pearl-like whiteness. As the most efficient and fragant aromatic purifier of the breath, teeth, and gums ever known, ROWLANDS' Odonto has for a long series of years occupied a distinguished place at the toilets of the sovereigns and the nobility throughout Europe: while the general demand for it at once announces the favour in which it is universally held.—Price, 2*s*. 9*d*. per box. CAUTION.—The words "ROWLANDS' Odonto" are on the Label, and "A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved on the Government stamp affixed on each box.—Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

EPPS'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA.—Produced, in 1839, specially for the use of Homœopathic Patients, to provide them with a beverage highly nutritious and free from those effects of Coffee and Tea which to many persons are pernicious. Rendered attractive to the taste by its delicious aroma and grateful smoothness, it has become adopted by the public generally for breakfast, luncheon, and supper. It is sold by the principal Grocers at 1*s*. 6*d*. per lb., in 1 lb., ½ lb., and ¼ lb. packets. Each packet is labelled, "JAMES EPPS, Homœopathic Chemist, London."

HEALTH WITHOUT PHYSIC.—Nervousness cured by a novel and successful mode of treatment, discovered in America. The most convincing proof of the efficacy of this wonderful remedy, with other details, will be sent to any address on receipt of one stamp.—Address, Mr. HILL, 37, Alfred Place, Bedford Square, London, W.C.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—The first hospital surgeons in Europe have recognised and proclaimed the cooling and healing properties of this extraordinary Ointment, and governments have sanctioned its use in the national hospitals. It penetrates to the sources of inflammation and corruption which underlie the external evidences of disease, and neutralises the malignant humours which feed and exasperate the malady. A most remarkable and happy change is produced on the foulest ulcers after a very few applications of this powerful curative; the surrounding redness disappears, and granules of healthy flesh begin to take the place of the discharged matter; this process goes on more or less rapidly until the orifice is filled up with solid material, and the ulcer is radically cured.

News of the Week.

THE urgent representations which were addressed last week by the French Government to that of Sardinia against the acceptance of the Regency of Central Italy by the PRINCE DE CARIGNAN, have led to results for which the French Government were unprepared, and has added another complication to the Italian question by creating a difference which may hereafter assume a more serious character between France and Sardinia. On Sunday evening, on the arrival of the deputies at Turin, charged by the Assemblies at the Romagna, Tuscany, Modena, and Parma, to offer the Regency to the PRINCE DE CARIGNAN, his Royal Highness told them that "weighty representations, reasons of political propriety, and the approaching Congress deterred him, much to his regret, from responding to their appeal, and accepting the charge offered to him," but at the same time he thought he should do a service by designating the Chevalier BUONCOMPAGNI as the person who ought to be intrusted with the Regency of Central Italy. The deputies readily assented to this transfer of their offer, and the Chevalier BUONCOMPAGNI, on being summoned by the Prince to undertake the Regency, expressed his willingness to accept the honour and responsibility of the office. The States of Parma, Modena, and the Romagna have since tendered their thanks to the Prince DE CARIGNAN, and have informed his Royal Highness that they have accepted with gratitude the regency of the Chevalier BUONCOMPAGNI. On the arrival of this news in Paris the French Government, regarding the transaction as the act of the Sardinian Government, called upon the Cabinet of Turin to annul the appointment of M. BUONCOMPAGNI, inasmuch as it prejudged the questions about to be brought before the Congress and encroached upon the powers of that Assembly. The latest news from Turin informs us that the departure of Chevalier BUONCOMPAGNI has been postponed, and that General GARIBALDI has resigned his office as one of the Generals of the army of Central Italy, and is about to retire to the island of Sardinia. Accounts from Bologna state that Signor Farini, who holds the chief power in the Romagna until the arrival of the Regent, has signalised the approaching close of his dictatorship by summarily abolishing the Inquisition as "incompatible with modern civilisation," and by issuing a decree by which the Church and religious establishments of all kinds are incapacitated from acquiring real property either by gift or legacy without a previous authorisation by a sovereign rescript to that effect.

A circular has been addressed by the French Government to the Powers which signed the Treaty of Vienna and to the three principal Powers of Italy, inviting them to send Plenipotentiaries to the Congress. If these invitations be accepted the Powers represented at the Congress will be France, Great Britain, Austria, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Portugal, Sweden, Sardinia, Rome, and Naples.

THE COURT.—The Queen, Prince Consort, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. On Friday morning the Queen, with Princess Frederick William, Princess Alice, and Princess Helena, rode in the riding-house. The Prince Consort went out shooting, accompanied by Prince Frederick William, the Duke of Cambridge, and Count Bernstorff. The Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty. Mirza Ali Khan, the Persian Ambassador, was presented to the Queen at an audience by Lord John Russell, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and presented his credentials as Minister from the Shah of Persia. The Duke of Cambridge, the Prussian Minister and Countess Bernstorff, and Lord and Lady Palmerston, left the castle. In the evening after dinner the Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince and Princess Frederick William and Princess Alice, went to Frogmore and visited the Duchess of Kent. On Saturday morning the Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince and Princess Frederick William, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, and Prince Arthur, went to Portsmouth by a special train, and were present at the launch of the Victoria line-of-battle ship. The Royal party returned to Windsor Castle shortly before 5 o'clock. In the evening Lord John Russell, Lord and Lady Sydney, Sir George and Lady Grey, and Colonel F. Seymour, arrived on a visit. On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince Consort, Prince and Princess Frederick William, the Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa, and Prince Arthur, and the visitors at the castle, attended Divine service in the private chapel; the Rev. Charles Kingsley preached the sermon. On Monday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Frederick William, drove out in an open carriage and four. The Prince Consort, with Prince Frederick William and Prince Leiningen, went out shooting. Lord John Russell, Lord and Lady Sydney, Sir George and Lady Grey, and Colonel F. Seymour, C.B., left the castle. The Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, the Duchess of Wellington, the Portuguese Minister, the Marquis and Marchioness of Ailesbury, the Earl and Countess Spencer, Count Brandenburg, and Major-General Wylde arrived on a visit. On Tuesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Frederick William, the Princess Alice, and Princess Mary of Cambridge, walked in the Home Park, and visited the Duchess of Kent at Frogmore. The Prince Consort went out shooting, accompanied by Prince Frederick William, the Prince of Leiningen, the Marquis of Ailesbury, and Earl Spencer. The Hereditary Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen arrived on a visit to her Majesty. On Wednesday morning the Queen, with Princess Frederick William, walked in the grounds of the castle. The Prince Consort went out shooting, accompanied by Prince Frederick William, the Hereditary Prince of Hohenzollern, and the Prince of Leiningen. The Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, the Duchess of Wellington, the Portuguese Minister, the Marquis and Marchioness of Ailesbury, Earl and Countess Spencer, and Major-General Wylde left the castle. The Marquis and Marchioness of Abercorn, the Earl of St. Germans, the Earl and Countess of Malmesbury, the Countess Blucher, Count Gustave Blucher, the Right Hon. Sidney and Mrs. Herbert, and Colonel the Hon. A. and Mrs. Gordon arrived on a visit. On Thursday morning the Queen, with Princess Frederick William and Princess Alice, walked in the Home Park, and visited the Duchess of Kent at Frogmore. The Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince Frederick William, came to town by a special train of the Great Western Railway. The Prince Consort drove to Buckingham Palace and presided at a meeting of the British Association. Prince Frederick William visited the Museum at South Kensington, and afterwards joined his Royal Highness at Paddington and returned with him to Windsor. The Duchess of Kent and the Prince and Princess of Leiningen visited her Majesty. The Hereditary Prince of Hohenzollern Sigmaringen took leave of her Majesty and left the castle.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Thursday.

KNIGHTHOOD. — The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom to Bryan Edwards, Esq., Chief Justice of Jamaica.

ROYAL NAVAL VOLUNTEERS.—Her Majesty's Government have given notice that, under the Act of Parliament of last session, the enrolment of the reserve force of 30,000 seamen under the name of the Royal Naval Volunteers will commence on the 1st of January next. The following is an abstract of the conditions on which the enrolment will take place:—

Every volunteer must be a British subject, and under 35 years of age. He must also have been at least five years at sea within the 10 years previous, and he must have served at least one of those five years as an able seaman. He must further produce certificates of good character, and be free from any bodily infirmity. The pay is to be 6*l.* a year, payable quarterly; and a pension of 12*l.* a year whenever he becomes incapacitated from earning a livelihood; or at 60 years of age, if not previously incapacitated. In consideration of these allowances he must attend drill for 28 days in each year, the place of drill being either some ship of war, or some battery on shore. In places where the numbers of volunteers are sufficient to admit of it, provision is to be made for drilling them in the port where they reside, and in such places the volunteer will only be required to attend in the daytime, and will be allowed to return to his home at night. In cases where he has to leave home to attend drill his travelling and other expenses are to be paid. And, in order to ensure at all times a permanent force of naval volunteers within the Kingdom he must not, without special permission, proceed upon any voyage that will occupy more than six months. If called out for actual service, he will be provided with the same necessaries, receive the same pay and allowances, and enjoy the same chances of promotion and prize-money, as a continuous service seaman of the fleet; he will be equally eligible to the Coastguard and Greenwich Hospital, and, in case of wounds or injury, be entitled to the same pension as the regular seaman of his own rating. At the expiration of every five years he may, if not actually called out at the time, retire from the reserve; or he may do so, subject to the same condition, at any time by paying back his retainers. If, however, he should rise in his profession to be master or mate, and obtain employment in that capacity, he will be allowed to quit without any repayment. In time of war the volunteers may be called into active service by royal proclamation; but it is expressly stated, that it is intended to exercise this power only in case of an emergency arising which should require a sudden increase in the naval forces of the country.

FLOGGING IN THE ARMY.—His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief has decided upon establishing a classification of soldiers, for the purpose of maintaing a distinction between the classes as regards liability to corporal punishment. The following are the leading features of this arrangement:—

All men on entering the army will be placed in the first class, and will not, except for aggravated mutinous conduct during time of war, be liable to corporal punishment. They will continue in the first class unless they should incur degradation into the second class by the commission of crime, and for this purpose his Royal Highness has classified the offences committed by soldiers under two distinct heads, the effect of which will be the virtual abolition of corporal punishment for all soldiers except those who have degraded themselves by their bad conduct. His Royal Highness has further determined that after a soldier has been disrated from the first to the second class, a year's uninterrupted good conduct shall restore him to the first class as showing a desire for reformation and amendment. In making known these regulations the Commander-in-Chief expresses his hope that they "will give confidence to the good soldier by securing to him, on entering her Majesty's service, an immunity from degrading punishment, which immunity it will be in his power to preserve to the day when his engagement shall expire."

VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—An influential meeting was held at the Thatched House Tavern on Wednesday, Lord Elcho in the chair, at which it was resolved to establish a National Association for the encouragement of volunteer rifle corps and the promotion of rifle shooting throughout Great Britain, by offering prizes for competition among riflemen according to the rules of the School of Musketry at Hythe, as well as prizes for the improvement of fire-arms, sighting of guns, or anything relating to the science of rifle shooting. The meeting was addressed by Earl Spencer, Lord Radstock, General Hay, Admiral Best, the Earl of Lichfield, Sir H. De Vœux, Colonel Charteris, Capt. Gladstone, and other gentlemen, and it was intimated by Lord Spencer that the Prince Consort had promised to support the movement in any way, and that the Queen and his Royal Highness would probably offer prizes for competition if the association should prosper. It was resolved that Mr. Sidney Herbert, the Minister of War, should be the first president, and that Lord Ashburton, Lord Eversley, and General Peel should be the trustees of the Society. Twelve noblemen and gentlemen were elected vice-presidents, with a council of 15, and a working committee of 7, Mr. George Russell acting as honorary secretary. On the same evening General Hay, of the Hythe School of Musketry, inspected about 300 effective men belonging to the Scottish Volunteers, under the command of Lord Elcho, M.P., and to the Queen's Volunteers, of which Earl Grosvenor, M.P., is Colonel, in Westminster Hall. At the close of the inspection General Hay expressed his admiration at the perfect manner in which they had gone through their drill, and took occasion to recommend that the volunteer corps generally should adopt a uniform which would render them invisible in point of colour, and should take every means of promoting their efficiency by drill and practice, instead of allowing them to degenerate into "an affair of brass bands and luncheons." He said that he had identified himself with the movement, and he felt it must succeed; but he had only identified himself with it on one condition, and that was, that it was to be thoroughly effective.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The French Government on Tuesday addressed a circular to all the Powers which signed the Final Act of the Treaty of Vienna and to the three principal Powers of Italy, inviting them to send Plenipotentiaries to the Congress. The measures adopted by the States of Central Italy and subsequently by the Royal family of Sardinia in reference to the Regency have given great dissatisfaction to the French Government, which has made known its disapproval to the Sardinian Cabinet, and to all the other Governments of Italy. The Moniteur of Saturday in noticing the proceedings of the different Assemblies in offering the Regency to the Prince de Carignan, says :—

"This resolution is to be regretted, especially under the present circumstances of the approaching assembling of an European Congress—called to deliberate on the affairs of Italy—because it tends to prejudge questions which must there be settled."

The Constitutionnel of Tuesday in an article signed by its chief editor says :—

"The acceptance of the Regency by the Prince de Carignan would have caused the open intervention of Sardinia in the affairs of Central Italy, and then Sardinia could not have prevented, on the other hand, the entry of Neapolitan troops into the Roman territory."

A semi-official organ of Wednesday contains the following :—

"The message received from Turin stating that the Prince de Carignan did not confine himself to the refusal of the Regency, but undertook to offer a substitute in the person of M. Buoncompagni, has produced a very bad impression here. It was stated that the Government of Sardinia had not followed the wise counsels offered by the Government of France, as expressed in the letter of the Emperor to the King. It is questioned by what right Sardinia undertakes to prejudge the decisions of the Congress in naming a Regent for Central Italy, and thus by his nomination assuming that the Duchies were already annexed to Sardinia. This proceeding is contrary to all custom, and not in accordance with the rights of the people."

The Constitutionnel of Thursday, in an article signed by its secretary, says :—

"The French Government, true to the principles of its policy, has recommended the Cabinet of Turin to annul the appointment of the Regency which the Government of the King of Sardinia has delegated to Chevalier Buoncompagni, as such appointment prejudged the questions brought before, and encroach upon the competency of, the Congress. This advice must be considered as a proof of the solicitude of the Emperor for the Italian cause; which cause he made to triumph on the field of battle, and the final settlement of which awaits to-day only the decision of Europe."

The Moniteur of yesterday contains a note of which the following is an abstract :—

"Several journals, from improper motives, enumerate daily the pastoral circulars of the Bishops, in order to represent the French Episcopate as a body filled with mistrust towards the Government. These papers endeavour to give publicity to all those circulars, notwithstanding they express entire confidence in the intentions of the Emperor towards his Holiness the Pope."

General Montauban has been named General-in-Chief of the French expeditionary force to China. It is understood to be a most unpopular nomination in the army. The General appeared as a witness at the celebrated Doineau trial. The Senators Rouland, General Lelièvre, Saulcy, the Archbishops of Bruges and Toulouse, and the Bishops of Nancy and Limoges, took the oaths of allegiance to the Emperor on Sunday last at Compiègne. The Marquis de Moustier, French Ambassador at Berlin, has been appointed Ambassador to the Imperial Court at Vienna in the room of M. de Bourqueney, who will retire from public life. M. de Menneval also retires from diplomacy, and intends to enter a monastery. The trial of Mademoiselle Léonie Cherean, who was charged with stealing the infant child of Judge Hua, has terminated in a verdict of Not Guilty, the jury having been induced by her counsel to believe that she was unconscious of right and wrong, and ought to be acquitted on the ground of irresistible impulse. To produce this effect he read a pathetic and deeply sentimental letter which had, he said, been written by her to her lover, but the Charivari prints in parallel columns this letter and the exact original copied out of "La Dame aux Camelias," Act iii., Scene 4, not a word being changed save a "hackney coach" substituted for a "Seine wherry."

SPAIN AND MOROCCO. — Marshal O'Donnell has returned to Cadiz, after having effected a survey of the coasts of Africa. The military operations will immediately begin. Generals Ros de Olano, Zabala, Prim, and Echague, who hold commands in the expedition, are now at Cadiz. The grandees have nominated a deputation charged to offer the Queen a pecuniary donation towards the expenses of the war. The King has offered to serve in the expedition if necessary; the Queen has presented to Marshal O'Donnell, to be worn constantly round his neck, a chain, to which, with her own hand, she has attached some medals supposed to possess miraculous virtue; and the Duke de Montpensier has paid the expense of 24 rifled cannon prepared at the foundry of Seville for the purposes of the expedition. The latest news which has reached Madrid from Tangiers states that the Moors, with a force of 1000 men, have attacked Ceuta, and that the besieged were preparing to make a sortie to repulse them. The Christian population of the seaports have been exposed to great danger from the fanaticism of the Moors, and nothing but the presence of her Majesty's ships Doris and Coquette, and the tact and good management of Captains Heathcote and Foley, could have saved the Christians at Mogador and Taffi from being massacred. The number brought off from both places was 350 men, women, and children.

SWITZERLAND.—M. Armand, Secretary to the French Plenipotentiary at Zurich, will leave for Zurich to-day (Saturday) with the ratifications of the Treaty of Peace. The exchange of the ratifications is definitely fixed for the 21st inst.

FRANKFORT.—At the sitting of the Federal Diet on Saturday the affair of the constitution of Hesse Cassel was referred to a committee. Prussia, Thuringia, Oldenburg, and the Hanseatic Towns voted for the re-establishment of the constitution of 1831; the representatives of Austria and her allies voted in favour of the constitution of 1852, and others abstained altogether from voting. The committee has unanimously adopted the proposal concerning the re-organisation of the Federal military constitution, and has sent its report to the special military committee.

PRUSSIA.—The Berlin journals report a great improvement in the condition of the King, and state that his Majesty continues to take rather long walks and rides in the neighbourhood of Potsdam, and that his powers of observation are also much improved. On the occasion of the Schiller Festival the Prince Regent signed a decree founding a triennial prize of 1000 dollars in gold, and a gold medal of the value of 100 dollars for the best work of German dramatic poetry. The following is the text of the reply of the Prussian Gazette to certain allegations of the Augsburg Gazette respecting the recent interview between the Emperor of Russia and the Prince Regent of Prussia :—

"Despite our recent denials, despite our formal assurances that the relations between Prussia and England could not and have not suffered in consequence of the meeting at Breslau, the Augsburg Gazette continues to endeavour to make its readers believe that that meeting was directed against England; that Prussia, at the instigation of France and of Russia, had entered into the views of those Powers to isolate England, and had taken the engagement, in the event of a war between France and England, to maintain absolute neutrality. The Augsburg Gazette finds support for its absurd insinuations in the suppositions and imaginations of the opposition journals in Prussia, who have a natural interest in distorting every act of the Government so as to attack it. The Augsburg Gazette, by adopting such a line of conduct, places itself on the same footing as those few French journals which turn to account the language of the opposition journals in Prussia, and state as facts what are but malicious falsehoods. Such tactics may be clever, but are scarcely in keeping with the sentiments of German patriotism."

AUSTRIA.—An Imperial autograph letter has been addressed to the Minister of Finance, Baron von Bruck, expressing the desire of the Emperor to make good the deficit in the budget of the year 1860 to 1861. In order to carry out the desire of the Emperor a committee will be appointed, whose work is to be terminated at the end of March, and the result submitted to the Council of the Empire. In accordance with the articles 13 and 16 of the decree dated the 13th April, 1851, the number of members of the Council of the Empire will temporarily be increased for the discussion of this subject. Decrees will shortly be issued granting to the Jews additional political and social privileges. During the recent Schiller Festival at Vienna several popular demonstrations of a liberal character took place.

THE ADRIATIC. — The Austrian Lloyd's steamer Bombay, on her voyage from Constantinople, ran ashore on the 9th inst. near the island of Unie, in the Bay of Quarnerio, in Austrian Illyria. The passengers, specie, and letters were all saved, and with the assistance of several steamers from Trieste the vessel has been floated off.

ITALY.—Accounts from Turin state that the recent letter of the Emperor of the French to the King of Sardinia, respecting the Regency of the Prince de Carignan, intimated that if the King should allow himself to be drawn into such an offer he could no longer rely on the concurrence of France, and would create a situation compromising at once his own kingdom and the future of Italy. The Patrie says that the King of Sardinia replied to this letter, expressing confidence in the sympathies of the Emperor in favour of the Italian cause, and declaring that the King will leave to the decision of the Congress all that relates to the reorganisation of Italy. The Prince de Carignan gave an audience on Sunday evening, at 9 o'clock, to the Chevalier Minghotti and the Chevalier Peruzzi, who had arrived at Turin to request the Prince to accept the Regency conferred upon him by the National Assemblies of Parma, Modena, the Romagna, and Tuscany. The Prince in his reply said :—

"I am deeply moved by your offer, and tender my thanks to the Assemblies and the people of Central Italy who have given me so great a proof of their confidence. I believe that in making this offer you are influenced less by my personal merits than by your devotedness towards the King and by your feelings, which are not only liberal and national, but also those of order and respect for monarchical institutions. Weighty representations, reasons of political propriety, and the approaching Congress, deter me, much to my regret, from responding to your appeal, and accepting the charge offered to me. This forbearance on my part, and the sacrifice I am thus making will prove more useful to the interests of our common country than if I had acted otherwise. Nevertheless, I think I may do an act of service in designating the Chevalier Buoncompagni as the person who ought to be intrusted with the Regency of Central Italy. Return my thanks to the people you represent, tell them that their perseverance and their general conduct deserve the sympathies of Europe; tell them to reckon always on the King, who will support their wishes, and who will never abandon those who intrust their destinies to his loyalty."
